"Secondly.—That you on or about the 17th day of June 1923 at Faridpur, P. S. Kotwali, defamed the complainant by making and publishing in your speech at a public meeting the following imputation concerning the Police force employed at Char Maniar of which the complainant is a member and the principal officer in charge of the investigation to the effect that the Police force employed at Char Maniar had bitten off the nipple of the breast of women and had bitten the cheek of a woman nine months' pregnant intending to harm and knowing and having reason to believe that such imputation will harm the reputation of the complainant and the Police employed at Char Maniar, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 500, Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance."

The complainant is Rasiduddin Khan, a Sub-Inspector of Police. On the night of the 16th May 1923, a dacoity was committed in the house of one Adu Molla in village Char Maniar. In consequence of information received a body of Police under another Sub-Inspector Badaruddin Ahmed arrived there while the dacoity was going on. For some reason that has not been made clear the Sub-Inspector Badaruddin and his party were attacked and kept confined by the villagers of Char Maniar. Rasiduddin Khan was the Sub-Inspector in charge of Sadarpur Police Station in whose jurisdiction Char Maniar is situated. As such he investigated both the case of dacoity and the case of assault on the Police mentioned above. The petitioner who is a member of the District Congress Committee made several speeches and the charges set out above relate to statements he is alleged to have made in two of those speeches.

A great deal of time has been wasted in the lower Courts owing to their having investigated issues that did not arise on the charges framed and the defence set up by the petitioner. The charges though not well worded have evidently been framed on the case for the prosecution that the complainant is one of an association of persons, the Police force employed at Char Maniar, and that imputations have been made against this collection of persons as such, so as to amount to defamation as defined in s. 499, Indian Penal Code, with special reference to Exp. 2 of that section. The main defence of the petitioner is a denial that he defamed the complainant. Though he does not deny having made imputations against some members of the Police force employed at Char Maniar he contends that these imputations are not directed against the whole body of members of that force and were not defamatory of the complainant either individually or as a member of that body. His case is that so far as he made general imputations they were criticisms of the acts of the Government and so far as he made imputations of definite acts, they were against Bengali constables only and not against the whole Police force at Char Maniar. He has attempted to justify the accusations of the constables but no attempt has been made to justify any imputation against the complainant. Consequently it is irrelevant whether the imputations against the constables were true or were made in good faith and it is unnecessary to consider the evidence relating to these issues.

As regards the charges on which the petitioner has been convicted the first contains a definite allegation that the complainant was defamed by an imputation concerning the Police force employed at Char Maniar, of which he was a member. The words set out in the charge are not mere abuse and are clearly defamatory. The only defence worthy of serious consideration that is made to this charge is a denial that such words were used. The principal witness as to the words used in the speech delivered at Berhamganj was Ansar Ali (P. W. No. 6), a Sub-Inspector who took written notes of the speech in long hand Bengali. For the petitioner, it is urged that the defamatory words set out in the charge are not found in these written notes (Ex. 7) and, therefore, the charge must fail. But the written notes do not purport to be a complete report of the speech. I see no reason why this witness with the assistance of these notes should not be able to remember that these words were used. Further the charge is not that the petitioner used these actual words but that he used words to this effect. That he used words imputing bestial conduct to the Police force engaged at Char Maniar appears not only in the written notes but is also supported by the evidence of Mahabat-ulla, an Assistant Sub-Inspector of Police (P. W. No. 7), and three non-official witnesses (P. Ws. Nos. 20, 21 & 22). From their evidence it is clear that these imputations were made against that Police force as a whole and not against the Bengali constables only. This evidence is un-rebutted and justifies the findings of the lower Courts, that the first charge has been established.

In my opinion the conviction on the second charge cannot be upheld. Though the learned Sessions Judge finds that in the speech delivered at Faridpur, the whole Police force at Char Maniar were attacked by the petitioner, this is not sufficient to support a conviction on this charge as framed. The charge does not relate to the whole speech but to portions alleging certain definite acts of brutality. It is not suggested that the complainant personally was accused of these acts. The imputation was not against a collection of persons as such but against some individual members of that collection of persons. To accuse the Police force of biting off a nipple of a woman or biting a woman's cheek is absurd on the face of it and no such absurdity is to be found in the report of this speech, Ex. 12, the accuracy of which is not seriously disputed. The prosecution might have been able to make out a case of defamation by innuendo on the allegation that the speech implied that the officer-in-charge of the investigation was responsible for the acts of his subordinates but the charge as framed does not require the petitioner to meet such a case.

It was not argued before us that the sentence was too severe.

I would, therefore, make this Rule absolute to this extent and reverse the finding and sentence convicting the petitioner on the second charge, I would not interfere with the conviction and sentence on the first charge.

I regret that I feel compelled to differ from my learned brother. As this difference will necessitate a reference to a third Judge I think it is necessary to express my opinion shortly on some other points though I have held them to be irrelevant to the issues that really arise in the case.

The plea of veritas entirely fails. In both the judgments of the lower Courts good reasons are given for holding that the evidence to support the charges of misconduct against the constables is totally false. No attempt was made at the hearing of this Rule to meet the arguments in these judgments on which these findings were based. I can attach no weight to the argument that so many women could not have made such complaints unless there were some grounds for them. It amounts to no more than saying that if enough mud is thrown some will stick. I am unable to accept the plea that these accusations were made in good faith. It is impossible that a man of the petitioner's intelligence and education could have believed the stories that were told to him. I have no doubt that he made these false imputations not believing them to be true but out of hatred of the British Government.

The learned Sessions Judge has written in his judgment that though he is inclined to hold that there was some kind of rough handling of Gaizulla and also that there might have been some rough handling, such as, the catching hold of women's hand, pulling at their cloth etc., there is no credible evidence to support a judicial finding of these facts. The petitioner may have believed that there was a substratum of truth in the stories that were told to him but even so it was not for the public good to make these false charges. On the contrary by supporting grossly false exaggerations he made it more difficult for the truth to be ascertained and the offenders, if any, to be punished.

As my learned brother and myself are divided in opinion, the case with our opinions thereon will be submitted to the Chief Justice in order that they may be laid before another Judge of the Court under s. 429 read with s. 439 of the Cr. P. C.

Ghose, J.—I regret I have not been able to agree with my learned brother on all the questions and as I have come to different conclusion I give my reasons in some detail.

This Rule was obtained by the petitioner against the conviction and sentence under two charges of defamation under s. 500, Indian Penal Code, by the Sessions Judge on appeal from a conviction by the Trial Court. The Sessions Judge acquitted him of one of the three charges on which he was originally convicted and reduced the sentence from one year's to six months' simple imprisonment on each charge, the sentences to run concurrently. The facts are that there was a dacoity in the house of one Adiladdi or Adu Mollah of village Char Maniar on the 16th of May 1923. When the dacoity was going on six constables, under two Sub-Inspectors, arrived at the place and they entered the house and succeeded in capturing 3 of the dacoits. The villagers turned out and apparently mistaking the Policemen for dacoits assaulted them and kept them tied up in the house of Adu Mollah. Information reached the Sadarpur thana, within the jurisdiction of which Char Maniar is situated, next morning, of the dacoity as also of the Policemen having been tied up, and Policemen in two batches arrived at the village. The first batch of Policemen released the men who had been kept tied up the previous night. The complainant Sub-Inspector Rasiduddin arrived at the village with the 2nd batch of men on the 17th May in the afternoon. Other Police Officers also came from other thanas. On the arrival of the Police at the village almost all the male population fled away leaving the women behind them. On the 18th May house to house search was made in the village by the Police and the Police remained there for several days making enquiries in both the cases, of assault on the Police and of dacoity. The petitioner heard stories of oppressive acts committed by the Police in the village, came there early in June with some other persons, saw many of the women who were alleged to have been maltreated and other persons and took down notes of what he had been told. Leaving the village with the information he had obtained he delivered three speeches in three different places in which he is alleged to have made defamatory statements with regard to the complainant. We are not now concerned with the third charge of which the petitioner has been acquitted by the learned Sessions Judge. We have to deal with the first two charges only. I should first dispose of two questions of a preliminary nature. It was urged that the complaint is not sustainable because it was made at the instance and under the orders of the superior officer of the complainant and not of his own motion, I do not think there is any substance in this contention. If the complainant has been defamed it is of no consequence that he complained under the orders of his superior officer in order to clear his character, although if left to himself he might not have taken the trouble of prosecuting the offender. The second question relates to the rejection of the notes taken by the petitioner of the statements made by the villagers which he sought to prove in the Trial Court. The Sessions Judge on appeal admitted the notes of the statements of those persons only who were called as witnesses at the trial presumably as corroborative of their evidence but rejected the rest. In my opinion the petitioner was entitled to prove the notes as evidence of his good faith and they were relevant on the question although the persons who made the statements were not examined. I hold that the notes were wrongly rejected, but I do not think there should be an order for re-trial on that ground as there are sufficient materials on the record for deciding the question.

The charges we have to deal with are these:—

“Firstly, that you, etc., etc., defamed the complainant by making and publishing the following imputations in your speech at a public meeting concerning the Police force employed at Char Maniar, of which the complainant was a member and the principal officer . . . to the effect that not to speak of the Police only but the British Government themselves and the superior officers including from the District Magistrate down to the daroga and chowkidars were all beasts and pigs in their conduct, intending to harm, etc., etc.

Secondly, that you, etc., etc., defamed the complainant by making . . . the following imputation . . . to the effect that the Police force employed at Char Maniar had bitten off the nipple of the breast of a woman and had bitten the cheek of a woman, etc."

I shall now deal with the questions raised as applicable only to the first charge. It is urged that the words are merely abusive and not defamatory. General words of abuse may not be defamatory but I cannot hold that to speak of a person that he is a beast and a pig in his conduct is not defamatory. The next plea is that the petitioner did not utter the words set out in the charge but only spoke about the beastly oppression by the constables. There cannot be any doubt that the words complained of as constituting the offence must be set out in the charge and proved before the accused can be convicted. When there is a denial the evidence in support of the prosecution must be scrutinized. The notes of the speech were taken in long hand by P. W. No. 6 who says the accused spoke fluently and he could not take down all that the accused said. In his notes, Ex. 7, the following words occur: "What oppression has been committed on women of 14 to 30 years, for which it is the duty of every one of us to extirpate the Police like dogs, hogs and (illegible). Why the Police only, the barbarous British Government itself from the highest officer the District Magistrate down to the daroga, daffadar and chowkidar all are beasts (illegible)." These words are different from those set out in the charge. In his deposition the witness gives the words in Bengali which may be translated thus, "We should try to extirpate the Police with our heart's blood like despicable dogs, pigs and goats. Why the Police only the daroga, Magistrate, daffadar, chowkidar all behave like beasts and pigs." These also are not the same words as in the charge. The other witnesses who speak about the words uttered by the petitioner are P. W. No. 7, P. W. No. 20, P. W. No. 21 and P. W. No. 22. I need not set out in detail what each witness says. It is sufficient to say that the words ascribed to the accused are differently stated by each witness and the petition of complaint also puts them differently. In this state of the evidence I cannot hold that it has been proved that the accused spoke the words stated in the charge, and it would not be correct to say that the words given in the different versions have the same meaning. When spoken words are alleged to have constituted the offence, a very slight alteration of a word may give quite different meaning to them. From the petition of complaint and also the evidence of P. W. No. 6, it is clear that a distinction is made between the "Police" and the superior officers, as daroga and the daffadar as well as chowkidar. This supports to some extent the plea of the accused that what he said was in relation to the constables and not with reference to the superior officers. In my judgment the evidence does not substantiate this charge and it must, therefore, fail on that ground. The next point urged is that the words the accused is charged with are too general and cannot be defamatory of an individual such as the complainant. The case of Eastwood v. Holmes (1) is cited in support, where it was observed by Willes, J., that if a person wrote all lawyers were thieves, no particular lawyer could sue him for libel. It seems to me that the words in the charge "the British Government themselves, and the superior officers including from the District Magistrate down to the daroga, and chowkidars were all beasts, etc." are too wide to admit of the construction that any particular Police Officer was defamed.

The other questions raised apply equally to both the charges. The first question is whether the complainant was the person defamed or in other words, whether he is a "person aggrieved" by the offence as contemplated under s. 198 of the Cr. P. C., so as to entitle him to maintain the prosecution. This is what is stated in the petition of complaint: "That it appears, therefore, that in making the above charges Dr. Pratap Chandra Guha Roy has intended to harm the reputation of the Police and other high officials of the British Government and the Government themselves. . . . The allegations are being announced throughout the district and it is, therefore, necessary that their falsity should be proved in the most effective manner, viz., by trial in Court of law, etc." The learned Standing Counsel relies on Expl. 2 of s. 499, Indian Penal Code, as giving the complainant the right to maintain the prosecution. That explanation runs as follows:—"It may amount to defamation to make an imputation concerning a company or an association or collection of persons as such." The contention seems to be that in this case there was defamation of the Police force, i.e., a "collection of persons as such." As far as I am aware those words in the Explanation have not been judicially dealt with in any reported case. In my opinion those words mean that a collection of persons as such may be collectively defamed in the same manner as a "company." The general principles on which a company may be said to have been defamed would, therefore, apply equally to the case where it is alleged that a "collection of persons as such" has been defamed. Those general principles were formulated by Chief Baron Pollock in Metropolitan Saloon Omnibus Co. v. Hawkins (2), where he said: "It (a corporation) could not sue in respect of an imputation of murder, or incest, or adultery, because it could not commit those crimes. Nor could it sue in respect of a charge of corruption, for a corporation cannot be guilty of corruption, although the individuals composing it may." This was adopted in Mayor of Manchester v. Williams (3), where it was laid down that a corporation may sue for a libel affecting property, not for one affecting personal reputation. Similarly, Lopez, L. J., said in South Hetton Coal Co. v. North Eastern News Association (4): "A corporation or company could not sue in respect of a charge of murder, or incest, or adultery because it could not commit these crimes. Nor could it sue in respect of a charge of corruption or of an assault, because a corporation can not be guilty of corruption or of an assault although the individuals composing it may be." These observations are quite apposite to the question before us and in my opinion the Police force as such cannot complain of any imputation as regards its personal reputation because it cannot be guilty of beastly conduct nor can the collective body be guilty of the offence of biting off the nipple of the breast of a woman or of hitting the cheek of a woman. The matter may be tested in another way. Suppose somebody laid a complaint before a Magistrate in terms of the words of the charges in this case would any Magistrate issue process against the Police force as such or any member of the Police force I am sure no Magistrate would. In my judgment, therefore, the charges fail on the ground that they refer to the personal conduct only of a collection of persons as such.

I shall next deal with the case of R. v. Osborn (5) on which the learned Standing Counsel relied strongly. I take the report of the case from 2 Swanston as it is fuller than the report in Barnardiston. The report runs as follows:—"The paper on which the information was prayed contained an account of a murder committed on a Jewish woman and child by certain Jews lately arrived from Portugal and living near Broad Street because the child was begotten by a Christian and the affidavits set forth that several persons mentioned therein who were recently arrived from Portugal and lived in Broad Street were attacked by multitudes in several parts of the city, barbarously treated and threatened with death in case they were found abroad any more. Strange showed cause against the information, and that it could not be granted as for a libel because it not appearing who the persons reflected upon are, no judgment can be given for the King, as in R. v. Orme (6).

"Sed per cur. Admitting an information for a libel may be improper, yet the publication for this paper is deservedly punishable in an information for a misdemeanour and that of the highest kind, such sort of advertisements necessarily tending to raise tumults and disorders among the people, and inflame them with an universal spirit of barbarity against a whole body of men as if guilty of crimes scarce practicable and totally incredible." It seems to me the Court held in that case an information for a libel was improper but it was granted for some other misdemeanour as tending to raise tumults etc. I do not think this case helps the prosecution. Nor does the case of R. v. Williams (7) as in that case the imputation was against all the clergy in Durham and the libel was on every one of them. There is no imputation like that

In the present case. I may also refer to the Nil Darpan case tried by the Supreme Court of Calcutta cited in Mayne's Criminal Law of India. There the words complained of were "I present the indigo planters, mirrors to the indigo planters' hands..... Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J. is reported to have observed on the words used, "This certainly appears to me to represent to the indigo planters that if they look into this paper they would see a true representation each of himself." The true rule appears to be that if a person complains that he has been defamed as a member of a class he must satisfy the Court that the imputation is against him personally and he is the person aimed at before he can maintain a prosecution for defamation. It is argued on behalf of the Crown that the question whether the words are defamatory or not is a question of construction. This proposition is only partly true. In England the question as to how the words were understood by those to whom they were addressed is a question for the Jury if the Judge holds that there is a prima facie case. Here when the case is not tried with the aid of a Jury, the question must be decided by the Judge as a question of fact and in deciding this question the following principle should be borne in mind "All circumstances which were apparent to the by-standers at the time the words were uttered should be put in evidence so as to place the Jury as much as possible in the position of such by standers and then it is for the Jury to say what meaning such words would fairly have conveyed to their minds." Odgers on Libel and Slander, 5th Ed., p. 111. We should not construe the words as we would a document of title according to rule of construction of deeds, and specially when the words spoken have not been proved with certainty; and we have to decide not merely whether the words are defamatory but also whether the words refer to the complainant. Applying these principles and taking all circumstances in consideration I am of opinion that the words complained of in the charges have not been proved to have been used with reference to each and every member of the Police force and the complainant cannot, therefore, be said to be a person aggrieved by the offence complained of. In my opinion the charges are not sustainable against the petitioner at the instance of the complainant.

In my opinion this is sufficient to dispose of the Rule but as the matter must be placed before another Judge on account of our difference of opinion I must record my judgment as to whether the case falls under any of the Exceptions to s. 499, Indian Penal Code, assuming that the complaint is otherwise sustainable. As regards the first Exception i. e., the plea of truth I agree with the learned Sessions Judge where he says that where the defamation imputes a crime to the complainant and the accused pleads justification there must be the same strictness of proof as on a trial for such crime. But in this case no crime was imputed to the complainant himself and the persons against whom the allegations were made were not before the Court. In this case no Court would be justified in pronouncing an opinion that the allegation against persons not before it were true without giving an opportunity to those persons to be heard. I pointed this out to the learned Counsel for the petitioner when he was submitting that the allegations were true. All that the accused could establish in the present case was that there was prima facie evidence as to the truth of the allegation and which the accused might reasonably believe to be true or in other words his good faith. It is contended on behalf of the Crown that the petitioner cannot urge the plea of good faith, because he says he spoke only about the conduct of the constables and all that he heard was about the conduct of the constables. If his plea that he spoke only about the constables is not accepted, the plea of good faith on his own statement is not maintainable. I do not think this contention can be accepted, as it seems to me not proper that one part of the statement of the petitioner should be rejected and the other part used as an admission of guilt. In one portion of his argument the learned Standing Counsel said that although the members of the Police force were fluctuating the imputations might be held to be on the complainant because the men were under his control and he was at the place all along. If that be so, the petitioner may establish his good faith by giving evidence with reference to the conduct of the constables. It was, however not argued on behalf of the Crown that the petitioner had no reasonable cause for believing the statements he had heard in the village and that he has not succeeded in establishing his good faith on that ground. But as the learned Sessions Judge came to a different conclusion I think it right to record my opinion on the question. It appears to me that on the finding of the Sessions Judge himself some acts of oppression were committed there. Dealing with the matter of Gaizuddi who was alleged to have been beaten with the result that he died, the learned Judge observes, "Moulvi A. Quadery has stated in his deposition that although he found no marks of injury on the man and most of the people there said that the man had epilepsy, some people also were saying at the time that Gaizuddi had been beaten by constables. I am, therefore, inclined to hold that there was some kind of rough handling on him."

This witness was the Deputy Superintendent of Police and he saw the man when he was in a dying condition. He also deposed that Deputy Magistrate, Babu Mani Mohan Ghose, P. W. No. 14, who was there also heard about this at the time. It is regrettable that none of these officers made any enquiry at that time about the allegations, which might have enabled them to find out the truth at once. The Sessions Judge further held that there might have been some rough handling, such as catching hold of women's hands, pulling at their cloth, etc. I cannot agree with the Deputy Magistrate, P. W. No. 14 above named, that pulling women by the hands, taking away their cloth, making women naked, prodding them with guns, could be legally justified. It is not necessary for the purpose of this case to examine the evidence regarding the various cases dealt with by the Sessions Judge. But I think it would be right to refer to some of the cases. One Fuljan Bibi came into Court and deposed amongst other things that the nipple of her breast was bitten off. She was not asked whether she was willing to submit to an examination of her person, but was disbelieved because another witness who went to the village to make enquiries stated that the name of another woman was given to that witness as having been so maltreated. I do not think this to be satisfactory. The case of one Haju Bibi also deserves notice. She complained that she had been raped. It was alleged that there was an eye witness a boy of about 16 years named Noai. Noai was examined by the Deputy Magistrate several times, a rather unusual procedure. The matter was adjourned for the identification of the man. The Deputy Magistrate P. W. No. 14 says, "Noai witness identified constable Mir Ahmed Ali as the ravisher. The constable was mixed up with 30 others." After this identification the case was dismissed. In this case, I think either the constable should have been tried for the offence alleged or the woman for bringing a false charge against an innocent man. But as I have said it is immaterial for the present case whether the stories were true or false. In my opinion, however, the petitioner had reasonable grounds for believing in the truth of the allegations made to him having regard to all the circumstances and as it is also not argued on behalf of the Crown that there were no reasonable grounds for the petitioner's belief, I hold that the case comes under the 9th Exception of s. 499, Indian Penal Code, although the language of the petitioner is otherwise objectionable. On all these grounds I would make the Rule absolute and acquit the accused of the charges. I do not think it necessary to refer to some other points urged by the petitioner's Counsel as, in my opinion, they fall within one or other of the questions I have dealt with.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this case has been tried and convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Faridpur on three charges of defamation and was sentenced under s. 500, Indian Penal Code, to one year's simple imprisonment, these sentences to run concurrently.

On appeal to the Sessions Judge of Faridpur his conviction on the 3rd charge was set aside and the sentences were reduced to 6 months' simple imprisonment on each of the two charges on which the conviction was upheld, these sentences also to run concurrently.

He has obtained a Rule from this Court calling upon the District Magistrate and the complainant to show cause why the conviction and the sentence passed upon him should not be set aside or such other orders passed as to this Court may seem fit.

The Rule came on for hearing before my learned brothers, Newbould and B. B.

Ghose, J.J., who are equally divided in opinion. The case with the opinions of the learned Judges has been laid before me under s. 429, Cr. P. C.

The charges in respect of which the petitioner's conviction has been upheld by the Sessions Judge are as follows :—

Firstly.—That you on or about the 13th day of June 1923 at Berhamganj P. S. Sibchar, defamed the complainant by making and publishing the following imputation in your speech at a public meeting concerning the Police force employed at Char Maniar of which the complainant was a member and the principal officer in charge of the investigation to the effect that not to speak of the Police only but the British Government themselves and the superior officers including from the District Magistrate down to the daroga and chowkidars were all beasts and pigs in their conduct, intending to harm and knowing and having reason to believe that it would harm the reputation of the said complainant and the Police force employed at Char Maniar, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 500, Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

Secondly.—That you on or about the 17th day of June 1923, at Faridpur P. S. Kotwali, defamed the complainant by making and publishing in your speech at a public meeting the following imputation concerning the Police force employed at Char Maniar of which the complainant was a member and the principal officer in charge of the investigation to the effect that the Police force employed at Char Maniar had bitten off the nipple of the breast of a woman and had bitten the cheek of a woman nine months pregnant intending to harm and knowing and having reason to believe that such imputation will harm the reputation of the complainant and the Police employed at Char Maniar and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 500, Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

It has been submitted on behalf of the petitioner that these charges are defective.

Under s. 499, Indian Penal Code, whoever by words..... makes or publishes any imputation concerning any person, intending to harm or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm the reputation of such person is said to defame that person.

The person concerning whom the imputation is made, whom it is intended to harm in his reputation, and who in consequence is defamed is the same throughout.

There is confusion in these charges between the complainant and the Police force at Char Maniar in relation to the various ingredients of the charge.

It is charged that the complainant was defamed by imputations made concerning the Police force at Char Maniar, and that the reputation intended to be harmed was that of the complainant and the Police force.

It is obvious that charges so framed do not conform to the requirements of the definition.

The defects seem to have originated in a failure to appreciate Explanation 2 to the section and the principles applicable when the words making the imputation appear to be general expressions but the complaint is that they are directed against a particular individual.

The Explanation in my opinion is intended to include a company or an association or collection of persons as such within the word "person" as used in the definition so that the latter should not be limited to individuals.

In a case in which the Explanation is properly called into use the identity of the company or association or collection of persons must be maintained throughout with reference to the imputation said to have been made concerning them as such with the intention of harming their reputation so that thereby they are defamed. An imputation concerning a company or association of persons as such—and the last two words of the explanation are most material to its correct application—cannot by virtue of this Explanation justify a charge of defaming an individual, and a charge cannot combine the explanation with the definition for such a purpose. Nor does it carry the matter any further to state as has been done by the charges in this case that the complainant was a member of the Police force at Char Maniar.

The charges seem to have assumed that the Police force at Char Maniar is an association or collection of persons such as the Explanation contemplates but without expressing any definite opinion on the point, as it does not directly arise, I have considerable doubt whether such a view is correct. Aldridge v. Barrow (8) which is some authority on the point was a civil suit but that would not appear to affect the principle (vide the observations of Fletcher Moulton, L. J. in Jones v. Hulton & Co. (9)).

In this case the petitioner is charged with having defamed an individual. The imputations in the charges are general expressions assuming that they concern the complainant. This would appear to be the case notwithstanding the reference in the first to the District Magistrate and the daroga, because neither of these officers, who are capable of identification if the investigation referred to in the charge is specified, which has not been done, is the complainant in the case. As regards the second charge though no one is referred to by name or by reference to his office in the imputations charged the nature of the imputations is indicative of the fact that an individual may be meant.

It may be that the general nature of the imputations has led to the confusion in the charges. There is no necessity for that to have occurred.

The cardinal rule is, that the offence consists in using language which others knowing the circumstances would reasonably think to be defamatory of the person complaining of and injured by it [Per Lord Loreburn, L. C., in Hulton v. Jones (10)] Lord Shaw of Dunfermline in his speech cited Bourke v. Warren (11) in which Abbott, C. J. said:—"The question for your consideration is whether you think the libel designates the plaintiff in such a way as to let those who knew him understand that he was the person meant. It is not necessary that all the world should understand the libel; it is sufficient if those who know the plaintiff can make out that he is the person meant."

Following upon the rule so laid down it becomes a matter of comparative indifference whether the words are general or refer to a specific individual, but lest this be taken too literally I should explain that it may be that an individual is as much defamed by the words apparently only of more general application as by words referring to him by name. The test is that formulated by the learned Judges whose observations I have quoted.

(11) (1826) 2 Car. & P. 307.

A very good instance of a case where defamatory matter may appear only to apply to a class of individuals yet, if the descriptions in such matter are capable of being, by innuendo, shown to be directly applicable to any one individual of that class an action may be maintained by such individual in respect of the publication of such matter, is to be found in Le Fanu v. Malcolmson (12). The defamatory matter is too long to be reproduced here seriatim; all that I need quote is a passage from the judgment of Lord Cottenham, L. C.—"If a party can publish a libel so framed as to describe individuals, though not naming them, and not specifically describing them by any express form of words, but still so describing them that it is known who they are, as the jurors have found it to be here and if those who must be acquainted with the circumstances connected with the party described may also come to the same conclusion, and may have no doubt that the writer of the libel intended to mean those individuals, it would be opening a very wide door to defamation, if parties suffering all the inconvenience of being libelled were not permitted to have that protection which the law affords. If they are so described that they are known to all their neighbours as being the parties alluded to; and if they are able to prove to the satisfaction of a Jury that the party writing the libel did intend to allude to them, it would be unfortunate to find the law in a state which would prevent the party being protected against such libels;" and the following passage which is to be found in the judgment of Lord Campbell:—

"The first objection which has been relied on by the Counsel for the plaintiff in error, who certainly has argued the case with his usual ability, and has brought forward all the arguments that learning and talent could supply; the first objection is that this libel applies to a class of persons, and that, therefore, an individual cannot apply it to himself.

"Now I am of opinion that that is contrary to all reason, and is not supported by any authority. It may well happen that the singular number is used; and where a class is described, it may very well be that the slander refers to a particular individual, that is a matter of which evidence is to be laid before the Jury, and the jurors are to determine whether, when a class is referred to, the individual who complains that the slander applied to him is, in point of fact, justified in making such complaint. That is clearly a reasonable principle, because whether a man is called by one name, or whether he is called by another, or whether he is described by a pretended description of a class to which he is known to belong, if those who look on, know well who is aimed at, the very same injury is inflicted, the very same thing is in fact done as would be done if his name and Christian name were ten times repeated."

The confusion of ideas which these charges disclose makes it impossible for a proper trial to be held. To give but one instance the question of the relevancy of evidence will be approached from a different stand point if the charges stand as drawn or if they are drawn as they should be in accordance with the principles applicable to the case. I may even go so far as to say that there has been no trial at all of the petitioner for having defamed the complainant, for a trial on these charges cannot be said to have been such a trial.

In the circumstances the evidence and the merits generally have not been gone into. As I appreciate the situation there should be a new trial upon charges properly drawn, and in that view I ought to express no opinion on the merits even had they been fully argued. The question is as to the form the final order should take, as to which I have now heard learned Counsel for the parties.

The order will be that the conviction and sentences by the Sessions Judge, Faridpur, be set aside and I direct that the case be re-tried by the District Magistrate, Faridpur, or by such Subordinate Magistrate to whom he may assign the case, other than Babu A. R. Bose, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Faridpur, before whom the previous trial was held.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 91 OF 1925.
CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 85 OF 1925.

February 17, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Devadoss and

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 190—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 211—False charge of dacoity before Village Magistrate—Case struck off on Police report—Charge by Police of false information, legality of—Complaint—Procedure.

An offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code is a non-cognizable one, and the Police are not empowered to investigate into it of their own accord, and to prefer a charge in respect of it.

Accused made a complaint to a Village Munsif of a dacoity having been committed in his house, mentioning certain persons as having taken part in it. The Police on investigation reported the case to be false, and the Sub-Magistrate to whom the papers were sent struck the case off his file. The Police then put in a charge-sheet against the accused before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for an offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code:

Held, that it was open either to the persons alleged to have taken part in the dacoity or to the Village Munsif, or to any Police Officer, to prefer a complaint against the accused under s. 190 of the Cr. P. C., in which case the Magistrate before whom the complaint was made could take the case on his file after taking a sworn statement from the complainant, but that the Police could not start proceedings of their own accord, and that, consequently, the proceedings must be quashed as illegal.

Petition, under ss. 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. C., 1898, praying the High Court to revise the proceedings of the Court of Second Class Magistrate, Satur, dated the 22nd January 1925, in R. C. No. 1 of 1925.

Mr. K. S. Ramabhadra Iyer, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—This is an application to quash the proceedings, now pending before the Sub-Magistrate of Satur, on the ground that no complaint was filed in the case to enable the Magistrate to take proceedings against the petitioner. The petitioner made a statement to the Village Munsif of Mela Raja Kularaman, that a dacoity was committed in his house and mentioned certain persons as having taken part in the dacoity. The Village Munsif forwarded the complaint to the Police, who held an investigation and reported the case as false. The Sub-Magistrate of Srivilliputtur to whom the papers were sent, accepted the referred charge-sheet and struck the case off his file. The Police put in a charge-sheet before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Sivakasi, against the petitioner for an offence under s. 211, Indian Penal Code. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate transferred the case to the Second Class Magistrate of Satur. The contention of the petitioner is that there is no complaint from the Second Class Magistrate of Srivilliputtur, who acted on the referred charge-sheet of an offence under s. 211 and, therefore, the proceedings are illegal.

Without expressing an opinion on that contention, we are satisfied that this is not a case in which the Police could start proceedings of their own accord. The offence under s. 211 is a non-cognizable one, and the Police are not empowered to investigate into a non-cognizable offence, and charge the petitioner. It is open either to any of the accused in the alleged dacoity case or to the Village Munsif, or any Police Officer, to prefer a complaint under s. 190, Cr. P. C., in which case the Magistrate before whom the complaint is made may take the case on his file after taking a sworn statement from the complainant. Such a course was not adopted in this case. We think the proceedings before the lower Court are illegal and they are hereby quashed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 146—U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 40 (2)—Order under ss. 145, 146, Cr. P. C.—Mutation in favour of opposite party—Restitution.

An order under s. 145 or s. 146 of the Cr. P. C. does not interfere with an order subsequently made by the Revenue Authorities under s. 40 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act making over possession of the property to the party in whose favour an order of mutation has been passed. If the opposite party wins the mutation case at a subsequent stage, the Revenue Court has power to grant restitution to him. [p. 399, col. 2.]

Reference made by the District Magistrate, Bahraich, under s. 438 of the Cr. P. C. by his order dated the 8th July 1925.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Missra and Mr. S. N. Rizwai, for the Crown.

Messrs. Niamat Ullah and Ghulam Hassan, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—Section 145-proceedings commenced on the 21st of January 1924 and to-day on the 13th of August 1925, I shall certainly not revise them. A competent Court has passed orders under s. 40 (2) of the Land Revenue Act that out of the two claimants Nawab Nisar Ali Khan and Sardar Mohammad Ali Khan the landed property shall be made over to Sardar Mohammad Ali Khan. The order of the Magistrate either under s. 145 or under s. 146 does not interfere with this order under s. 40 of the Land Revenue Act. I am well satisfied that Mr. Thomas did not by his order of 1st June as Magistrate make over any possession to Sardar Mohammad Ali Khan. The possession has been made over to Sardar Mohammad Ali Khan under s. 40 so if Nawab Nisar Ali Khan wins his mutation case at any stage, the Revenue Court will have power to grant restitution.

This disposes of the matter as regards revenue paying property. There are two other properties, the subject of dispute:—

(1) There are two kothis.

(2) Three immambaras one parti land and a karbala in addition to the revenue paying land. The parties are agreed here as regards those that they may continue in the possession of the party actually in possession at present. It appears that one kothi is in the possession of Sardar Mohammad Ali Khan and the rest in the possession of Nawab Nisar Ali Khan. The parties are in such possession because the manager allowed this possession. This possession shall continue. There is no prospect of any breaking of heads with respect to this property and there is no reason, therefore, to set aside the Magistrate's order of 1st June 1925.

There is a large amount of money collected by the Tahsildar of Nanpara as Manager of the estate during the long period of the litigation. At one time it amounted to 1 lakh 31 thousand and possibly it has since increased. As regards that particular amount the order of the Magistrate appears to be that it shall be made over to Sardar Mohammad Ali Khan. This opinion is arrived at on a decision as to title to revenue paying property and it will not be just that this sum should be made over to either party until their claims have been definitely decided at last by the highest revenue tribunal. I, therefore, add to the order of 1st June 1925 of the Magistrate that the cash collected by the Tahsildar of Nanpara shall not be made over to any party until the mutation claim has been finally decided in the Revenue Courts. When the claim is finally decided by the highest Revenue Court, the successful party may apply to the Magistrate concerned for delivery of the money. This procedure will enable the opposite party if so inclined to go to the Civil Court and obtain attachment. I may repeat that the money in the custody at present of the Tahsildar of Nanpara shall not be made over to either party until all the conditions fixed by me above have been complied with.

Either party may apply to the Magistrate having jurisdiction for the investment of the money in the hands of the Tahsildar of Nanpara.

I think these orders will satisfy the parties. The order of the Magistrate dated 1st June is amended only so far as the case is concerned, otherwise there has been no interference. Let the papers be returned.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 99—Private defence—Plea, whether can be raised in Appellate Court—Right, when can be exercised.

It is open to an accused person to raise the plea of private defence in the Appellate Court even though it was not taken before the Trying Court where he altogether denied the offence, but the plea cannot help him when his object in causing the injury was not to save himself but to beat his assailant and when it was not necessary for the purpose of self-defence to have inflicted the injury actually caused.

Yusuf Husain v. Emperor, 44 Ind. Cas. 675; 40 A. 284; 16 A. L. J. 169; 19 Cr. L. J. 371, and Veerana Nadan v. Emperor, 15 Ind. Cas. 310; (1912) M. W. N. 404; 11 M. L. T. 251; 13 Cr. L. J. 470, referred to.

Revision of an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Balaghat, dated the 7th January 1924, in Criminal Appeal No. 2 of 1923.

Mr. P. C. Dutt, for the Applicants.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The facts of this case are that the applicants have been convicted under s. 325, Indian Penal Code of causing grievous hurt to one Rakhdia by beating him and breaking both his arms and were sentenced to four months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 25 each. The conviction and sentence were confirmed on appeal by the Additional Sessions Judge, Balaghat. The accused apply for revision on the grounds first that they are protected by the right of private defence and secondly that in any case they should be given the benefit of s. 562 Cr. P. C. as was recommended by the Second Class Magistrate who first tried the case and who submitted the proceedings to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under s. 349, Cr. P. C.

As regards the plea of private defence, this was not taken before the Trying Court where the accused altogether denied the offence. Assuming this defence to be open to them as it may be on the rulings in Yusuf Husain v. Emperor (1) and Veerana Nadan v. Emperor (2) the present is not a case of private defence. The argument is that the accused were defending one Jaman a Musalman, who was being beaten by Mhars. But the evidence is that the accused pursued and beat the Mhars and their object was not to save Jaman but to beat his assailants. In any case it was not necessary in order to defend Jaman that the accused should beat the complainant so severely as to break his arms.

The plea of private defence will, therefore, not assist the accused. As to s. 562 the Second Class Magistrate who tried the case originally thinks that because a fight took place between both parties this section should be made use of. This section was applied to Jaman because he was himself somewhat severely injured in the fight which took place between the Musalmans and Mhars.

In the last paragraph of his judgment the learned Additional Sessions Judge has pointed out that the accused themselves received no provocation. Their assault was, therefore, deliberate and though they may have been actuated by a desire to help Jaman their guilt is not the less serious.

Rakhdia must have been beaten with considerable force for both of his arms to be fractured.

In these circumstances I see no reason for interference. The applications are dismissed and the applicants who are on bail must serve the remainder of their sentence.

pellant.Messrs. C. V. Anantakrishna Iyer and C. Rama Row, for the Respondents.JUDGMENT.—These second appeals arise out of a batch of suits filed to recover damages for use and occupation in respect of the two villages of Kadiyam and Jogurapad in the Godavari District. The Courts below gave decrees in favour of plaintiff and the defendants file these appeals.The two villages though situate within the ambit of the zemindari of Pittapore had a history of their own apart from the zemindari. They were granted in Fasli 1148 (or 1748) by or on behalf of Asaof Jah alias Nizumulmulk, the first Nizam of Hyderabad. They were regarded as excluded from the assets of the zemindari at the time of the Permanent Settlement in 1802 and continued to be held by the grantee's successors as inam. In 1856, they were resumed by the Government for reasons not clear but not material. Thus, they did not get the benefit of the inam Settlement in 1862 but continued to be held by the grantees on ryotwari tenure. The defendants or their predecessors were the tenants of the villages. In 1900, the assessment payable to Government was enhanced as a result of the re-survey and re-settlement in which the plaintiffs were regarded as the pattadars of the villages.
No rents were admittedly collected from the tenants from 1906 to 1910. In 1910, notices to quit were issued to the tenants but in vain. In 1917 the present suits were filed for damages for use and occupation on the footing that the defendants were holding over and are trespassers in law.

The defendants pleaded that they had permanent occupancy rights, that they were not trespassers and, therefore, are not liable to pay damages (as opposed to rent). They also pleaded that, as they did not pay rents for 19 years, the suits are barred by limitation. They admitted the payment of assessment due to Government. This must be presumably on behalf of the pattadar.

On second appeal, objection has been taken by the respondent, that, in some of the second appeals—those in which the value did not exceed Rs. 500—no second appeals lie. It is unnecessary to decide the point, though we think the objection is well-founded. It is admitted that the objection cannot apply to all the cases and the merits must be gone into.

The only point practically argued in the second appeals is that the trial of the suits relating to Jagurupad has been seriously prejudiced by their being consolidated with the suits relating to Kadiyam, that there is substantial difference between the two villages in the matter of the relations between the landlord and tenants and the Courts below were prejudiced by the facts relating to Kadiyam which, it is admitted, are more favourable to the landlord in certain respects. We say this is the only point argued, for, all other points discussed in argument are subsidiary to and illustrative of this. As to Kadiyam, no doubt the appellants argued that they have acquired a title by adverse possession but we do not think this argument is tenable in view of the points taken up in the written statements. The suit relating to Jagurupad are three in number and their second appeals are S. A. Nos. 593, 596 and 597, and the Vakil for the appellants has strenuously argued that these second appeals should be sent back for fresh findings. Before this point is dealt with, it will be convenient to state the fact and findings about both the villages and dispose of the other second appeals.

The Courts below held that, as the suit villages are ryotwari villages, the burden of making out occupancy rights lay on the appellants relying on Seturathan Iyer v. Venkatachala Goundan (1). In this connection Naina Pillai Marakayar v. Ramathan Chettiar (2) may also be mentioned as laying down (page 344*) :—"It cannot now be doubted that when a tenant of lands in India, in a suit by his landlord to eject him from them, sets up a defence that he has a right of permanent tenancy in the lands, the onus of proving that he has such rights is upon the tenant".

This is not denied for the appellants. The Courts below found that Kadiyam lands were being held under muchilikas for terms of years, X series of 1875, N series of 1886, M series of 1891. The last set of muchilikas covered the period terminating with June 1896. In all these muchilikas, the tenants undertook to surrender the lands at the end of the term and must, therefore, be considered as re-admitted as tenants under the next succeeding set of muchilikas. They also found that there was constant change of tenants in the village of Kadiyam and that there were also enhancements of rents. The District Munsif found that rents continued to be paid by the tenants after 1896 upto 1906, in respect of both the villages. But the Subordinate Judge found that the payment of rent has been practically proved up to 1900 only. We allowed reference to the documents and evidence in detail to see if there is any mis construction of a document or a mis statement of fact by the lower Appellate Court. But none has been established. The tenants latterly began to alienate the holdings but it was found these were all after 1900. They are sixteen in number for Kadiyam and of the years 1902-1906 except one in 1912. As to Jugurupad, they were five in number and are of the years 1902, 1905-1907. Some improvements said to have been effected by the tenants were also stated and considered by the Courts below. After stating the facts common to all the cases, the District Munsif stated the facts proved in respect of each case separately and the Subordinate Judge has not re-stated them as it would be only a repetition. On the facts summarised as above, they found that no rights of occupancy have been made out by the ryots. The Vakil for the appellants argued that the facts are similar to those in Seturathan Iyer v. Venkatachala Goundan (1) more particularly in Jugurepad. We do not agree with him. In that case there were 43 alienations found ranging from 1859 to 1896—as opposed to the much smaller number in the present cases which are all after 1900—when the Government enhanced the assessment and consequently the landlord neglected the collection of rents. The Courts below have considered all the circumstances that may be relied on in favour of the tenants and have come to a conclusion on a question of fact with which there is not the faintest shadow of justification for interference. In particular the effect of the muchilikas of Kadiyam containing a clause that the tenant shall surrender at the end of the term may be stated—a fact totally absent in Seturathan Iyer v. Venkatachala Goundan (1). In Suryanaryana v. Patanna (3), Sir John Edge stated (at page 1016*): “By these documents of tenancy the defendants or their predecessors-in-title agreed with the inamlars to quit possession of their holdings on the determination of the term for which the lands were let to them, and without claiming any jerayati right in the lands”. (at page 1021*) “By the muchilikas which were executed by the defendants respectively or their predecessors-in-title the term for which the lands were let to them was specified; it was admitted that they held no jerayati rights and they agreed to quit the lands at the end of their term it has been proved that, when these tenancy agreements were entered into and the defendants or their predecessors-in-title were let into possession under them, any of the lands were, or had been, held by a ryot with a permanent right of occupancy”. In Upad-raishta Venkata Sastrulu v. Divi Setharomudu (4), Viscount Cave observed (page 170†) each of these agreements contained a declaration by the tenant to the effect that except the right of cultivating the land for a year under the agreement he had no other right whatever thereto and accordingly that he agreed to the landlord (the plaintiff) taking possession of the land at the end of the year of tenancy without any relinquishment by the tenant. Page 173*, “When the defendants were admitted as tenants, they severally declared (as stated above) that they had no right of occupancy except such as was given to them by the tenancy agreements”. In Naina Pillai Marakayar v. Ramanathan Chettiar (2), it was observed at page 354†: “In 1831, some of the tenants of the temple’s endowed lands, apparently all of them, agreed amongst themselves to cultivate jointly the endowed lands of which they were tenants, and they executed and delivered to the Collector, who was then the manager of the temple and its endowments, a muchilika by which they took the endowed lands for a term from Fasli 1241. That muchilika is absolutely inconsistent with any of the tenants having then any right of permanent occupancy in any of the endowed lands of the temple and with their believing that they had any right of permanent occupancy in any of the temple’s lands. In 1870 Sir C. H. Scotland, C. J., held that when a tenancy in the Presidency of Madras commenced under a terminable contract there was nothing to prevent the landlord from ejecting the tenant at the end of the term from the lands which had been let to him”, thus approving of Chockalinga Pillai v. Vythealinga Pundara Sunnady (5) which is thus still good law except where abrogated by Legislature (I of 1908) as to lands in estates.

We are of opinion the appellants have no case as to Kadiyam lands and the Kadiyam appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

It is argued as to Jugurepad that the facts are different that there were no term muchilikas, that there was only one muchilika (R) in 1864, that a summary suit against the tenants in 1869 for acceptance of a tendered muchilika failed as is seen in (Exs. F and IV). These facts have been stated by the Courts below who also find that, nevertheless the tenants continued to pay rents till 1900, that there were enhancements in 1883, that the original two families who held in 1864 became three families in 1869. In 1874, another family was added (Ex. 21) and a fifth family (Ganesula) has since been added. The District Munsif recorded all the evidence in one suit on the agreement of the parties, though later on it was objected to. In his judgment (para. 24) he says "In addition to what has been discussed above, I consider it proper to examine in detail the facts relating to each case to afford no room to suppose that the case of any individual defendant is prejudiced by joint trial". In para. 43, he states the facts relating to Jugurepad separately. The Subordinate Judge takes up Jugurepad separately in para. 19 and states all its facts separately until towards the end of the paragraph where the facts common to both the villages were re-stated for Jugurepad. In para. 20 the alienations have been separately grouped for both the villages. In para. 21, the improvements were stated and the only evidence expressly referred to related to Jugurepad and it was held that the building of small cattle sheds and granaries cannot be accepted as acts indicative of rights of permanent occupancy. It seems to us that not only all facts and circumstances in favour of the tenants have been stated and considered by the Courts below but every possible effort has been made to make it clear that the facts of the two villages have been kept separate in their minds. It is impossible to hold that the defendants suffered the smallest prejudice by the joint trial. It is true that, in Jagurepad, there are no term muchilikas, the changes of tenants are fewer. But the tenants have not shown that new tenants came in as alienees of former tenants and not as new admissions by the landlord. We may observe that the case of Bhadrappa v. Venkataratnam (6) cannot be regarded as good law after Naina Pillai Marakayar v. Ramanathan Chettiar (2). It is also true that there is only one enhancement. In our opinion these facts are enough to negative occupancy rights but if we can conceive that other Judges may come to a different opinion if sitting as Judges of fact, still there is no justification for interference with the findings of the lower Appellate Court in second appeal. We are also of opinion, the Jugurepad second appeals also fail and are dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Alienation—Antecedent debt, existence of—Appeal, second—Finding of fact—Recitals in deed, value of.

The question whether an antecedent debt did or did not exist is one of fact and cannot be agitated in second appeal. The fact that the lower Appellate Court has declined to accept the recitals in the deed of transfer as evidence of the existence of an antecedent debt, does not vitiate its finding as to the existence of such a debt. [p. 405, col. 1.]

Under ordinary circumstances and apart from Statute, recitals in deeds can only be evidence as between the parties to the conveyance and those who claim under them. Such recitals cannot by themselves be relied upon for the purpose of proving the assertions of fact which they contain. [ibid.]

Mr. G. N. Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal. It raises no question of law. The suit was one for foreclosure of a mortgage, and the defence was that the property mortgaged belonged to the joint Hindu family, and that the money was not advanced either for family necessity, or for antecedent debt. It has been found in fact that the property was ancestral. The deed in suit is dated the 17th October 1911. The items set forth in the deed are as follows:—

1. Rs. 150 usufructuary mortgage, dated 13th July 1909.
2. Rs. 56-13 an unregistered bond dated 14th January 1910.
3. Rs. 61-3 an unregistered bond dated 23rd April 1910.
4. Rs. 23 a parcel loan.
5. Rs. 36 rent of 1317F and 1318F.
6. Rs. 48 paid in cash.

In the plaint it is not stated even if the land is ancestral. It appears, however, that the plaintiff, by verbal replication, set up antecedent debt for the five items. The cash item, of course, could not be said to be antecedent debt. Apparently, no plea has ever been taken of family necessity. The Court of Trial found Items Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5 proved to be antecedent debt, and gave a decree accordingly. The total of those four items is Rs. 177, but the interest brought the amount up to Rs. 692, and a foreclosure decree was given for this sum. The defendant appealed to the learned Subordinate Judge, and the plaintiff filed a cross-objection. The cross-objection related to the usufructuary mortgage of Rs. 150. It was dismissed. The appeal related to the four items Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5. It succeeded, and plaintiff's suit was dismissed on a finding that antecedent debt was not proved for any of these four items. Plaintiff comes here in second appeal.

The appeal relates to the usufructuary mortgage, and to the Items Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5. As I have said, it raises no question of law. The question whether antecedent debt existed is one of fact. It is suggested that a point of law arises because the learned Subordinate Judge declined to accept the recitals in the deed as evidence of antecedent debt, but in doing so he committed no error of law. The point was dealt with by the Privy Council in Nanda Lal Dhur Biswas v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya Chowdhuri (1). That was a case of alienations by a widow but the principle is the same. It was said, (page) 195*):

"It is well-established, that such recitals cannot by themselves be relied upon for the purpose of proving the assertions of fact which they contain. Indeed it is obvious that if such proof were permitted, the rights of reversioners could always be defeated by the insertion of carefully prepared recitals. Under ordinary circumstances and apart from Statute, recitals in deeds can only be evidence as between the parties to the conveyance and those who claim under them."

The learned Subordinate Judge, therefore, fell into no error of law in rejecting the recitals as evidence. He considered the evidence before him, and he found as a matter of fact that none of those items was proved to be an antecedent debt.

These findings are binding upon me in second appeal, and they were sufficient for the disposal of the appeal before him and of the cross-objection.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal by the dar patnidars raises important questions relating to the rights of the zemindar as against the darpatnidar. The predecessor of the plaintiff-respondent granted a patni settlement to one Lakshmi Narain in 1293 B. S. in respect of three mouzas. The rent reserved was Rs. 256 a year. Of two of these mouzas Lakshmi Narain granted in 1303 to one Masraf Ali, now represented by defendant No. 9, a darpatni lease on a yearly rent of Rs. 228. Lakshmi Narain died leaving four sons defendants Nos. 10 to 13. In 1321 defendants Nos. 12 and 13 executed a darpatni lease in favour of one Madan Mohan of their share in the third mouza on a yearly rent of Rs. 20. In 1322 the other two sons of Lakshmi, the defendants Nos. 10 and 11, granted a darpatni lease in respect of their shares in the third mouza Mahabasi to their own sons defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for a yearly rent of Rs. 20. Plaintiff's case is that his predecessor had obtained a decree against the patnidar for arrears of rent in execution of which the patni was sold and purchased by the decree-holder. When attempting to collect rent the plaintiff discovered the existence of the darpatni leases and served the darpatnidars with notices under s. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the present suit the plaintiff seeks to avoid the darpatnis on the grounds, first, that as incumbrances they have been annulled and, secondly, that they are liable to be set aside as fictitious and benami transactions.

The Trial Court found that the service of notice under s. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act was not proved but held that under the Patni Law the leases were not binding on the plaintiff. It further found that the two leases in favour of Madan Mohan and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were fictitious and not bona fide. Madan Mohan did not appeal against this decree and on the appeal by the other defendants the learned District Judge agreed with the Trial Court in all its findings. This second appeal is by the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 9 representing two of the three darpatnis defendants Nos. 1 and 2's darpatni interest being alleged to be in respect of the share of Mouza Mahabashi held by two sons of Lakshmi Narain and defendant Nos. 9's interest being in the other two mouzas. With regard to the darpatni held by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 the finding of the fact of both the Courts is that it is a benami and fictitious one. This finding of fact cannot be assailed in second appeal and the appeal by these defendants must stand dismissed. As regards Masraf Ali's darpatni the question of law raised has to be examined and determined.

Mr. Chuckerbutty has said all that can be said on behalf of the appellants.

It is first contended that the plaintiff having purchased the patni in execution of a rent-decree obtained under the Bengal Tenancy Act, the provisions of the Patni Regulation VIII of 1819 do not apply in this case which must be governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is also pointed out that the plaintiff himself has treated the case as coming under the Tenancy Act and based his claim for possession on the determination of appellant's tenancies by service of notice under s. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act. It is accordingly argued that service of notice under s. 167 not having been proved the plaintiff's suit must fail. It is further maintained that the defendant's tenancies are protected interests within the meaning of s. 160 (g), Bengal Tenancy Act. This latter argument is founded on the recital in the patni patta to the effect that the patnidar would be "entitled to make a gift or sale or grant darpatni and sepatni settlement, etc."; and there can be no question that if the relation between the parties is governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act and nothing more the defendant's tenure must be deemed to be a 'protected interest' having been created under the express permission given in the patni lease as required by cl. (g) of that section. In support of this view reference may be made to Bidhumukhi v Asmatullah (1), where the tenure concerned was a sepatni created by a darpatnidar and the provisions of the Tenancy Act were, on the authority of Mohamed Abbas Mondal v. Brojo Sundari Debia (2) rightly applied. But the Bengal Tenancy Act does not in view of the provisions in s. 195 (e) affect the rights of patnidars under the Patni Regulation and so the rights of the parties have to be determined under it. The plaintiff has doubtless in the present case based his cause of action of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but if his right to recover possession is found to exist under some other provision of law it would be sacrificing substance to form to deny him such right: see Sundari

Dassee v. Mudhoo Chunder Sarkar (3). For the course that commends itself to us we have the authority of Kristo Das Laha v. Jatindra Nath Basu (4), where under similar circumstances the provisions of the Patni Regulation were held applicable to a case arising from a sale under the Bengal Tenancy Act. We accordingly propose to examine the law as laid down by the Regulation as affecting the rights of the parties.

The preamble to the Regulation declares, among the objects of the enactment, the objects "to define to relative rights of zemindars and patni talukdars". In s. 1 this object with reference to the under-leases by the patnidar is thus amplified:—"It has accordingly been deemed necessary to regulate and define the nature of the property given and acquired on the creation of a patni taluq as above described, also to declare the legality of the practice of under-letting in the manner in which it has been exercised by patnidars and others, establishing at the same time such provisions as have appeared calculated to protect the under-lessee from any collusion of his immediate superior with the zemindar or others, for his ruin, as well as to secure the just rights of the zemindar on the sale of any tenure under the stipulations of the original engagements entered into with him". To secure the last object it is enacted in the second clause of s. 3 that the patni talukdars are "to possess the right of letting out the lands composing their taluks in any manner they may deem most conducive to their interests; and any engagements so entered into by such talukdars with others shall be legal and binding between the parties to the same, their heirs and assignees: Provided, however, that no such engagements shall operate to the prejudice of the right of the zemindar to hold the superior tenure answerable for any arrear of his rent, in the state in which he granted it, and free of all incumbrances resulting from the act of his tenant". Section 11 partly qualifies the stringent rule contained in the above proviso. The first paragraph of the 1st clause of s. 11 does not help us as it applies to sales held under the rules of the Regulation. The second paragraph of that clause runs thus "No transfer by sale, gift, or otherwise, no mortgage or other limited assignment, shall be permitted to bar the indefeasible right of the zemindar to hold the tenure of his creation answerable in the state in which he created it for the rent, which is in fact his reserved property in the tenure, except the transfer or assignment should have been made with a condition to that effect, under express authority obtained from such zemindar." The first paragraph defines the right of the zemindar as against the transferee or sub-lessee of the patnidar in case the sale of patni is held under the Regulation. The second paragraph states the general right of the zemindar as against the transferee or the sub-lessee in all cases; otherwise this sub-clause would appear redundant. It accordingly becomes necessary to construe the words 'condition to that effect.' The phrase 'to that effect' occurs also in the 1st sub-clause where it means to make incumbrances as are mentioned in that sub-clause. In the 2nd sub-clause the phrase 'to that effect' must by logical interpretation mean to make such transfer by sale, etc., as to bar the indefeasible right of the zemindar to hold the tenure of his creation answerable in the state in which he created it for the rent of the tenure. It demands something more than mere license to create sub-leases by the patnidar, a right, as has been observed in Kristo v. Jotindro (4) reserved to the patnidar by the Regulation itself, and the mere mention of such right in the patni lease does not vest the patnidar with a higher right than is granted to him under the Patni Law. The sub-clause, therefore, requires that in order that the zemindar should be bound by the sub-lease created by the patnidar, and to defeat the zemindar's right to hold the tenure of his creation answerable in the state in which he created it for his rent, the patni lease must confer on the patnidar the right to create such an under-tenure as will bar the above indefeasible right of the zemindar. It looks anomalous that in the case of sale under the Regulation an incumbrance created under a stipulation in the written engagement conferring on the patnidar the right to create it is protected whereas if the zemindar acquires the patni in any other way a more stringent condition is necessary to make the incumbrance binding on him. But the law can only be construed as it stands.

It is, however, argued on behalf of the appellant that the 2nd sub-clause above quoted contemplates cases of complete transfer such as transfer by gift or sale, except mortgage, and not leases which are transfers of a part of the interest of the patnidar. Learned Counsel, however, has not been able to assign any such meaning to the word 'otherwise' following the words transfer by sale, gift or to the words 'other limited assignment' in that sub-clause as to exclude leases. In our judgment the above expressions include also a lease which is a transfer or limited assignment. If this construction is not correct, under the 2nd clause of s. 3 above quoted no engagement (including a lease) by the patnidar shall operate to prejudice the right of the zemindar to hold the patni tenure as it originally existed answerable for any arrear of rent. In any view, therefore, we hold that the darpatni created by the patnidar Lakshmi Narain in favour of Masraf Ali is of no avail as against the plaintiff. It is not necessary in this connection to consider the 2nd clause of s. 11 which deals with rent—farming leases, the authority to grant which should also have been 'specially transferred', it being neither party's case that this clause has any application in the present suit.

(4) 14 Ind. Cas. 145; 16 O. W. N. 561.

The result of the above considerations is that the darpatni leases created by Lakshmi Narain are not binding on the plaintiff and he is entitled to obtain possession of the mouzas in the state in which they were when the patni lease was granted. In this view we hold that the decision of the Court below is correct and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

RESPONDENT.

Contribution—Property belonging to deceased person recovered by some of his heirs—Suit by other heirs to recover their share—Liability to pay proportionate share of costs.

Some of the heirs of a deceased person brought a suit to recover his estate from a person who claimed to be entitled to it under the terms of a Will left by the deceased and the suit was eventually compromised, the heirs being allowed to take possession of the estate on payment to the claimant of a certain sum of money, which under the circumstances of the case was not unreasonable. Subsequently the remaining heirs of the deceased brought a suit against those heirs who had recovered the estate of the deceased for their share of the estate:

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to their share in the estate of the deceased only on payment to the defendants of their proportionate share of the sum which the defendants had spent in the former litigation for the purpose of obtaining possession of the estate. [p. 410, col. 1.]

First appeal from the judgment and decree of the Additional Sub Judge, Lucknow, dated the 26th November 1923.

JUDGMENT.—This is the defendants' appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Lucknow, dated the 26th November 1923. The property in suit belonged to one Jang Bahadur Singh. On his death his sister's son, Shamsher Bahadur Singh, obtained mutation of names in his favour and entered into possession of the estate of Jang Bahadur Singh. Shamsher Bahadur Singh produced a Will alleged to have been executed by Jang Bahadur Singh in his favour under which he claimed title to the whole estate. The Court of Revenue accepted the Will and ordered mutation of names in his favour as already mentioned. Thereupon the defendants appellants brought a suit for possession of the entire estate of Jang Bahadur Singh as against Shamsher Bahadur Singh on the ground that title to that estate had devolved on them and some other persons arrayed as defendants by the law of inheritance. The suit was eventually compromised and the present appellants obtained possession of the property in terms of that compromise on payment of a sum of Rs. 7,300 to Shamsher Bahadur Singh.

The plaintiffs to the present suit are purchasers from Nage Singh, Narpat Singh, Sheo Singh and Subba Singh of one moiety of the estate of Jang Bahadur Singh under two sale-deeds dated the 11th March 1921 and the 17th March 1921. The other moiety admittedly belongs to the defendants-appellants. The defence to this simple suit proceeded on numerous and various grounds. The pedigree showing the relationship of the vendors of the plaintiffs was disputed. The sales were challenged as opposed to public policy, a custom was set up to the effect that the succession devolved per stirpes and not per capita, plea of res judicata was raised, Jang Bahadur Singh's Will in favour of Shamsheer Bahadur Singh was also put forward and finally in this Court an additional defence was raised that the sale-deeds of the 11th March 1921 and the 17th March 1921 were invalid under cl. (e) of s. 6 of the Transfer of Property Act. All these defences were more or less insisted upon in the course of the arguments advanced in this Court in support of the appeal but except two they were all disposed of by me in the course of the arguments and I heard the respondent's Counsel in reply only on those two grounds.

On the question of the pedigree, the finding of the Court below is absolutely unassailable. Apart from other evidence the pedigree is supported by the admission of the present appellants in the previous suit and I hold that it is fully proved.

On the question of custom, reliance is placed upon a passage in the statement of Sheo Singh (P. W. No. 9). The learned Additional Subordinate Judge has considered that statement carefully. I am of opinion that that statement is neither definite nor sufficient to prove the alleged custom. The only other evidence on which reliance was placed is the statement of Gangadin, one of the appellants in that case. In the absence of any other reliable and independent evidence Gangadin's statement cannot be accepted as sufficient proof of the custom in question. In agreement with the Court below I hold that the custom is not proved.

On the question of res judicata, much need not be said. The plaintiff's vendors were parties to the previous litigation but they were discharged on a compromise having been reached between the plaintiffs of that suit and Shamsheer Bahadur Singh. There is no question of the applicability of the rule of res judicata on those facts.

As to the Will of Jang Bahadur Singh, the Court below has discussed the evidence now produced by the defendants carefully and fully and in agreement with the opinion of that Court I hold that that Will is not proved.

The additional ground of appeal was not pressed.

It now remains to consider the two grounds which were seriously pressed on behalf of the appellants. The first of them is that the sales of the 11th March 1921 and the 17th March 1921 were opposed to public policy. The arguments submitted with reference to this ground proceeded on the lines that the earlier sale-deed is for a sum of Rs. 500 only out of which only Rs. 50 were paid in cash before the Sub-Registrar. The second sale is for a sum of Rs. 200 out of which Rs. 140 only were paid. The value of the share sold in each case was about Rs. 30,000. These facts show that the sales were merely gambling transactions and unconscionable. As to the value of the property the evidence is not clear. Some of the witnesses say that the sales were merely gambling transactions and unconscionable, the entire estate of Jang Bahadur Singh was worth between a lac and eighty thousand rupees. The evidence, however, shows one thing clearly enough that there were incumbrances of the value of over Rs. 40,000 and that besides those incumbrances Jang Bahadur Singh was heavily indebted. In the circumstances, therefore, it might well be considered that it was not a gamble but a prudent transaction on the part of the parties thereto. The argument of the learned Counsel is, in my opinion, entirely negatived by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Bhagwat Dayal Singh v. Debi Dayal Sahu (1). I, therefore, reject this ground of appeal.

The second ground urged was that the present defendants recovered the estate for the benefit of themselves and the entire body of heirs from the hands of a trespasser on payment Rs. 7,300 as part of the compromise and Rs. 295 as costs of the suit and that they are entitled to a contribution in proportion to the share, that is, 4/9th decreed to the plaintiff by the Court below. I am of opinion that this ground prevails. There is no evidence, indeed there is no defence, that the terms of the compromise were in any manner intended to injure the interests of the other heirs to the estate of Jang Bahadur Singh. Every thing points to the reasonableness of the compromise. Shamsheer Bahadur Singh had a Will in his favour which was accepted as genuine by the Court of Revenue. He had also possession of the estate sanctioned by the order of mutation made in his favour by the same Court. He had also challenged the pedigree on which the then plaintiffs relied to establish their relationship with Jang Bahadur Singh. The value of the property as admitted in the pleadings of that suit was Rs. 80,000. I hold, therefore, that the present appellants reasonably incurred the expenditure of Rs. 7,535 for recovering the entire estate from the hands of Shamsheer Bahadur Singh. The plaintiff, who now desires to recover 4/9th share of that estate, must contribute to the costs of the previous recovery of the estate.

I, therefore, order that the plaintiff shall pay to the defendants appellants a sum of Rs. 3,375 within six months from this date, otherwise his suit shall stand dismissed with reference to the properties now under appeal. I maintain the order of costs in the Court below but as regards the costs in this Court I direct that in any event the plaintiff-respondent shall pay to the defendants-appellants such costs as are taxable in relation to the sum of Rs. 3,375 only. The decree of the Court below will be modified in the light of the preceding order.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 773 OF 1923.

October 21, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Devadoss.

K. N. KRISHNASWAMI
BHAGAVATHAR—DEFENDANT No. 4—APPELLANT

N. A. THIRUMALAI IYER

AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage—Prior and subsequent mortgagees—Suit by prior mortgagee—Puisne mortgagee not made party—Sale in execution of mortgage-decree—Surplus proceeds after discharging prior mortgagee's claims—Puisne mortgagee, right of, whether confined to sale of property—Right to surplus proceeds in prior mortgagee's suit—Attaching creditor, rights of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, rr. 1, 13.

Where a prior mortgagee makes a puisne mortgagee a party to his suit and brings the property to sale, the puisne mortgagee can only proceed against the balance of the sale-proceeds in Court after satisfying the claim of the prior mortgagee. His right of suit against the mortgagor is taken away by his being made a party to the suit of the prior mortgagee. But where a puisne mortgagee is not made a party to the suit, a sale in execution of the prior mortgagee's decree cannot affect his title. In such a case he has an option either to proceed against the mortgaged property by bringing it to sale or to proceed against the sale-proceeds in Court in the prior mortgagee's suit after satisfying the claims of the prior mortgagee. [p. 411, col. 2.]

Case-law reviewed.

Although r. 1 of O. XXXIV of the C. P. C. requires all puisne mortgagees to be brought on the record in a prior mortgagee's suit, r. 13 of the Order does not restrict the right of a puisne mortgagee, not made a party to the suit, to claim any amount in Court on the ground that he has an interest in the mortgaged property. [p. 414, col. 1.]

The right of a subsequent mortgagee to the sale-proceeds of the mortgaged property is only subject to that of the prior encumbrancer, but he has a prior claim over any simple money creditor and the mortgagor. A simple money creditor who attaches the money in Court attaches it as the property of the mortgagor and the mortgagor certainly is not entitled to the money in Court in preference to the mortgagee whose debt he is liable to discharge. [p. 415, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the First Additional Subordinate Judge, Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 6 of 1922, (A. S. No. 220 of 1921, on the file of the District Court, Madura), preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Madura Town, in Original Suit No. 66 of 1920.

Messrs. S. Varadachariar and K. S. Jaya Rama Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswamy Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 mortgaged their property on 24th April 1912 by two deeds in favour of defendants Nos. 5 and 6 and defendant No. 7. First defendant executed a third mortgage in favour of the plaintiff on 5th September 1916. Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 brought O. S. No. 3 of 1908 impleading the 7th defendant-second mortgagee and obtained a mortgage decree. The third mortgagee, the plaintiff, was not a party to that suit. The property was sold in October 1919 and was purchased by the 4th defendant for Rs. 20,000. The 1st and 2nd mortgagees defendants Nos. 5 and 6 and 7 were paid the amount due on the mortgages. Eighth defendant who had obtained a money-decree against defendants Nos. 1 to 3 attached the surplus amount in Court and was paid by a cheque for Rs. 4,585. The plaintiff attempted to prevent the 8th defendant from cashing the cheque but his attempts were of no avail. The money now in Court is about Rs 1,000. The plaintiff has brought this suit on his mortgage and prays that the amount due to him on his mortgage may be paid out of the sum in Court and that the 8th defendant be directed to pay back into Court the sum drawn by him and that in the alternative the mortgaged property be sold for satisfying his debt and also prays for a personal decree against defendants Nos. 1 to 3. The District Munsif gave a mortgage-decree in favour of the plaintiff and held that the plaintiff was entitled to the surplus in Court realized in execution of the decree obtained by defendants Nos. 5 and 6, and that the 8th defendant must refund the amount drawn by him. Against this decree 8th defendant appealed. On appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff could only proceed against the property mortgaged to him and purchased by the 4th defendant and the proceeds of the sale held in execution of the decree in favour of the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 were not subject to the mortgage right of the plaintiff and the amount remaining after meeting the claims of the 1st and 2nd mortgagees, defendants Nos. 5, 6 and 7 was the property of the mortgagor and as such could not be proceeded against by the plaintiff. With regard to the amount in Court he held that it would be available to the plaintiff in case he is unable to realize his debt by the sale of the hypotheca. Fourth defendant has preferred this appeal.

The contention of Mr. Varadachari is that the sale proceeds in Court represent the mortgaged property and the plaintiff is entitled to proceed against the money in Court after the claims of the prior mortgagees have been satisfied. The surplus proceeds of the sale are sufficient to meet the claim of the plaintiff. It is urged that inasmuch as the plaintiff was not a party to the suit of the prior mortgagees, his right to proceed against the property is unaffected and the proceeds in Court have been realized by the sale of the mortgaged property and the lien of mortgage right against the property attaches itself to the money in Court. It is also urged that the plaintiff has an option either to proceed against the mortgaged property by bringing it to sale or to proceed against the surplus sale-proceeds in Court if the proceeds are sufficient to satisfy his claim. On the other hand, Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami

Iyer contends that the remedy of the puisne mortgagee who was not a party to the suit of the prior mortgagee is only against the mortgaged property. He could either redeem the prior mortgagees or ask for the sale of the property and bring the property to sale; but he cannot claim to be paid out of the surplus sale-proceeds in Court as they are the property of the mortgagor. He further contends that the sale was subject to the encumbrance of the plaintiff and what was sold represented the interest of the prior mortgagees as well as that of the puisne mortgagee together with the equity of redemption and the puisne mortgagee should only look to the purchaser for payment of his mortgage-debt and has no claim against the surplus in Court as his mortgage has been included in the sale in Court auction.

What are the rights of the puisne mortgagee who was not a party to the suit and the execution proceedings under the prior mortgage? If the prior mortgagee makes the puisne mortgagee a party and brings the property to sale, it is well settled that the puisne mortgagee could only proceed against the proceeds in Court after satisfying the claim of the prior mortgagee. In other words, his right of suit against the mortgagor is taken away by his being made a party to the suit of a prior mortgagee. Where a puisne mortgagee is not made a party to the suit of the prior mortgagee, does the puisne mortgagee lose any of his rights which he had as a mortgagee? When property is sold under a mortgage decree, what is sold is the interest of the mortgagor at the date of the mortgage on which the suit is brought. If the subsequent mortgagees are made parties to the suit, the sale in execution of the decree would convey the interest of the mortgagor as it was at the date of the suit. In other words, what is sold under such a decree is the property of the mortgagor and the proceeds of the sale have to be applied in discharge of all the encumbrances and the mortgagees have to be paid in the order of priority. But the sale cannot affect the title of a mortgagee who has not been made a party to the suit.

Section 75 of the Transfer of Property Act says that every second or other subsequent mortgagee has, so far as regards redemption, foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged property, the same rights against the prior mortgagee or mortgagees as his mortgagor has against such prior mortgagee or mortgagees and the same rights against the subsequent mortgagees as he has against his mortgagor. A puisne mortgagee has the right to redeem the prior mortgage or mortgages and has the right to bring the property of the mortgagor to sale and such a sale will be subject to the right of the prior mortgagee or mortgagees. A prior mortgagee cannot redeem the puisne mortgagee without his consent but if he acquires the equity of redemption, he will be entitled to redeem the puisne mortgagee. The plaintiff was not a party to O. S. No. 3 of 1918 and the sale in execution of the decree in that suit cannot take away the rights of the plaintiff as mortgagee. The contention of the appellant is that the plaintiff has an option either to proceed against the mortgaged property by bringing it to sale or to proceed against the sale-proceeds in Court after satisfying the claims of the prior mortgagees. The objection of the 8th defendant (respondent) is that the security for the debt cannot attach itself to the sale-proceeds in Court merely by the volition of the plaintiff; that the plaintiff's remedy is against the mortgaged property; and that when that mortgaged property was sold, it was sold subject to the plaintiff's encumbrance and he could not by making an election proceed against the money in Court realized by sale in which his own mortgage was included.

The contention that when property is sold in execution of a mortgage decree, it is sold subject to all the mortgages on it, is based upon two stray observations in Chinnu Pillai v. Venkatasamy Chettiar (1). Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter (as he then was) laid down two principles as governing the cases. The first is that what passes to a mortgagee is a right to sell the mortgagor's interest as it stood at the date of the mortgage subject only to this, that in his suit he must make all subsequent mortgagees parties if he wishes the sale to be free of their encumbrances. The other principle is that of any number of mortgagees, the later can always redeem the earlier, but cannot be compelled to do so and the earlier cannot redeem the later except by consent. Mr. Justice Srinivasa Iyengar in the course of his judgment observed: "To the suit of the second mortgagee the plaintiffs were not made parties. The second defendant's position is, therefore, that of an assignee of the first two mortgages and of the equity of redemption subject to the charge of the plaintiffs." At page 89* he further observed: "The second mortgagee is entitled to, and must bring a fresh suit against the purchaser in the first sale to sell the property to the satisfaction of the second mortgage-debt subject to which the first purchaser took." Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer contends that these observations make it quite clear that the sale in execution of a mortgage-decree is subject to the mortgage in favour of a puisne mortgagee and, therefore, the puisne mortgagee can only proceed against the property in the hands of the auction-purchaser and cannot proceed against the sale-proceeds in Court if a surplus remains after satisfying the claims of the prior mortgagee and that if it was possible to hold that the puisne mortgagee could proceed against the surplus assets in Court, the learned Judges would have said so. I do not think this is the correct way of interpreting the decision. The question whether the puisne mortgagee could proceed against the assets in Court was not raised before them. Nor were they called upon to consider whether the puisne mortgagee had any other right than that of proceeding against the mortgaged property. The question in that case was whether a puisne mortgagee could bring the property to sale after it was sold in execution of a decree obtained by a prior mortgagee. Mr. Justice Srinivasa Iyengar sets out the rights and liabilities of the mortgagees at the end of his judgment and the 7th principle he lays down is as follows:—"If the first mortgagee sues first without making the second mortgagee a party, the second mortgagee is not affected and can bring his own action for sale making the mortgagor a party, if there had been no sale in the first mortgagee's suit, or if there had been a sale, making the purchaser a party in his capacity of the ultimate owner of the equity of redemption." Reliance is also placed upon Mula Veetil Seethi v. Achuthan Nair (2). In that case a Full Bench of this Court held that the second mortgagee was entitled to the same rights as the first mortgagee with reference to his security having regard to the nature of his mortgage. After an exhaustive review of a number of decisions, certain propositions were considered as established. (1) A second mortgagee is entitled to the same rights as the first mortgagee with reference to his security, having regard to the nature of the mortgage. (2) The purchase of the equity of redemption after the first mortgage and the second mortgage both stand on the same footing with respect to their respective rights against the first mortgagee when they have not been impleaded in the suit instituted by him on his mortgage. (3) Those rights are unaffected by the suit of the first mortgagee to which they are not made parties and the decree passed therein and the sale made in pursuance thereof. (4) The purchaser in such a suit, whether it is a first mortgagee or a stranger, does not acquire the rights of the mortgagor as at the date of the first mortgage but only those that subsist in him at the date of the suit." This decision does not support the contention that the only remedy of the puisne mortgagee is against the mortgaged property. The words used by Mr. Justice Srinivasa Iyengar in Chinnu Pillai v. Venkatasamy Chettiar (1) subject, to the charge of the plaintiffs at page 20* can only mean subject to such rights as the puisne mortgagee has. It does not mean that the property is sold subject to the charge in favour of the puisne encumbrancer. The expression is not tantamount to saying that the purchaser has undertaken to pay the subsequent encumbrancer but means that the purchaser buys the property subject to the rights which a puisne encumbrancer has in regard to that property. In applying case-law to the case before us, care should be taken not to take one or two sentences of a judgment, apart from their setting and give to them a meaning which the Judge who delivered that judgment did not intend to convey or did not think it would be capable of conveying. It should also be borne in mind when the decisions are sought to be applied to new facts to see in what connection and with reference to what facts the decisions or rulings were given. The contention of Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer is that these two decisions support his contention by their silence as to the right of the puisne mortgagee to proceed against what is realized in execution of a decree obtained on a prior mortgage. I do not think that the Judges who decided them had that point argued before them nor do I think they intended to lay down the broad proposition that the puisne mortgagee's right is only to proceed against the property in the hands of the purchaser.

The facts in Barhamdeo Prasad v. Tarachand (3) are these:—Certain immoveable property was mortgaged in May 1887 to the appellants in that case. The same property was mortgaged in September 1887 to the respondents. Again in July 1889 the property was mortgaged to the appellants. The appellants brought a suit in 1890 impleading the respondents and obtained a decree in execution of which the property was sold. After satisfying the decree the sale-proceeds were deposited in Court. The appellants obtained a decree on their mortgage of 1889 without impleading the respondents as parties and in execution of that decree, without notice to the respondents they drew out of Court the surplus proceeds of the former sale. The respondents brought a suit in 1900 and claimed the money in Court. The question was whether that suit was within time. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that Art. 132 of the Limitation Act applied and that "The surplus sale-proceeds in execution of the previous mortgage-decree represented the security which the plaintiffs had under their mortgage of the 19th September 1887, and did not cease to represent that security owing to the fact that Ram Burhamdeo Prasad and Ram Sumran Prasad had wrongfully and in fraud of the plaintiffs drawn them out of the Court in which they had been deposited". They also held that they were not against the view that there was a charge in favour of the plaintiffs in the hands of the appellants. Though the respondents were parties to the suit of the first mortgage, they did not take the trouble to appear. Notwithstanding that, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the sale-proceeds in Court represented the security which they had and, therefore, they were entitled to proceed against the surplus money in Court. This decision was on appeal from the decision in Berhamdeo Pershad v. Tarachand (4) wherein two Judges of the Calcutta High Court differed as to the right of the puisne mortgagee to proceed against the assets realized in execution of a decree in a prior mortgagee's suit, and Sale, J., agreed with Henderson, J., in holding that when property is sold under a decree obtained by the first mortgagee the puisne encumbrancer has a right to follow the surplus sale-proceeds after the decree-holder's claim has been satisfied. These two cases lay down that the rights of the subsequent mortgagee who is not a party to the mortgage-decree under which the property is brought to sale is entitled to be paid out of the surplus sale-proceeds, if any, remaining after the decree holder is paid. In Gobind Lal Roy v. Ramjanam Misser (5), Lord Macnaghten in delivering the judgment of their Lordships observed in dealing with the contention of the Counsel for the appellant that the puisne mortgagee should only look to the proceeds realized by the sale under a decree obtained by a prior incumbrancer: "That, however, in their Lordships' opinion is not the necessary consequence of a sale under a decree obtained by a prior mortgagee against the mortgagor in a suit to which the puisne encumbrancers are not parties." It follows from this that the remedy of the puisne mortgagee against the property is not taken away by a sale.

It is well settled now that the puisne encumbrancer who is not a party to a mortgage decree under which the sale is held can bring the property again to sale; and from the ruling in Gobind Lal Roy v. Ramjanam Misser (5), it is also clear that the right of such mortgagee can also be enforced against the sale-proceeds in Court. After the consideration of a number of cases on the point, the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court held in Debendra Narain Roy v. Ramratan Banerjee (6), that a puisne mortgagee was entitled to sell the property secured by his mortgage where the property has been sold in execution of a decree obtained by the first mortgagee in a suit to which the puisne mortgagee was not a party.

In Padmanabh Bombshenvi v. Khemu Komar Naik (7), the facts were these: P held a mortgage on a certain land belonging to the 1st defendant. The mortgage was not registered. M obtained a registered mortgage on the same property from the 1st defendant, M obtained a decree upon this mortgage and applied for sale. F intervened but his claim was rejected on the ground that his mortgage was an unregistered mortgage. The land was sold by auction to the 4th defendant and the proceeds of the sale were applied partly in satisfaction of M's claim and a further sum of Rs. 164 was paid to one S who had obtained a money-decree against the mortgagor defendant No. 1. The balance of Rs. 103 was paid into Court and subsequently returned to No. 1. F sued for payment of his mortgage-debt out of the proceeds of sale or from defendants. The lower Court held that the plaintiff could not be called upon to refund the money which had been paid to him out of the proceeds and the plaintiff had a cause of action only against the mortgagor and not merely for the balance of Rs. 103-8-11 but for the whole claim. The High Court held that F was in the position of a puisne mortgagee and as second mortgagee he had a right over the balance in Court. Sargent, C. J., in delivering judgment of the Court observed: "Although plaintiff's earlier mortgage was postponed to that of defendant No. 2 by reason of its non-registration, the plaintiff still had the same rights over the balance as if he had been the second mortgagee in point of date. The proceeds which are paid into Court after satisfying the first encumbrance become payable first to the other encumbrancers (if any) and then to the mortgagee, and so it is virtually provided by s. 97 of the Transfer of Property Act which directs that 'the residue is to be paid to the person proving himself to be interested in the property sold.' The learned Chief Justice relied upon the decision of the Privy Council in Raja Kishendatt Ram v. Raja Mumtaz Ali Khan (8) to the effect that when the sale is effected under a power of sale in the mortgage-deed, the mortgagee exercising such power is a trustee so far as the surplus proceeds are concerned and held that the Court was not in a better position than he. When the mortgagee exercises his power of sale, he sells it free of encumbrances and the purchaser gets it free of all subsequent encumbrances. But when a Court sells the pro-property under a decree to which the subsequent mortgagee is not a party, it does not sell it free of the subsequent encumbrances. But that does not alter the principle of the decision. The attaching creditor in that case could not keep his hold on the money when the mortgagee came along, because the mortgagee had a prior claim by reason of his mortgage right. The mortgage right against the property is available against the proceeds into which it was converted. His right is only subject to that of the prior encumbrancer, but he has a prior claim over any simple money creditor and the mortgagor. A simple money creditor who attaches the money in Court attaches it as the property of the mortgagor and the mortgagor certainly is not entitled to the money in Court in preference to the mortgagee whose debt he is liable to discharge.

The facts in Karan Singh v. Ishtiaq Husain (9) are: A mortgaged the same property first to B and then by the separate mortgage deeds to C. B and C both sued on the mortgages, each party without impleading the other, and obtained decrees. B's decree was executed first. The mortgaged property was sold and was purchased by K. B's mortgage was paid up and considerable surplus money remained which was deposited in Court. C then endeavoured to execute his decree against the surplus sale-proceeds. He failed and the money was ultimately withdrawn by the mortgagor. C next proceeded with the execution of his decree against the property in the hands of K, the auction-purchaser, and K in order to retain possession paid up the amount of his decree. He then sued the representative of A to recover and the amount was paid. A Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that K was entitled to a decree. The learned Judges observed at page 269*: "In our opinion upon the sale of the property the security held by Mahabbat Bahadur and others was transferred to the surplus sale-proceeds which represented the mortgaged property." And they go on to say: "It cannot be said that the plaintiff purchased the property subject to the subsequent mortgage held by Mahabbat Bahadur and others. The sale was in execution of a decree obtained upon the prior mortgage held by Khurshed-un-nissa and others. The only defect in the plaintiff's title was that it was still open to the second mortgagees who had not been made parties to the first mortgagee's suit, to redeem the prior mortgage, but it cannot be said that the plaintiff did not acquire the property itself but only such rights as remained in the mortgagors and subject to the subsequent mortgages." This case is an authority for the position that the mortgagee's right to proceed against the surplus proceeds in Court is unfettered if he was not a party to the decree in execution of which the sale was effected. No doubt in that case it was found that the surplus proceeds were sufficient to meet the claims of the subsequent mortgagee, but that was not the ground upon which the learned Judges held that the mortgage right attached to the proceeds in Court.

It is urged by Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer that the Bombay and Calcutta decisions should be read in the light of the previous decisions of those Courts. His contention is that it was considered at one time that the first mortgagee alone could bring the property to sale and not any subsequent mortgagee and such sale was clear of all encumbrances and they naturally took the view that then the property was sold in execution of a decree obtained by a prior mortgagee, the puisne mortgagees could only look to the sale-proceeds to satisfy their decrees. I am unable to accept this contention. Whatever might have been the view before, the law is settled as to the right of the puisne mortgagee to proceed against the mortgaged property sold in execution of a mortgage decree obtained without his being a party to it and it cannot be said that the learned Judges overlooked such a well-established principle and laid down the ruling that the subsequent mortgagee could only look to the sale-proceeds realized in execution of the decree of a prior mortgagee for the satisfaction of his claim.

When the mortgaged property is sold and is converted into money, the right of the puisne mortgagee is not thereby lost. I am assuming in this connection that he was not a party either to the suit or to the execution proceedings in which the assets were realized. The property was his primary security and when that is converted into money, his security is not thereby lost, but is transferred from the property to the sale-proceeds, and his right is only subject to that of a prior mortgagee or mortgagees,

The objection to the puisne mortgagee proceeding against such assets is that the assets represented only the value of the equity of redemption remaining at the date of the sale and, therefore, the puisne mortgagee cannot proceed against the proceeds in Court. This argument overlooks the fact that the equity of redemption, whatever be its value, is liable either in the hands of the mortgagor or of a purchaser from him to satisfy the claim of the mortgagee. Suppose two items of property are mortgaged to two persons first to A and then to B, and if A brings a suit on his mortgage without impleading B and brings one of the items to sale and some surplus remains after satisfying A's decree, can it be said that B cannot proceed both against the other item not sold in execution of A's decree as well as the proceeds in Court? Take another instance; if a village or a large estate is mortgaged first to A and then to B, if A brings a suit and obtains a decree on his mortgage without impleading B and asks for a sale of the property, the Court would sell such portion of it as would be sufficient to meet A's claim. And if after a portion of the property is sold and A is satisfied and surplus remains, can it be said that B cannot proceed against the rest of the property as well as the surplus money in Court? His right is not in any way affected by the state in which he finds the property after the prior mortgagee's claim is satisfied. He could certainly proceed against the rest of the property covered by his mortgage as well as against the money in Court. The contention of Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer is that he cannot have a right to both the property as well as against the surplus money in Court in this case. But I do not think there is any objection in principle to the plaintiff proceeding both against the mortgaged property in the hands of the 4th defendant as well as against the surplus funds in Court. Reliance is placed upon the observation of Mr. Ghose in his well-known book of Mortgages, page 292, 5th Edition, for the contention that the property must be lost to the subsequent encumbrancer so as to enable him to proceed against the surplus sale-proceeds: "It is hardly necessary to point out that if the mortgaged property is converted into money under circumstances which would prevent the mortgagee from following such property, security would attach to the money unless the conversion is attributable to the default of the mortgagee." Section 73 gives the right to a mortgagee to proceed against the surplus sale-proceeds of a sale held on account of default of payment of revenue, provided the default was not occasioned by the mortgagee. This section applies only to sales for arrears of revenue and does not restrict in the case of sales under mortgage decrees the right of the mortgagee to the proceeds in Court, and cannot be interpreted as laying down the principle that it is only when the property cannot be pursued by the mortgagee that he cannot proceed against the money in Court. Reference is also made to a passage in Gour's Book on the Law of Transfer in British India, s. 1683. Referring to s. 73 of the Transfer of Property Act, he says the section is inaccurately worded, but it is evidently intended to provide only for cases in which the sale is made free from all encumbrances. In any other view, the mortgagee would have both the surplus as well as the right to follow the land in the hands of the purchaser and this confers on the mortgagee an additional security merely because the mortgaged property is brought to sale. It is difficult to see how it can be said that the mortgagee gets additional security when the property mortgaged to him is sold and the proceeds are held in Court. The property mortgaged to him was liable for his debt and if that property is sold and the sale-proceeds are held in Court it cannot be said that he gets additional security for his debt. Supposing in this case the plaintiff brings the property to sale and in consequence of the fall in price or the state of the money market, the mortgaged property goes to the prior encumbrancers or the price offered is just sufficient to cover the claim of the prior mortgagees, can it be said that he is to be without any remedy? The surplus sale-proceeds in Court cannot become the property of the mortgagor till all the mortgages are paid off. The sale-proceeds in Court cannot be said to represent the equity of redemption for the whole of the property is security; the so-called equity of redemption is not merely the right of the mortgagor to redeem the property, but it also represents the difference between the value of the property and the amount due on the mortgage, and the difference in value cannot be absolved from the liability for the mortgage amount. That being so, it is difficult to see how the sale-proceeds in

Court in this case can be said to be additional security for the debt of the plaintiff. When the property was sold, the 4th defendant purchased it, probably at its market value. But his title to the property is liable, to be defeated when the plaintiff brings a suit to enforce his remedy under the mortgage. The question is not what the purchaser pays for the property. Whether he pays full value or not he only buys the interest of the mortgagor and the property which he buys is security for the debt of the puisne mortgagee who was not a party to the decree under which he purchased. Whatever may be the number of mortgages created on the property, the mortgagor can only have the surplus after meeting the claims of all his mortgagees. Supposing a mortgagor mortgages the property to three different persons and supposing the first mortgagee brings the property to sale and the property is sold for a very large sum and after satisfying the claim of the first mortgagee the surplus money is drawn out by the mortgagor and supposing the second mortgagee who was not a party to the prior suit brings the property to sale without impleading the third mortgagee and sells the property and is not able to realize his debt in the second sale after meeting the claim of the first mortgagee, what is to become of the third mortgagee? Is the third mortgagee to go without any remedy for the simple reason that the mortgagor has withdrawn the money from Court which was subject to the mortgage rights of the second and third mortgagees? To hold that the mortgagor is entitled to the surplus money in Court in such a case would be going against the law of mortgages under which the property as well as cash into which the property is converted is security for the debt due on the mortgages. In this case, therefore, there is no such thing as additional security by the mere fact that the property was sold and the sale-proceeds are more than sufficient to meet the claims of the prior mortgagees. There is no warrant in law for holding that in such a case as this that the sale-proceeds are additional security. After a careful consideration of the cases quoted at the bar, I could not find any thing in equity or in law which militates against the right of the puisne mortgagee in a case like this to proceed both against the property in the hands of the purchaser as well as against the sale-proceeds in Court.

It is not necessary in this case for the plaintiff to proceed against the property, as the surplus proceeds in Court were more than sufficient to satisfy the claims of the plaintiff under the mortgage. The 8th defendant who withdrew the money from Court must pay it back as the amount was subject to the mortgage rights of the plaintiff and the 8th defendant who obtained only money-decree against the mortgagor could not claim any preference over the plaintiff.

It is contended for the respondent that O. XXXIV, r. 13 can only apply to cases where all the mortgagees are parties. Under the C. P. C., O. XXXIV, r. 1 all persons having an interest on the mortgage security or in the right of redemption should be joined as parties. Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer's contention is that O. XXXIV, r. 13 could only apply to cases where a subsequent encumbrance is party to the suit and to the decree in execution of which the sale-proceeds have been realized, and that when a puisne mortgagee is not a party to the suit; r. 13 cannot apply. No doubt O. XXXIV, r. 1 requires all mortgagees to be brought on record but that would not take away the right of puisne mortgagee to claim any amount in Court on the ground that he has an interest in the mortgaged property. For the last clause of r. 13 (1) says "The residue (if any) shall be paid to the person proving himself to be interested in the property sold." It does not say that such person should be a party to the suit. All it says is that after meeting the legitimate demands mentioned in cls. 1 to 4 the balance shall be dealt with in a certain way and the last clause does not restrict it to persons who are parties to the suit in which the assets are realized.

Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer next contended that in this case the property was sold subject to the mortgage. Exhibit II the sale certificate does not support this contention. Though the hypothecation in favour of the plaintiff is mentioned therein it is distinctly stated that that hypothecation is subsequent to that of the plaintiffs in that suit and does not affect them. It is difficult to see how this can be construed into a sale subject to the encumbrance in favour of the plaintiff. What was sold under the decree in O. S. No. 3 of 1918 was the right of the mortgagor as it stood at the date of the second mortgage. This is clear from all the authorities and it is unnecessary to go over the ground again. Exhibit II cannot be construed into meaning that the sale was subject to the encumbrance in favour of the plaintiff.

Another point was urged on behalf of the respondent that the present appeal is not by the plaintiff but by the purchaser and, therefore, incompetent. It is urged that the purchaser who is the 4th defendant has no right to come in and ask that the money in Court be paid to the plaintiff. Inasmuch as the plaintiff is also a party to the appeal this Court has power to pass a proper decree in a case like this. It is unnecessary that the 4th defendant should first pay up the amount due to the plaintiff on his mortgage and then proceed against the 8th defendant and defendants Nos. 1 to 3 as was done in Karan Singh v. Ishtiaq Husain (9). This will only multiply proceedings in Court. The Court has power in order to avoid further litigation to give a decree in favour of the plaintiff.

The last contention is that the 8th defendant could not be compelled to pay into Court the amount drawn by him as there was neither a charge nor a trust in favour of the plaintiff. I have already held that the plaintiff had a mortgage right over the money in Court. The 8th defendant is bound to pay back the money into Court which was subject to the mortgage right of the plaintiff.

In the result I set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and restore that of the District Munsif. The 8th defendant will pay the costs of the 4th defendant in this Court as well as in the lower Appellate Court. The other parties will bear their own costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 8—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 92, 93—Preliminary decree for redemption—Payment not made on due date—Mortgagee, possession of, if adverse—Payment after due date—Terms, imposition of.

The right of a mortgagor to pay the amount due under a preliminary decree for redemption is a continuous right, and can be exercised at any time until a final decree for sale is passed. The possession of the mortgagee does not become adverse if the mortgagor does not deposit the amount fixed by the preliminary decree on the due date [p. 419, cols. 1 & 2.]

A Court has no power to impose terms on a mortgagor who comes forward to make payment of money due under a preliminary decree for redemption after the due date, when the mortgagee has taken no action himself. [p. 419, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—Bhawani Prasad the plaintiff was mortgagor of the property in suit which was mortgaged to one Mahadeo Singh, deceased husband of the defendant Musammatt Ram Rati. The other defendant Sahdeo has interest in the mortgagee rights. Bhawani Prasad formerly sued for redemption of this mortgage and obtained preliminary decree from the Trial Court of the Munsif of Sultanpur on 17th August 1908. The dispute between the parties at that time related to certain deeds of further charge, payment of which was claimed by the mortgagee at the time of the redemption of the usufructuary mortgage to which the suit related. The Trial Court had held in favour of the defence. The usufructuary mortgage which was sought to be redeemed secured a sum of Rs. 460 and the decree was passed for redemption on payment of Rs. 1,243 with costs Rs. 29-8-0, total Rs. 1,272-8-0.

Bhawani Prasad appealed and objected to the Trial Court's order relating to the payment of the deeds of further charge. A compromise was effected between the parties on 20th November, 1908, and they agreed that redemption may be obtained on payment of Rs. 949 in the following Jeth of 1316 Fasli corresponding to May-June, 1909. On the 24th November 1908, a preliminary decree for redemption was passed by the Appellate Court which directed that the decree of the Trial Court should be amended in two particulars (1) the amount was to be altered from Rs. 1,272-8-0 to Rs. 949 and (2) the date of payment from 17th February 1909 to Jeth 1316 Fasli.

On 25th May, 1923, Bhawani Prasad tendered the amount of Rs. 949 and prayed to the Trial Court for the passing of a final decree for redemption under O. XXXIV, r. 8 (1). The defendants objected that the plaintiff had lost the right of redemption because no money having been deposited by him on the due date the possession of the defendants became adverse and had continued to be such for a period of over 12 years. In the alternative it was pleaded that interest at the bond rates of the bonds of further charge should be allowed up to date if the plaintiff is permitted to redeem.

The Trial Court of the Munsif of Sultanpur rejected the objections and passed a final decree for redemption.

On appeal the learned Judge of the Appellate Court held that under the compromise the decree passed was not a preliminary decree for redemption but a totally different kind of decree under which the plaintiff was bound to redeem on a certain date or in default lose his right of redemption.

This is a second appeal. Having regard to the appellate decree of 24th November, 1908, I consider the argument of the lower Appellate Court to be devoid of any substance. It appears to me that the Court of Appeal in November 1908 only modified two terms of the preliminary decree and did not pass a decree which was something different from a preliminary decree for redemption. The decree of the 24th November, 1908, is subject to all the provisions mentioned in r. 8 of O. XXXIV. Instead of one preliminary decree the Appellate Court substituted another preliminary decree. The period for payment was extended to Jeth 1316 Fasli by agreement between the parties because that day happened to be removed from 24th November, 1908, by a period of 6 months approximately.

When such was the preliminary decree there can be no doubt that the plaintiff would be entitled to obtain a final decree for redemption.

In a judgment delivered by me in 1921 [Banke Bihari Lal v. Ghani Ahmad (1)] I considered the question of limitation and held that the right of a mortgagor to pay the amount due under a preliminary decree was a continuous right and could be exercised at any time until a final decree for sale was passed. In that case I considered the provisions of ss. 92 and 93 of the Transfer of Property Act. In my opinion the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 8 do not limit the right of the mortgagor in any direction from what it was after the passing of a decree under the Transfer of Property Act. Clause (1) of r. 8 lays down that where on or before the date fixed the plaintiff pays into Court the amount declared due under the preliminary decree together with subsequent cost the Court shall pass a decree ordering the plaintiff to be put in possession of the property. It is nowhere laid down that the plaintiff shall be debarred from paying the amount at any subsequent time so long as the mortgagee has not taken action under cl. 4. It is not laid down that the mortgagor before paying money is to make any application to Court, so the provisions of Art. 181 of the Limitation Act would not apply to the payment of money.

The learned Counsel for the defence desired that the plaintiff should be put upon terms before he could make a deposit. I do not think that the Court has any such power. The proviso that the Court may upon good cause shown and upon such terms, if any, as it thinks fit, from time to time postpone the date fixed for payment applies only to cl. 4 and not to cl. 1 of r. 8. Where a mortgagee applies that the mortgaged property be sold on non-payment of the money by the mortgagor within the time fixed, the Court may, under this proviso, extend the time and put the mortgagor on terms. When the mortgagee has taken no action himself the proviso would not apply when the mortgagor makes payment of the money due under the decree.

I do not think that the respondent's learned Counsel is justified in raising a plea on the score of equity. The mortgagee was given the right to get the property sold when payment was not made in Jeth 1316 Fasli and it was due to his negligence that he has suffered the loss in interest. No doubt he has lost interest on the sum of Rs. 489 because he has been holding possession in lieu of Rs. 460 only. This loss is due to his own negligence in not taking action at the proper time. Possibly he was hoping to cling on to the property in default of his taking action. Thus, in my opinion, no equity arises in his favour.

I set aside the decree of the lower Appel-

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Chit-fund, whether lottery—Suit on pro-note passed by one chit-fund holder to another, maintainability of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 294A.

Plaintiff and defendant formed a partnership to promote a "chit-fund". A capital fund of Rs. 500 was raised from 500 subscribers subscribing each one rupee per mensem. At the end of the month there was a drawing by lot and the subscriber who drew the ticket was paid Rs. 50 and his connection with the transaction forthwith ceased. This process was repeated month after month till the end of the 49th month. At the close of the 50th month each of the remaining subscribers was paid Rs. 50 and the stakeholders divided the profit and the fund was dissolved. In settlement of the accounts of the partnership, defendant executed a pro-note in favour of the plaintiff. In a suit to recover the amount of the note:

Held, (1) that the right of the subscribers to the return of their contributions not having been made a matter of risk or speculation the transaction was not a lottery and did not fall within the mischief of s. 294A of the Penal Code; [p. 424, col. 1.]

(2) that the plaintiff's suit was, therefore, maintainable. [p. 422, col. 2.]

Per Ramesam, J.—A chit-fund the main object of which is the promotion of co-operation, prudence and thrift ought to be regarded as legitimate even though there is an element of chance. If by the time a society of this kind becomes known to the public, all its members are ascertained and there is no invitation to any member of the public to join it, it cannot be said that any person keeps a lottery office, at which the public are invited to join and pay, within the meaning of s. 294A of the Penal Code. [p. 421, cols. 1 & 2.]

In other words, it is not every lottery that constitutes an offence, but it is the keeping of a lottery office which is a standing invitation to the public that constitutes the offence. [p. 421, col. 2.]

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J.—In a transaction like the one mentioned above, while chance determines the disposal of the interest earned, there is absolute certainty with reference to the distribution of the capital fund itself. The dominant feature of the transaction is that it enables a large number to gradually lay by money and receive their savings in a lump sum and the scheme is in their case an incentive to thrift. [p. 423, col. 2.]

A transaction is not necessarily a lottery simply because a matter of whatever kind is agreed to be decided by lot. [p. 424, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Ramesam, J.—The facts of the case have been stated by my learned brother whose judgment I had the advantage of perusing and they need not be repeated. I will only observe that the suit is not between the subscribers inter se or by a subscriber against the stake-holder. The stake-holder of the suit chit-fund is a partnership consisting of the plaintiff and the defendant and the object of the suit is to recover the monies due to the plaintiff on the closing of the partnership. Unless the object of the main transaction is to commit an offence made punishable by the Indian Penal Code, there can be no objection to enforcing the terms of a contract of that kind which is collateral to another transaction even when the main transaction itself is merely void (as where it amounts to a wager) and cannot be enforced: see Shibho Mal v. Lachman Das (1), Bhola Nath v. Mul Chand (2), Chekka Venkataswamy v. Gajjila Nagabhushanam (3) which are cases of principal and agent. Cases of partnership are illustrated by Sharp v. Taylor (4) (case of fraud on the American Law and on the English Navigation Laws), Johnson v. Lansley (5), Beeston v. Beeston (6) and Brookman v. Mather (7) and several others ending with Jeffery & Co.

v. Bamford (8). These are mostly cases of betting partnerships.

This leads to the question whether any offence has been committed in the formation and conduct of the main transaction, i. e., the chit-fund. If it is an offence, it must be one punishable under s. 294A of the Indian Penal Code. This section and Act V of 1844 are both founded on the terms of 12 Geo. 3 ch. 119 and 4 Geo. IV ch. 60. I agree with my learned brother in thinking that there is nothing to distinguish the present case in principle from Iyyanar Kone v. Bidoomada Kone (9), Kamakshi Achari v. Appava Pillai (10) and Vasudevan Nambudri v. Mammud (11). The cases in Sankunni v. Ikkora Kutti (12) and Nagappa Pillai v. Arunachalam Chetty (13) are not of much help as there is not much discussion on the question of what constitutes lottery.

The word 'lottery' is not defined either in the Indian Penal Code or Act V of 1844 nor in the English Statutes. A definition has been attempted in Volume XV of the Halsbury's Laws of England, s. 605, p. 299, apparently with reference to the decided cases but, when the cases are examined we are landed into difficulties. The only decision of the House of Lords available is Wallingford v. Mutual Society (14), the facts of which have been fully stated by my learned brother. The observations of the Lord Chancellor (Lord Selborne) and Lords Blackburn, Hatherley, and Watson (vide my learned brother's judgment) on the question whether the transaction was illegal under the Lottery Acts are very brief. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XV, p. 300, the case is cited as authority for the proposition "when the scheme has for its object the carrying on of a legitimate business, the facts that it provides for the distribution of its profits in certain events by lots will not vitiate the scheme." If so all chit-funds, the main object of which is the promotion of co-operation, prudence and thrift ought to be regarded as legitimate even though there is an element of chance and this is apparently the ratio decidendi of Iyyanar Kone v. Bidoomada Kone (9) and Kamakshi Achari v. Appava Pillai (10). In Chitty on Contracts, the opposite opinion of Jessel, M. R. in Sykes v. Beadon (15) was regarded as overruled by the decision of the House of Lords in Wallingford v. Mutual Society (14). It seems to me that Lord Selborne's reason for holding that the society was not affected by the Lottery Act is indicated in the sentence "The other Act relied on had reference to persons who kept lottery offices at which the public were invited to pay for lottery tickets; and that Act could have no application to this case." If by the time a society of this kind became known to the public, all its members were ascertained and there is no invitation to any member of the public to join it, it cannot be said that any person keeps a lottery office at which the public were invited to join and pay, within the meaning of the English Acts or s. 294-A of the Indian Penal Code. In other words, it is not that every lottery constitutes an offence, but the keeping of a lottery office which is a standing invitation to the public that constitutes the offence. In Stoddart v. Sagar (16) a case of "coupon competition" advertised in a newspaper, the coupons being filled up by purchasers of the newspapers with the names of the horses likely to come first, second, third and fourth in a race, Pollock, B. and Wright, J., held that the facts do not show anything amounting to a lottery. No reasons were given. But the cases cited in the arguments show that it was regarded as a case where the success depended not on mere chance but on some skill. If so, the case does not help us. So also the decisions in Caminada v. Hulton (17) and Hall v. Cox (18).

In the present case there is nothing to show when and how the 500 subscribers joined the fund, and whether there was any invitation to the public to join it and an office was kept for the purpose. If so, there is no offence under s. 294-A of the Indian Penal Code. In the case of Reg. v. Pearson (19) (the facts of which are stated by my learned brother), the Public Prosecutor conceded that, if the competition was confined to meteorological savants, there might have been no offence. Sir John Bridge thought that it was a pure lottery so far as those persons were concerned to whom the scheme was addressed. It is unnecessary for me now to discuss the soundness of the distinction.

In Taylor v. Smetten (20) (the facts of which are stated by my learned brother), Hawkins, J., says "although it was admitted by the respondent that the tea was good and worth all the money, it is impossible to suppose that the aggregate prices charged and obtained for the packages did not include the aggregate prices of the tea and the prizes." In other words, the price paid for each packet included something more than the proper price of the tea. If so, the aggregate of such amount was distributed unequally between the purchasers. There was an invitation to the public to purchase and any indefinite member may purchase. It is certainly a lottery. But, as it is also not clear that there was anything in the nature of prizes and as it is possible that every purchaser might have been cheated, it is worse than a lottery in which at least some get prizes. Barclay v. Pearson (21) is also a case where the parties were invited to join the competition and no limits were placed on the members that might join and the result did not depend on skill. So far it contained the elements of a lottery. But if each competitor paid no more than the proper price of the newspaper (as to the ascertaining of which there can be no difficulty), he paid nothing for the chance and the prizes were paid only out of the large profits realized by the proprietor of the newspaper by the increased circulation. I find some doubts as to why it should be held to be a lottery, as the case falls within the dictum of Darling, J., in the next case. In Willis v. Young (22), Lord Alverston, Chief Justice, held it was a lottery. Darling, J., argued that if the chances of a prize were obtained wholly gratuitously, the scheme could not be a lottery. But, on the facts of the case, it is not necessary, that the holders of the medals including the successful ones should be purchasers of the telegraph. It is possible that none of the medal-holders is a purchaser and the actual purchasers of the telegraph who have paid no more than the proper price might have purchased without any knowledge of the medals or the chance of a prize connected with them. The case presents to me some difficulties. The case of R. v. Harris (23) presents to me the same difficulty. Though Montagu Smith, J., begins the judgment by saying "Whether the full value of the shilling was or was not received by the subscribers," the inference is irresistible, as pointed out by Hawkins, J., in Taylor v. Smetten (20), that the shilling included more than the price of the goods sold. If so, it is a lottery. If not, the observation of Montagu Smith, J., would be in conflict with Darling, J.'s dictum in Willis v. Young (22). I am content to follow the decision of the House of Lords in Wallingford v. Mutual Society (14) and hold that the chit-fund before us is not a lottery and also even if it is, no offence under s. 294 A of the Indian Penal Code has been committed.

That being so, the suit is maintainable. The appeal is allowed, the decrees of the Courts below will be reversed and the suit remanded for disposal according to law. The appellant will be entitled to his costs here and in the lower Appellate Court; in the First Court the costs will abide the result.

The appellant will be entitled to a refund of Court-fee.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The plaintiff has filed this suit for the recovery of a sum of money due to him on the footing of a promissory note executed by the defendant. The suit is resisted on the ground that the plaintiff and the defendant were as partners engaged in a lottery, that the accounts of the partnership were settled, that the note was executed for the amount which was found due by the defendants to the plaintiff and that as lotteries are prohibited by law, the plaintiff should not be permitted to enforce his promissory note. The nature of the transaction may be briefly set forth. The plaintiff and the defendant promoted what is described as a "chit-fund." A capital fund of Rs. 500 a month is raised by 500 subscribers subscribing each one rupee per mensem. At the end of the month there is a drawing by lot and the subscriber who draws the ticket is paid Rs. 50 and his connection with the transaction forthwith ceases. This process is repeated month after month till the end of the 49th month. It will be seen that by this time, 49 subscribers will have drawn the tickets and received each a sum of Rs. 50 and that they have consequently severed their connection with the fund. At the close of the 50th month, each of the remaining subscribers is paid Rs. 50 and the stake-holders divide the profit and the fund is dissolved.

Let me now examine what the essential features of this transaction are.

(1) There is no uncertainty in regard to the sum which each subscriber receives. It is clearly understood from the start that every member will be paid Rs. 50. He receives neither more nor less. The sum each subscriber gets is thus fixed.

(2) No subscriber takes the risk of losing any portion of the amount subscribed. The utmost that any subscriber may be required to contribute is Rs. 50. Each subscriber gets the same back.

(3) The element, therefore, that is generally present in a lottery or a wagering transaction, namely, that loss is occasioned to one or more, does not exist in this transaction.

But it may be asked, so far as the first 49 are concerned, they get more than what they pay, how is this made possible? The fund as it comes in is invested and earns interest. The aggregate amount of interest is utilised in paying the first 49 members the excess over what they contribute and there is still a surplus which leaves to the stake-holders a fair margin of profit. There is some element of chance in regard to the first 49 subscribers. The member who draws the first lot would in return for the one rupee that he pays in gets Rs. 50. The subscriber who draws the second lot pays Rs. 2 and gets Rs. 50. This goes on until the 49th member who subscribes as much as Rs. 49 and receive Rs. 50. Then chance ceases to play any part in regard to the remaining 451 members who receive at the end of the 50th month each a sum of Rs. 50. What the 449 members lose is the interest upon their money and what the first 49 members gain is a portion of the interest thus lost by the other subscribers. The remaining portion of the interest earned is retained by the stake-holders as their profit.

The fact that emerges from this description is that while chance determines the disposal of the interest earned, there is absolute certainty with reference to the distribution of the capital fund itself. Though it may be said that it is the small element of chance that tempts some to join the fund, the dominant feature of the transaction is that it, enables a large number to gradually lay by money and receive their savings in a lump sum and the scheme is in their case an incentive to thrift.

There is another feature of the scheme to which I may advert. Under r. 8 of the chit-fund rules, any of the subscribers is entitled to obtain by way of loan, after being subscriber for 7 months, an amount not exceeding $\frac{3}{4}$ th of the total contribution made by him on executing a promissory note agreeing to re-pay the sum with interest at 12-annas per cent. per mensem. If a larger amount is required, there is a provision under which it may be advanced under proper safeguards. Rule 6 provides that when the member draws his amount, the sum due by him on account of loan is to be deducted and the balance alone is to be paid to him.

In my opinion there is nothing to distinguish this case in principle from Iyyanar Kone v. Bidoomada Kone (9), Kamakshi Asari v. Appavu Pillai (10) and Vasudevan Nambudri v. Mammod (11).

The transactions in all the three cases were similar and they may thus be described in the form of an illustration. A stake-holder promotes a chit-fund with 20 subscribers, each subscriber paying a monthly subscription of Rs. 10. The fund lasts for 20 months. The total subscription for one month is thus Rs. 200. Each subscriber in turn is paid the entire sum of Rs. 200, the order in which the members are to get the sum being determined by lot. The subscriber to whom the sum is paid executes a bond in favour of the stake-holder agreeing to pay regularly future subscriptions as they fall due. In the case decided by the Sudder Udatat, three learned Judges expressed the opinion that the scheme is a provident and beneficial arrangement under which each member derives the advantage of having the use in his turn of a round sum, the only thing determined by lot, being the turn in which that advantage shall be enjoyed. The learned Judges observed that the latter circumstance did not, in their opinion, bring the case within the scope of Act V of 1844 an Act for the suppression of lotteries.

The material portion of the Act runs thus:—

“All lotteries not authorised by Government shall, from and after the 31st March 1844, be deemed and hereby declared common and public nuisances and against law.”

In Kamakshi Achari v. Appavu Pillai (10), Scotland, C. J., and Frere, J., based their decision on the ground:

“It is not the case of a few out of a number of subscribers obtaining prizes by lot.”

The learned Judges further say that the right of the subscribers to the return of their contributions is not made a matter of risk or speculation. They hold that a transaction is not necessarily a lottery within either the spirit or the letter of the Act, simply because a matter of whatever kind is agreed to be decided by lots. The Act that was in force was still the same Act V of 1844.

In Vasudevan Nambudri v. Mammod (11), Shepherd, O. C. J., and Moore, J., upheld the transaction on the ground that the law as laid down in Kamakshi Achari v. Appavu Pillai (10) was followed without question for 35 years and the introduction of s. 294-A into the Indian Penal Code made no difference.

Wallingford v. Mutual Society (14), a decision of the House of Lords, is a very useful authority. The object of the Mutual Society was to accumulate capital by means of monthly subscriptions from members, to advance such capital to the members in rotation and ultimately to divide among the members all the profits that had been made. An “appropriation certificate” was issued to every member on his entering the society and certified his title to receive an advance out of the funds of the society and to participate in its profits. “The appropriations” or advances were to be made in the following manner. By Art. 27 it was declared that “appropriations” shall be allotted in two ways. The first and every fourth one thereafter by drawing, free of any premium or interest, while those intermediate shall be allotted to the member or members tendering the highest premium for the same respectively. The appellant took up appropriation certificates and obtained advances and did not make the required re-payments. In an action against him he pleaded among other things that the constitution of the society itself was illegal as its promised benefits were to be given to the members by drawings which made the society unlawful under the Lottery Acts. The Lord Chancellor (Lord Selbourne) observes that one of the acts relied upon had reference to gambling transactions only and the transaction before the House was not a gambling transaction; the other act relied on had reference to persons who kept lottery offices at which the public were invited to pay for lottery tickets and that act could have no application to the case. The learned Lord observed that no case was made worthy of a moment's consideration in support of the contention that the transactions were illegal under the Lottery Acts. Lord Blackburn, Lord Hatherley and Lord Watson were equally emphatic in their opinion that the plea was not in the slightest degree made out.

A contrary opinion was no doubt expressed by Jessel, M. R., in Sykes v. Beadon (15). There was a combination formed on the principle of investing the subscriptions of the members and dividing the capital fund and profits by means of certificates convertible by annual drawings by lot into preferable divided bonds bearing interest with bonus. The learned Master of the Rolls at page 190* observes:

“If that is not a lottery it is very difficult, at all events, to my mind, to understand what a lottery is. It is called a division by lot, which means lottery. It says that the selections of certificates shall be by lot, and that is to be done in the ordinary way, by chance, and the benefits, as I said before, are unequal.”

Chitty in his treatise on Contracts at page 805 (17th Edition 1921) seems to suggest that the opinion of Jessel, M. R., cannot now prevail in view of the latter decision of the House of Lords.

A chit-fund of the description with which we are called on to deal was held to be illegal by Phillips, J., in Sankunni v. Ikkora Kutti (12) and Coleridge, J., was of the opinion that this case required re-consideration and upon a reference by him, Krishnan and Odgers, JJ., held in Nagappa Pillai v. Arunachalam Chetty (13) that such a scheme was illegal although the learned Judges differed on another point.

The cases relied on by the defendant are easily distinguishable.

In Taylor v. Smetten (20), each packet of tea sold contained a coupon entitling the purchaser to a prize and although the tea was worth the money paid for it, it was held that the transaction was a lottery. The prizes were of an infinite variety and were not made known before the sale of the tea. The intending purchaser purchased the tea and the coupon together, whatever the value of the coupon might turn out to be. There was no doubt that in buying the tea, he also took the chance of getting something of value in the nature of a prize. It might turn out to be anything. The price paid was not merely for the tea but also for this chance. The seller only undertook that he would give away the prize; but the prize might be anything; it might not be worth half a penny. In this case, it is obvious that loss was hazarded by each purchaser of tea packet.

Barclay v. Pearson (21) related to a missing word competition and the scheme of it was that the competitors were to cut out coupons in a newspaper and fill in the word missing from a paragraph, the missing words being in the hands of a third party, enclosed in a sealed envelope. The whole of the money received in entrance was to be divided equally amongst those competitors who filled in the missing word correctly. Here the distribution takes place by chance, the fund itself being the contribution of all the competitors.

In Reg v. Pearson (19), a newspaper proprietor announced that he intended to carry on a Weather Forecast Competition and people were invited to predict the number of hours of bright sunshine and the number of rainy days. The competitors who most nearly forecasted the weather were to obtain the prizes. Sir John Bridge observed that the transaction was purely a lottery so far as those persons were concerned to whom the scheme was addressed. It was a competition of chance and not of skill. If the competition was confined to meteorological savants the case might be different. The competition was held to be quite as mischievous as the missing word competition. It is clear that while many lose, a few win the prizes and that the fund out of which the prizes come is that contributed by the losing as well as the winning competitors.

In Willis v. Young (22), the Proprietors of the Weekly Telegraph devised a still more ingenious scheme. They caused medals to be distributed gratuitously among the members of the public. Each medal bore the words "Keep this, it may be worth hundred pounds. See the Weekly Telegraph to-day". The winning numbers which were arbitrarily selected were published in the newspaper. It was not necessary that the holder of the medal should purchase a copy of the paper as information as to the winning numbers could be obtained without charge at the office of the newspaper. The object of the proprietors was attained and the circulation of the paper increased considerably. The point I am trying to make is thus brought out very clearly by Lord Alverstone, C. J.: "The money for the prizes, however, comes out of the receipts of the respondents, and these in their turn come, to a considerable extent, from the people who buy the paper, although no doubt the advertisements may bring in a considerable sum. The persons who receive the medals, therefore, contribute collectively (though each individual may not contribute) sums of money which constitute the fund from which the profits of the newspaper, and also the money for the prize winners in this competition come" Darling, J., expresses the same idea very shortly thus:—"In the present instance all chances are paid for in the mass by the general body of purchasers of the paper, although an individual purchaser may not pay for his chance".

In R. v. Harris (23), the scheme judged by this test is clearly a lottery. The fund out of which the prizes came was contributed by the whole body of subscribers and it is obvious that the ticket-holders did not in all cases obtain full value for the shilling which each purchaser of the ticket was required to pay, even assuming that the entire £ 250 was distributed in "bonuses".

In the present case, however, as I have shown, the prizes paid to the first 49 members are not paid out of the contributions made by the subscribers; the money for the prizes comes out of the interest earned on the capital fund contributed. The cases cited for the defendant are thus clearly distinguishable.

A view different from what I am disposed to take was no doubt taken as I have said in Sankunni v. Ikkora Kutti (12), but the respondent against whom the decision was given was unrepresented and the attention of the Court was not drawn to Wallingford v. Mutual Society (14). Nor does it appear that this case was cited before the Bench that decided Nagappa Pillai v. Arunachalam Chetty (13).

In my opinion, therefore, the transaction is not a lottery and the plaintiff is entitled to judgment.

In the view I have taken, it is unnecessary to deal with the contention based on the distinction between void and illegal transactions, or to discuss the group of cases of which Johnson v. Lansley (5), Beeston v. Beeston (6) and Shibho Mal v. Lachman Das (1) are examples.

I agree with my learned brother in the order proposed by him.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This Miscellaneous
Appeal (No. 180 of 1924) and the S. A. No.
1016 of 1924 are directed against the same decision of the Court below. There is also an application under s. 115, C. P. C., filed by the appellant against the same order. The explanation is that in the present unsettled state of the law the appellant could not decide on the proper procedure.

The miscellaneous appeal was first heard and the learned Advocate for the respondent took a preliminary objection on the ground that no appeal lay. The facts of the case are that the plaintiff-respondent brought a suit for recovery of the value of certain goods which he had despatched from one Railway Station to another on the Bengal Nagpur Railway but the goods were not delivered to the consignee. He accordingly raised the present suit and in the plaint filed the name of the defendant was given as "Agent of the Bengal Nagpur Railway Saheb Bahadur". The defendant Mr. Young, who was the agent of the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company at the time, appeared and one of the objections that he took was that the frame of the suit was bad. He also took other objections under ss. 75 and 77 of the Indian Railways Act on the grounds that the plaintiff had not declared the value of the goods as he was legally bound to do at the time of the consignment and that notice under s. 77 of the Indian Railways Act had not been properly served. The learned Munsif in the Trial Court without going into the merits of the case held that the suit as framed was not maintainable. He also found against the plaintiff on the objections under ss. 75 and 77 of the Indian Railways Act. In this view he dismissed the plaintiff's suit. There was an appeal by the plaintiff to the learned District Judge of Bankura who considered the first question only, namely, whether the frame of the suit was defective and being of opinion that the intention of the plaintiff was to sue the Railway Company he directed the plaint to be amended and the suit to proceed. The learned District Judge did not consider the decision of the Trial Court under ss. 75 and 77 of the Indian Railways Act. In the view which the learned Judge took he set aside the decree of the Trial Court and passed the following order: "The case will go back to the lower Court for amendment of the title of the defendant Company and for a fresh trial. The costs of the Court will abide the result of the suit. The Court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal should be returned to the appellant". Against this judgment the appellant has preferred this appeal and S. A. No. 1016 of 1924. It is argued on behalf of the respondent that this order not being an order under O. XLI, r. 23 is not appealable and, therefore, this appeal is incompetent. It is further argued that the decision of the First Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit was not a decision upon a preliminary point. It is apparent that that Court did not enter into the merits of the case but held that the plaintiff's suit could not proceed because of the defect in the description of the defendant; and it also found that the suit was barred under ss. 75 and 77 of the Indian Railways Act. The decision of that Court must be taken to be a decision on a preliminary point and the remand order of the lower Appellate Court was one under O. XLI, r. 23, C. P. C. Moreover, it has been held that though an order of remand passed by the Court of Appeal below may not be in strict accord with the provision of O. XLI, r. 23 read with O. XLIII r. 1 (u), if the order of the Appellate Court purports to be an order under O. XLI, r. 23, an appeal will lie from such an order. Strictly speaking, the order passed by the learned Judge is not in conformity with O. XLI, r. 23, but it is manifest from the form of his order that he purported to pass it under O. XLI, r. 23. One of the orders that he passed is that the Court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal should be returned to the appellant and such an order can only be passed under s. 13 of the Court Fees Act in a case where the remand is made under O. XLI, r. 23. It has further been held that an order passed by the Appellate Court in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction, which it possesses, as held in the Full Bench case of Abdul Karim Abu Ahmed Khan Ghuznavi v. Allahabad Bank Ltd. (1) is an appealable order even though it may not come within the scope of O. XLI, r. 23, Bhairab Chandra Dutt v. Kali Kumar Dutt (2) and Radha Krishna Saha v. Kumal Kamini Debya (3). In this state of the authorities, I am of opinion that the appeal is competent. Even if there are any doubts as to the maintainability of the appeal in such cases the memorandum of appeal may be treated as an application under s. 115 C. P. C., where we are satisfied that the order passed by the lower Court is not in accordance with law.

Now, I come to the merits of the appeal. It has been observed that the Trial Court found against the plaintiff and held that the suit was not brought against the proper party and it is, therefore, not maintainable. It is not questioned before us that the description of the defendant as appears from the plaint is not strictly in accordance with law. It cannot be disputed that the frame of the suit is in contravention of the provisions of O. XXIX, r. 1 and Sch. A to the C. P. C., and that it should have been brought against the Railway Company. In the case of Indian General S. N. & R. Co. Ltd., v. Lal Mohan Saha (4), the suit was brought against two Companies through a certain person who was named as the joint agent of two Companies. It was held that the frame of the suit was in contravention of O. XXIX, r. 1. But it is argued by the respondent that the plaintiff should be allowed to amend the plaint and to constitute the suit in accordance with the provisions of law. It appears that the plaint was filed on the 28th October 1922. The written statement on behalf of the defendant was filed on the 2nd January 1923. In paragraph 2 of the written statement the defendant pleaded that the suit as framed was not maintainable. On the 12th June 1923 the hearing of the evidence and the arguments of the Pleaders were finished and judgment was reserved. Thereafter on that day the plaintiff filed a petition for amendment of the plaint. The learned Munsif rejected it on the ground that the prayer could not be allowed at that stage. From these facts it cannot be said that the mistake that was committed was an accidental one. The plaintiff adhered to this case that the suit as framed was in proper form until after the arguments of the Pleader of the defendant when he was convinced of his mistake and put in an application for the amendment of the plaint.

Besides the objection that the plaintiff did not ask for any amendment of the plaint, in time, there is another objection on the ground of limitation. It is conceded that the effect of now bringing the Railway Company on the record will be the addition of a party to the suit and s. 22 of the Indian Limitation Act will apply. The respondent, however, argues that the amendment sought was not to add a fresh party to the suit but to remove the misdescription of the defendant in the plaint. The real question, therefore, is whether the present case is a case of misdescription of the defendant or whether the amendment would practically add a party to the suit. On the authorities there is no room for controversy that the suit as framed is not maintainable. In the case of Ram Dass Sein v. Mr. Cecil Stephenson (5), the East Indian Railway Company was sued in the name of its Deputy Agent. It was held that the suit was bad and could not proceed in that form as the plaint did not disclose any cause of action against the defendant. This decision was followed in the case of Nubeen Chunder Paul v. Mr. Cecil Stephenson (6). There also the same mistake occurred. It was held that the suit could not proceed against the defendant. An attempt was made in that case to amend the plaint by bringing proper parties on the record. The learned Judges rejected the prayer on the ground that the Railway Company was no party to the suit and it could not be said that the Railway Company was likely to be affected by the result of the suit; and further under s. 73, Act VIII of 1859, it was not imperative on the Court to admit parties to the record; it was discretionary to allow amendment and it was justified in not allowing the amendment at the stage at which it was asked. These cases are tried to be distinguished from the present case on the ground that in those cases the defendant was sued by name as representing the Railway Company, whereas in the present case the defendant is not named but described only as Agent of the Railway Company. In the case of Indian General S. N. & R. Co., Ltd. v. Lal Mohan Saha (4) to which reference has been made, amendment was sought and allowed on the ground that as it was within time it would not affect the Statute of Limitation. Their Lordships observed thus: "In the circumstances of this case, as no question of limitation arises even if the suit be taken to have been instituted against the two Companies on the date when the plaint was allowed to be amended, we are of opinion that the amendment may stand." From this observation it is clear that if the amendment was not asked for within the period of limitation the prayer could not be granted. In the present case there is no question that the application for amendment was made after the statutory period. All the cases on this point were considered by the Patna High Court in the case of East Indian Railway Company v. Ram Lakhan Ram (7) which is on all fours with the present case and where all the points arising in this case were discussed and answered in the way in which we propose to answer them in this case. v. Lal Mohan Shaha (4) said as follows: "I read the decision of Mookerjee, J., as containing a strong intimation to the effect that amendment would not have been allowed if any question of limitation arose in the case." In that case the defendant was named 'Agent of the East Indian Railway Company'. Subsequently the plaintiff sought to substitute the Railway Company for the defendant originally sued. The learned Judge remarked: "When there were two known persons in existence and the plaintiff brings the suit against one of them and afterwards applies to have the other brought on the record as a defendant on the ground that he all along intended to sue the other and that in substance he sued the other, and no question of representation arises in the case, it is impossible to maintain the view that the case is one of misdescription". I fully agree with this observation. On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent much reliance has been placed on the decision in the case of the Saraspur Manufacturing Company v. B. B. & C. I. Railway Company (8). This case has been distinguished in the Patna case; and without accepting the correctness of that decision it may be distinguished from the present case on the following ground. In the suit brought in the Bombay case the defendant was stated as the Agent of the Railway Company. But the Railway Company appeared, filed a written statement, and raised several pleas in defence. They also objected that the plaintiff's suit should not lie as it was filed against the defendant's agent. Some of the observations on which the decision in that case is based are that "the defendant Company not only knew perfectly well that the various claims had been made against it, but also considered itself the party being sued. If the Company was not a party, no appearance should have been entered." Then again: "Though the description of the Company may not have been that which is in conformity with the Schedule A to the C. P. C., nevertheless the Company was substantially on the record the Company was in substance the defendant at the time the plaint was first filed, and it was not a case of adding a new party in which case, considerations of that kind might be relevant". I might hold the same opinion on the facts of that case. But here the defendant at the very outset took objection to the frame of the suit and the Company has not appeared or defended the suit. I hold that it is not a case of misdescription but if the amendment is allowed it will have the effect of adding a new party to the suit, and s. 22 of the Limitation Act will apply.

Another case has been referred to by the respondent, viz., the case of Nistarini Dasya v. Sarat Chandra Mojumdar (9). I had occasion to refer to that case in a recent judgment with reluctance to follow it and tried to distinguish it, but that decision has no bearing on the present case. The view which the learned Judges took in that case was that the real plaintiff in the suit was the son and that the suit as originally framed was for the benefit of the real plaintiff; and, therefore, they thought that by the amendment of the plaint by bringing the real plaintiff on the record there was substantially no change in the frame of the suit.

On the above considerations I am of opinion that the plaintiff's suit as brought is incompetent and must be dismissed.

The order of the lower Appellate Court is also open to criticism on the ground that the Court was not justified in remitting the case to the Trial Court after setting aside its decision on one of the points decided by it. The learned Judge should have gone into the questions decided by the First Court under ss. 75 and 77 of the Indian Railways Act. But as, in my judgment, the suit is defective and must be dismissed I do not consider this point any further.

The result of the foregoing conclusion is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs.

It is not necessary to pass any order in Second Appeal No. 1016 of 1924.

Duval, J.—I agree with the judgment of my learned brother just delivered. It appears to me that there are only two points in this case, the first is whether there is an appeal in this case and the second is whether, as a matter of fact, in the circumstances of this case the application to substitute the Company for the Agent filed at such a late stage can legally be allowed.

As to the first point, it appears to me to be perfectly clear that whatever else the learned District Judge might have decided he really intended to decide only one point, namely, the preliminary point; and it is also clear that the learned Munsif in the First Court did only decide the preliminary point; that is to say, he took no evidence of the fact as to whether there was any loss occasioned to the plaintiff. I hold, therefore, that an appeal does lie to this Court against the order of the District Judge.

As to the second point, the weight of all the authorities is to the effect that substitution cannot be made at a late stage of the case. I had the plaint and written statement read to me and it appears quite clear that this objection was taken at the very first stage of the case. No attempt was made to rectify the mistake till at the very last stage of the case; and the First Court was right in dismissing the application. All the authorities except the decision in the case of Saraspur Manufacturing Co. Ltd. v. B. B. & C. I. Railway Company (8) are in favour of this view. In the Bombay case, however, permission for substitution was given owing to the special circumstances of the case which do not apply to the present case. I refer to this case because the learned Advocate for the respondent rested on it his whole case to justify the order of the District Judge. In this view I agree that the appeal must be allowed, the order of the District Judge vacated and that of the Munsif restored with costs of all Courts.

It is not necessary to pass any order in S. A. No. 1016 of 1924.

Appellate Court deciding that Trial Court had jurisdiction—Error of law—Revision, whether lies.

An error of law furnishes no ground for revision.

Where on an appeal from an order directing that a plaint should be returned for presentation to a proper Court, the Appellate Court decides that the Trial Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, its decision is not open to revision inasmuch as even if it is erroneous, it is a mere error of law committed by a Court which had jurisdiction to decide the matter.

Application against an order of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 9th March 1925, reversing that of the Munsif, South Lucknow, dated the 30th January 1925.

ORDER.—This is an application under s. 115 of the C. P. C. in revision. The question raised is one of some difficulty, if it had come before me in an appeal, but I am not prepared to decide it in revision.

There was an original mortgage for Rs. 2,700 and a sub-mortgage, that is to say, a mortgage by the mortgagee of his mortgagee rights for Rs. 690. The sub-mortgagee chose to pursue the remedy in connection with which form No. 9 of Appendix D of the C. P. C. has been provided, that is to say, he brought a suit for sale of the property itself. He made the mortgagee and the mortgagor defendants, and he asked that out of the sale money, he should get in the first place, the money he was entitled to on his sub-mortgage, and then out of the balance the original mortgagee ought to get his mortgage money, and that the surplus after that should be paid to the mortgagor.

He brought this suit in the Court of the Munsif whose jurisdiction is limited to Rs. 2,000. The Munsif decided that in a suit of this kind the sub-mortgagee is stepping into the shoes of the mortgagee, and that both Court-fee and jurisdiction must be calculated on the amount of the mortgage money of the original mortgagee. Accordingly, he returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiff sub-mortgagee appealed, and the learned Subordinate Judge allowed the appeal. He held that any relief granted to the original mortgagee was merely incidental to the relief claimed by the plaintiff, and that the valuation of Rs. 690 was correct both for Court-fee and for jurisdiction. There seems to be no direct authority on the point but as I have said, I do not feel called upon to decide it. The learned Subordinate Judge may have been right in his decision or he may have been wrong, but there is no doubt that he had jurisdiction to hear the appeal, and that the most that can be urged against his judgment is that it contains an error of law. That furnishes no ground for revision. The case is similar to Jawla Prasad v. E. I. Railway Company (1).

Mr. Amarendra Nath Bose and Babu Arun Chandra Bose, for the Appellants.

Dr. Bijan Kumar Mukherjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs under s. 15 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of Mr. Justice Duval. The suit was one for rent and the contention of the tenant was that he was only liable to pay rent at the rate of Rs. 30-10-8 gandas whereas the landlord claimed rent at the rate of Rs. 39. Before I state the questions that arise in this appeal it is necessary to state a few facts. On the 15th June 1914 proceedings were started by the landlord for enhancement of rent under s. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The judgment in that case was delivered on the 24th December 1915 fixing the rate of rent at Rs. 39 in accordance with an entry in the Record of Rights. In the meantime subsequent to the institution of the proceedings under s. 105 and whilst these were pending the landlord commenced a suit for rent against the predecessor-in-interest of the present respondent, Beni Kanta Banerjee. The decree was passed in that suit on the 25th August 1915 on the basis of a rental of Rs. 34-10-8 gandas. The holding was sold in execution of the decree sometime in August 1915 and the sale was confirmed on the 30th September 1915, the purchaser being Dinesh Chandra Chatterjee transferred his interest to the present respondent.

Three points were urged before us in this appeal against the judgment of the learned Judge who held that the respondent was not bound by the proceedings under s. 105. The first point is that the sale is merely a devolution and that the provisions of O. XXII, r. 10 of the C. P. C., apply to the case; and secondly, it was contended that in any case the proceedings under s. 105 were contentions and operated as lis pendens and that accordingly, the respondent was bound by the proceedings under the provisions of s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. Thirdly, it was contended that by virtue of the provisions of s. 150 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the plea taken by the respondent was not open to him as he did not deposit the rent which he had admitted to be due, namely, Rs. 34-10-8 gandas.

So far as the first point is concerned, I have endeavoured to understand the argument that was addressed to us based upon the provisions of O. XXII, r. 10. But I have been unable to see how that rule of O. XXII has any application whatsoever and the first point accordingly fails.

Secondly, so far as s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act is concerned I am unable to agree with the argument of the learned Advocate that any right to immoveable property was directly and specifically in question. In my view the rights referred to by those words of s. 52 are rights such as arise with regard to sale, specific performance lease and so on; but I cannot see how a mere claim for rent is a right to immoveable property within the provisions of s. 52. No authority has been cited to us for the proposition and I am not prepared to hold that a claim for rent is a right to immoveable property within the meaning of those words in s. 52. We were referred in support of the learned Advocate's argument, to an unreported case of this Court, namely, an appeal from an Appellate Decree No. 450 of 1916. But I cannot see how that judgment affects the matter at all as the only question there was whether the person there who occupies the same position as the respondent here knew of the proceedings under s. 105. The Court there found that he knew of those proceedings and that he knew of those proceedings at the time he purchased and that he was clearly bound by those proceedings. This is the only point that was decided in that case and I do not see how that case helps the appellants in this case.

With regard to the third point, namely, that s. 150 of the Bengal Tenancy Act debars the respondent from setting up the plea which he raised. This point seems to be decided by the case of Banarasi Pershad v. Makhan Roy (1). In that case the same argument was used with regard to the provisions of s. 150 as was urged before us in this appeal and Mr. Justice Banerji there decided that s. 150 did not apply where the rate of rent was in issue. We respectfully agree with that decision and under the circumstances, s. 150 has no application.

The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Cuming, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, grant permission to bring fresh suit—Procedure.

Where a plaintiff applying for withdrawal of suit, does not desire to withdraw from the suit unless with liberty to bring a fresh suit, and the Court considers that such liberty should not be granted, the proper course is simply to dismiss the application. An order in such a case allowing withdrawal of suit without permission to bring a fresh suit is wrong, and must be set aside, with the restoration of the suit to the file.

Mahant Biharidasji v. Parshottamdas Ramdas, 32 B. 315; 10 Bom. L. R. 293, relied on.

A plaintiff who does not take any objection to the above course adopted by the Court cannot be deemed to have agreed to it, and to have withdrawn from the suit, it being not necessary for him to expressly take the objection before the refusal of his application.

Rule against an order of the Second Munsif, Chikandi, dated the 20th February 1925.

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitter, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Gunada Charan Sen and Babu Someswar Prosad Mukherjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-petitioners during the hearing of their Suit No. 69 of 1924 in the Court of the Second Munsif of Chikandi applied for permission to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. The Munsif allowed them to withdraw from the suit without permission to bring a fresh suit and directed the defendants to get their costs from the plaintiff. This order was passed in connection with two suits, but in this Rule we are only concerned with Suit No. 69 of 1924.

That the Munsif's order was wrong is clear from the decision of the Bombay High Court in Mahant Biharidasji v. Parshottamdas Ramdas (1). As there pointed out, where the plaintiff does not desire to withdraw from the suit unless with liberty to bring a fresh suit, and the Court considers that such liberty should not be granted the proper course is simply to dismiss the application. On behalf of the opposite party in this Rule the same argument was urged as had been urged at the hearing of the case cited.

It was contended that the permission having been refused without any objection on the part of the plaintiff he must be deemed to have withdrawn from the suit. It was not necessary for him to expressly take such objection before his application was refused. The Rule is accordingly made absolute with costs and the order passed by the Munsif will be varied by substituting therefor an order in these terms. The application for permission to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit for the subject-matter of the suit is dismissed with costs. The result will be that the case must be restored to the file.

I assess the hearing-fee at two gold mohurs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 6, 8, 9—Abduction case—Evidence of search prior to alleged abduction, whether admissible—Jury trial—Court, whether can express opinion on facts—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 288—Deposition of witness, admissibility of—"Subject to provisions of Evidence Act" meaning of.

The accused, who were alleged to have abducted a woman at midnight, produced a witness who gave evidence that he had seen certain other women of the abducted woman's household searching for something at dusk the same evening, the suggestion being that the woman was actually missing in the evening and could not have been abducted at midnight. The women were not examined as witnesses:

Held, that the evidence of the witness was inadmissible and neither s. 6, nor s. 8, nor s. 9 of the Evidence Act was applicable.

In a Jury trial, there is no harm in the Trial Judge expressing his opinion on facts, and in fact it is his duty to do so to assist the Jury, provided he is careful to express his opinion in such a way as not to interfere with the duties of the Jury to finally decide according to their own view of the facts.

The deposition of a witness before the Committing Magistrate when put in the Sessions Court under s. 288, Cr. P. C., becomes substantive evidence and is used as such. The meaning of the words "subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act" in the section is not that the deposition must be admissible under some section of the Evidence Act. They simply mean that it cannot be used as substantive evidence, if for any reason it is irrelevant under the Evidence Act.

Criminal appeal against an order of the Assistant Sessions Judge, Rangpur, dated the 22nd July 1924.

Mr. D. N. Bagchi and Babu Mohini Mohan Bhattacharji, for the Appellants.

Mr. Khundkar, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants have been found guilty under s. 366, Indian Penal Code, by the unanimous verdict of the Jury and have been sentenced each to five years' rigorous imprisonment.

It is contended that the trial has been vitiated by the exclusion of relevant evidence and also misdirection by the Judge in summing up to the Jury. It is suggested for the defence that the woman who has been found to be abducted, Bibijan, was actually missing in the evening and, therefore, could not have been, as alleged, abducted at midnight. The witness Nur Muhamad Munshi gave evidence that he had seen three women, who were sleeping in the same bari as the complainant and his wife that night, searching something at dusk. These women were not examined as witnesses and when the witness was asked what reply one of these women, who were searching for something, gave, he was not allowed to answer the question. We hold that the learned Sessions Judge was right in excluding this evidence. This alleged search that evening cannot be treated as part of the same transaction as the abduction at night so s. 6 of the Evidence Act cannot make it admissible. Section 8 is of no help to the appellants since these women were neither parties to the case nor agents to any party. Section 9, the only other section of the Evidence Act on which reliance is placed, is equally inapplicable.

As regards misdirection, several points have been argued, but they really all amount to this—that the learned Sessions Judge in dealing with these points expressed his opinion too strongly in favour of the prosecution. But though the learned Judge expressed his opinion strongly it is evident from his charge that he was careful to impress on the Jury that on all questions of fact the decision rested with them and over and over again in the charge we find remarks like these. "I have the entire evidence to you to judge," "you are the Judges and you are to decide if you find the above question against the accused." There is no harm in the Trial Judge expressing his opinion on the fact and in fact it is his duty to do so to assist the Jury provided that he is careful to express his opinion in such a way as not in any way to interfere with the duties of the Jury to finally decide according to their own view of the facts. All the points to which reference is made, we find, have been adequately and properly dealt with in the charge to the Jury. The suggestions made on behalf of the defence have been considered. The points as to non-examination of various witnesses have been discussed. One other point of importance taken is that the deposition of witnesses before the Committing Magistrate was wrongly put in in accordance with the provisions of s. 288, Cr. P. C. It is contended that the concluding words of this section "Subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act" mean that the depositions cannot be put in under this section unless they are admissible under some sections of the Indian Evidence Act. This is not the meaning of these words. The evidence of the deposition when put in under this section becomes substantive evidence and is used as such. But obviously it cannot be put in evidence as substantive evidence if for any reason it is irrelevant under the Evidence Act. To adopt the interpretation which we are asked to put on these concluding words would be to render the provisions of s. 288 unnecessary and superfluous.

Having regard to the nature of the offence which the Jury have found to have been committed we are unable to hold that the sentence passed is too severe.

The appeal is dismissed.

The appellants must surrender to their bail and undergo the unexpired portion of the sentence.

The learned Sessions Judge, Sukkur, has referred the case to us under s. 438, Cr. P. C. for orders.

It appears that the case was registered by the learned Magistrate as a case tried summarily under Ch. XXII of the Cr. P. C. The particulars to be entered in cases of this nature are laid down in s. 263, Cr. P. C. under headings marked respectively (a) to (j).

All the requirements of s. 263 have been complied with by the learned Magistrate except that with regard to the heading marked (g) which requires that the plea of the accused and his examination (if any) should be entered, he has merely recorded the fact, that all the accused pleaded not guilty.

The record as the learned Sessions Judge points out does not mention any examination of the accused.

Section 342 of the Cr. P. C. empowers a Court at any stage of an inquiry or trial to question the accused for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him and makes it obligatory on the Court to do so after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence.

A similar obligation is imposed in Ch. XX which relates to the trial of Summons Cases for s. 244 provides inter alia that the Magistrate shall proceed to hear the accused and take all such evidence as he produces.

In Ch. XXII, however, which relates to summary trials there is no specific provision making it obligatory to examine the accused. All that s. 263 (g) requires is that the plea of the accused and his examination (if any) shall be recorded.

What is the effect of the words (if any), in s. 263? Are the mandatory provisions of s. 342 applicable to Summons Cases and to cases summarily or do the words "if any" give the Magistrate a discretion, whether to examine the accused or not?

It seems unthinkable that the Legislature could have intended by s. 263 to give Magistrates a direction in cases ending in conviction to dispense with the examination of the accused.

The principle embodied in the maxim audi alteram partem, viz., that no man should be condemned unheard is perhaps the first and most important principle relating to the mode of administering justice, and in any record of the essentials of a fair trial it is the last essential, which could be omitted.

The meaning of the word "if any" in ss. 263 and 370 is, I think, clear, if one considers ss. 243, 245, 253 and 289 of the Cr. P. C. It is not in every trial that an examination of the accused as required by s. 312 is necessary for if the accused in a Summons Case admits, that he has committed the offence of which he is accused, the Magistrate may convict him under s. 243, without proceeding to hear the complainant and take such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution. Again if the evidence produced in support of the prosecution does not point to the fact, that accused has committed any offence, section 245 shows that the Magistrate in a Summons Case can acquit the accused without examining him, and s. 253 shows that in a Warrant Case he can discharge him; and this is only reasonable and in harmony with s. 342, for in such a case there is nothing appearing in the evidence, which requires an explanation from the accused, before he can be acquitted. Similarly under s. 289 the Court can without an examination of the accused direct the Jury to find a verdict of "not guilty."

The words "if any," therefore, in s. 263 do not limit the obligation imposed on Courts by s. 342, or render it inapplicable to summary trials, they merely have reference to those cases in which owing to the admission and plea of the accused, or owing to the weakness of the evidence called in support of the prosecution, the accused can either be convicted on his own plea without the taking of evidence, or acquitted on the evidence without the examination referred to in s. 312. The fact that the provisions of s. 342 are mandatory and apply to Summons Cases has been recognized by the Bombay High Court in Fernandez v. Emperor (1) and in Emperor v. Gulabjap (2), by the Patna High Court in Raghu Bhumji v. Emperor (3), Ghulam Rasul v. Emperor (4) and Parmeshwar Lall Mitter v. Emperor (5) and by the Lahore High Court in Muhammad Bakhsh v. Emperor (6).

These rulings, however, have been dissented from by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Ponnusami Odayar v. Ramasami Thathan (7), in which it was held that s. 342 has no application to Summons Cases. In his judgment Schwabe, C. J., drew attention to the inconvenience, which he maintained, would result, if s. 342 applied to Summons Cases, in view of s. 364, Cr. P. C., which imposes the obligation to record every question put to the accused and every answer given by him whenever the accused is examined by a Magistrate. He also expressed the opinion that the use of the expression "before the accused is called on for his defence" in s. 342 as well as in s. 256 relating to trials in Warrant Cases and in s. 289 relating to trials in Sessions cases and the absence of such an expression in trials in Summons Cases under Ch. XX of the Code showed that the provisions of s. 342 were not intended to apply to Summons Cases.

With great respect to the learned Judges who tried the case of Ponnusami Odayar v. Ramasami Thathan (7), I am of opinion that it was rightly decided that s. 342, Cr. P. C., applies to Summons Cases. No doubt the concluding sentence in s. 342 (1) "and before he is called on for his defence" contains the same language as is contained in s. 256 which relates to the trial of Warrant Cases and in s. 289, which relates to trials before High Courts and Courts of Sessions, and it would have been more precise to have concluded s. 342 (1) "and shall for the purpose aforesaid question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined in a Summons Case before the taking of such evidence as he produces in his defence under s. 244 and in a Warrant Case before he enters on his defence under s. 256" as in s. 451 of the Code where the very sections are referred to. But s. 342 (1) appears in a Chapter containing general provisions as to inquiries or trials. It was unnecessary to make it clear that the section was applicable to Summons Cases as well as to Warrant Cases and Sessions Cases. The words "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined" cover a definite stage in Summons Cases as well as in Warrant cases and the mere addition of a sentence which could well be applied to a stage in a Summons Case but from the nature of its wording was more appropriate to a Warrant or a Sessions Case would not, in my opinion, limit the application of the obligation referred to in s. 342 (1) to Warrant and Sessions Cases. The law does not favour legal and strained intentions, when over-minute precision may confound legal certainty. I am fortified in my opinion by the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Surendra Lal Saha v. Issamuddi (8), for the Calcutta High Court there held that the examination of the accused in Summons Case after the prosecution had closed and "after they had entered on their defence" was not in accordance with s. 342. The words "after they had entered on their defence" are there used in the same sense and are perfectly intelligible though strictly speaking it is in Warrant Cases and in Sessions Cases that accused persons are called on to enter on their defence, in Summons Cases the evidence which they produce is taken. In the case of Gulzari

(8) 84 Ind. Cas. 325; 51 C. 933; 26 Cr. L. J. 261; (1925) A. I. R. (C.) 480.

Lal v. Emperor (9), the Calcutta High Court also held that s. 342 applies to Summons Cases.

With regard to the other objection referred to by Schwabe, C. J., it is the fact that s. 364 may be a serious obstacle to the expeditious disposal of Summons Cases but that does not appear to me a reasonable ground for holding that s. 342 does not apply to Summons Cases; the importance of guarding against accused persons being condemned without an adequate elucidation and consideration of what they have to say seems to me to outweigh any inconvenience which might arise in Summons Cases not tried summarily owing to the provisions of s. 364.

If the word "examine" in s. 263 only has reference to Warrant Cases tried summarily, there is no obligation on the Magistrate to record any statement of the accused or even the fact that the accused made a statement in Summons Case tried summarily and the record of such a trial would appear to lack any reference to the most essential ingredient of a fair trial.

Taking all the circumstances into consideration I am of opinion for the reasons above mentioned that the failure to comply with the provisions of s. 342 of the Cr. P. C., vitiated the trial of the accused and that the convictions and sentences must be set aside.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 515 OF 1924.
CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 426 OF 1924.
December 12, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Wallace and Mr. Justice Madhavan Nair.

In re YERLAGADDA VENKANNA—ACCUSED—PETITIONER.

Madras Abkari Act (I of 1886), ss. 31, 34, 55—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 188—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 190 (1) (b)—Sale of arrack in contravention of Collector's order and terms of license—Offence—Abkari Inspector's report, absence of, effect of—Jurisdiction of Magistrate to take cognisance—Conviction—Procedure.

A person selling arrack in his shop at an hour in contravention of an order promulgated by the District Collector does not commit an offence under s. 188 of the Penal Code. In such a case there is no question of causing or tending to cause obstruction, annoyance or injury to any one, and it does not follow, as a matter of course, that selling drinks will lead to riots or disturbance. [p. 437, cols. 1 & 2.]

The Madras Abkari Act is not self-contained in the matter of the procedure for the investigation of offences under s. 55 of the Act. In such a case the procedure to be followed is laid down in s. 5 (2) of the Cr. P. C. to be under that Code. There is nothing in the Act to indicate what is the procedure to be followed when an offender is sent under s. 31 of the Act direct to a Magistrate, nor is there a provision at all for a case where the offender is not placed under arrest. [p. 438, col. 2.]

Where in a prosecution under s. 31 of the Abkari Act the accused is neither arrested nor bailed out before the trial begins, the Police has authority to send him direct before a Magistrate. It is, therefore, a case to which s. 190 (1) (b) of the Cr. P. C. will apply. The absence of a report by an Abkari Inspector in such a case does not debar a Magistrate from taking cognisance of an offence under s. 55 of the Act and a conviction by him is not open to objection. [ibid.]

Where a case investigated by a Police Officer includes in addition to an offence under s. 55 of the Abkari Act a non-cognisable offence under the Penal Code, the Police Officer would be correct in taking up the more serious offence as the principal offence, that is, the one in which he could arrest without a warrant, namely, under s. 55 of the Abkari Act, and following the provisions of that Act, so far as it can be done, rather than of the Cr. P. C., and, if he can follow the provisions of both by ensuring that the accused should appear before a Magistrate, it is obviously his duty to do so. The same procedure will be the proper procedure for a Police Officer to adopt when he is confronted with an offender whose offences are both under s. 55 of the Abkari Act and a cognisable offence under the Penal Code. [p. 438, col. 2; p. 439, col. 1.]

Petition, under ss. 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. C., 1908, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of Session of the Guntur Division in Criminal Appeal No. 28 of 1924, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Guntur, in C. C. No. 70 of 1924.

Mr. P. Viswanatha Iyer, for the Petitioner.
The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The petitioner has been convicted of having committed offences under s. 188 (2) of the Indian Penal Code and s. 55 (b) of the Abkari Act.

The facts found were that he was discovered by a Police Officer on 20th March 1924 selling arrack in his shop during a festival day at Mangalagiri at 6-10 p. m., 7-10 p. m., and 10-30 p. m., the former sales being in contravention of an order promulgated by the District Collector, and the latter sale being in contravention of the terms of his license. The conviction under s. 188, Indian Penal Code was for the former sales and that under s. 55 (b) of the Abkari Act for the latter.

It is contended for the petitioner, first, that s. 188, Indian Penal Code, will not apply to such a case, and we think this is so. There is here no question or proof of causing or tending to cause obstruction, annoyance or injury to any one, and it does not follow, as the lower Courts seem to think, as a matter of course, that selling drinks will lead to riots or disturbance. We are of opinion that the conviction under s. 188, Indian Penal Code, will not stand.

The next point raised is that the conviction under s. 55 of the Abkari Act cannot stand because there is no report by an Abkari Inspector on which the Magistrate could take cognisance of the offence. The Public Prosecutor contends that the Magistrate is empowered in law to take cognisance of such an offence on the report of a Police Officer and without any report by an Abkari Inspector. We have been taken through several sections of the Act in this connection and the more we examine these, the more difficult it is to extract what the Legislature intended to lay down as the proper procedure. The section which normally gives jurisdiction to a Magistrate to try an offence under s. 55 is s. 50, which certainly implies that where the offender is in custody or has given bail for his appearance, the Magistrate must wait for the report of an Abkari Inspector; and so far this is in the petitioner's favour. The Public Prosecutor contends, however, that there are sections which imply that a Police Officer has power to arrest an offender under s. 55 admit him to bail and send him direct to the Magistrate without the intervention of the Abkari Inspector at all and this must imply that the Magistrate must act under the Cr. P. C., and take cognisance of such an offence under s. 190 of that Act on a Police report. Section 31 of the Abkari Act empowers a Police Officer to arrest any one found by him on search in any place and believed to be guilty of an offence under the Act and to admit him to bail for his appearance before a Magistrate or an Abkari Inspector, "as the case may be." What this last phrase is intended to mean is obscure. Section 34 empowers a Police Officer to arrest any one found committing an offence punishable under s. 55 and to admit him to bail to appear before an Abkari Officer having jurisdiction to enquire into the case. It is notable that the word "Magistrate" is not included in this section although it appears in s. 31. The Public Prosecutor contends that the omission is accidental but we cannot supply in any Statute words which are not there. The procedure begun under s. 34 seems to contemplate, in the case of a person arrested by the Police for committing an offence under s. 55, that the person be admitted to bail to appear before an Abkari Officer having jurisdiction to inquire into the case and presumably also that information of the offence be forwarded as s. 38 would imply. If bail is not forthcoming or is not accepted by the Police Officer, he is bound, under s. 40, to forward the offender to an Abkari Inspector if there be one within 10 miles, or to the Police Station, and if he is sent to the Police Station, the Police Station-House Officer shall admit him to bail for his appearance before the Abkari Officer as aforesaid meaning apparently an Abkari Inspector appointed under s. 4 (d) of the Act or send him in custody to him. Then the Abkari Officer has to hold an enquiry and forward the case to the Magistrate for trial.

So far is fairly plain. But under s. 41 the Police Station-House Officer apparently has an option of not bailing an arrested offender to appear before an Abkari Officer, but of bailing him to appear before a Magistrate and the same cryptic phrase as in the proviso to s. 31 "as the case may be," appears. This section, by force of the terms of s. 40, would seem to apply such a procedure, even to the case of persons referred to, in s. 34 that is, "found committing an offence, under s. 55 in any public thoroughfare, or open place other than a dwelling house", although under s. 34 itself the officer who arrests is not given the power to send the offender "before a Magistrate. However, it seems possible to apply the phrase "before a Magistrate, as the case may be" in s. 41, only to cases of arrest under s. 31, under which the offender may be sent before a Magistrate.

The net result seems to be this, that an offender arrested under s. 31 may be bailed to appear before either a Magistrate or an Abkari Inspector, while one arrested under s. 34 can be sent only before an Abkari Officer. If the offender is sent under either section before an Abkari Officer there is an enquiry under s. 40 (3) and the offender is sent under s. 50 with a report to the Magistrate for trial. But there is nothing in the Act to indicate what is the procedure to be followed, where the offender is sent under s. 31 direct to a Magistrate.

A still more serious lacuna in the procedure prescribed is that there is no provision at all for a case where the offender is not placed under arrest. The only section providing for a preliminary enquiry before trial is s. 40, and that applies only to cases of offenders, brought in custody or bailed after arrest, to appear before the officer holding the enquiry. The Abkari Act is thus not self-contained in the matter of the procedure for the investigation of offences under s. 55. In such a case the procedure to be followed is laid down in s. 5 (2) of the Cr. P. C. to be under that Code. Now, in the case before us, so far as we have the records before us, it does not appear that the accused was ever arrested or bailed out, before the trial began. In any case, the offence having been committed in accused's shop would fall under s. 31 and not under s. 34, and the Police would have authority to send him direct before a Magistrate. It is, therefore, a case to which s. 190 (1) (b) of the Cr. P. C. will apply. We cannot, therefore, hold that in this case there has been any error in procedure, or lack of jurisdiction. We have been referred to a reported case of this Court in In re Kuppuswamy Naidu (1) but the report does not make it clear, whether that was a case initiated under s. 31 or s. 34 of the Abkari Act or whether the accused was arrested at the time of committing the offence. We have looked into the printed papers of that case but they throw no further light on the matter. We are unable, therefore, to regard this ruling as necessarily applicable to the present case. A close examination of the provision of the Abkari Act reveals, as we have shown, that the Act is not self-contained, in the matter of procedure and that we must fall back on the Cr. P. C. to fill up the blanks, in the procedure prescribed by the Abkari Act.

The present case is complicated by the fact that the original case investigated included, in addition to an offence under the Abkari Act, an offence under the Indian Penal Code, a non-cognizable offence. In such a case the Police Officer would probably be correct in taking up the more serious offence as the principal offence that is the one in which he could arrest without a warrant, namely, s. 55 of the Abkari Act, and he will probably be correct in following the provisions of that Act, so far as it can be done, rather than of the Cr. P. C.; and, if he can follow the provisions of both, by ensuring that the accused should appear before the Magistrate, it is obviously his duty to do so. The same procedure would be the proper procedure for a Police Officer to adopt, when he is confronted with an offender, whose offences are both under s. 55 of the Abkari Act and a cognizable offence under the Indian Penal Code.

We are, therefore, not prepared to interfere with the conviction under s. 55 of the Abkari Act; but as the conviction under s. 188, Indian Penal Code, fails, the sentence will have to be reduced and we reduce it to a period of imprisonment already undergone, namely, 20 days, while maintaining the fine imposed. The bail-bond will be cancelled.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Shahabad, dated the 5th March 1925, affirming that of the District Magistrate, Shahabad, dated the 19th January 1925.

Mr. N. N. Sinha, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of the conviction of the petitioners under s. 379 of the Indian Penal Code and their sentences of fine. They were tried by a Second Class Magistrate of Sasaram, an appeal against whose decision was dismissed by the District Magistrate of Shahabad. A motion against the appellate decision was rejected by the Sessions Judge. The petitioner Barhamdeo Rai is father of the other two petitioners and the fourth petitioner is his labourer.

The facts which have been found to be established are that the complainant was unwilling to continue the credit which he had formerly allowed to Barhamdeo Rai, who resented the refusal. On the day of occurrence the complainant had brought to the front of Barhamdeo's house a bullock cart on which to carry home five bags of rice which he had bought some time before from Deodhari Missir. The cart had to be left at the point because the road became too narrow for it to proceed. On the bags being brought Barhamdeo and the petitioners removed them from the cart to their house by force. Next day the Police found the cart in front of the house of Barhamdeo.

Mr. Nirsu Narain Sinha has advanced the following four contentions in support of the rule.

(1) The offence disclosed by the evidence which has been accepted by the Courts, amounts to robbery, and so a Second Class Magistrate cannot try it;

(2) The defence of the second petitioner Gaya Rai was that he was ill and he examined two witnesses in support of it, but neither the Trial Court nor the Appellate Court has discussed their evidence at all;

(3) The fourth petitioner being a servant of Barhamdeo cannot be convicted without a finding of guilty knowledge, and

(4) The defence witness No. 3 who states that the cart found near Barhamdeo's door was sold by him to Barhamdeo has been disbelieved on the illegal ground that he is of the same caste as Barhamdeo.

As to the first point I am not prepared to say that a charge of robbery could not stand. The evidence that the first petitioner or perhaps the first three petitioners brought lathis seems to show that in order to the committing of the theft the offenders voluntarily caused fear of instant hurt to the complainant and his cartman, but it has been held in Queen-Empress v. Gundaya (1) and King-Emperor v. Ayyan (2) that where a Magistrate convicts an accused person of an offence falling within his jurisdiction though the facts found would also constitute a more serious offence not within his jurisdiction, his proceedings are not void ab initio, and the High Court will not ordinarily interfere unless the sentence appears inadequate or unless the accused have been deprived of the right of appeal. There are many unreported cases of the Calcutta High Court to the same effect. In my opinion the petitioners having been in no way prejudiced, the fact that they might have been charged with robbery is not a good ground for interference in revision with the conviction under s. 379.

As to the second point it would appear that this defence was not discussed because it was not relied upon. Indeed the point was not even taken specifically in the petition of appeal.

The third point is supported by a reference to the judgment of Woodroffe, J., in Hari Bhaimali v. Emperor (3). The circumstances are distinguishable. In that case the master of the petitioners had at least a colourable claim of right. In the present case the petitioner No. 4 knew perfectly well that his master was removing the bags of rice of complainant without even a pretence of right and yet he assisted him in doing so and, therefore, clearly acted dishonestly.

As to the 4th point it may at once be conceded that it is not a sound ground for disbelieving a witness that he is of the same caste or community as the person in whose favour he deposes. The defence adduced evidence in support of Barhamdeo's claim that the cart is his. The learned District Magistrate however, accepted the evidence as to the ownership of the cart adduced on behalf of the complainant. He states. "The prosecution on the other hand have shown that the complainant's cartman, Ramdas Sundi, obtained the cart from one Rampati Koiri. There is no reason why the latter should have given false evidence and he has given his evidence in such a manner as to leave no doubt in my mind that he was once the owner of this cart." In effect, therefore, the learned District Magistrate considers the whole evidence of both sides as to the ownership of the cart and on a substantial ground prefers the evidence given by Rampati Koiri. It is urged that the Appellate Court has also not discussed specially the evidence of the first and fourth defence witnesses as to the first appellant having a cart, but on perusing their depositions I am not impressed with their testimony and apparently it was not thought worthwhile to place it before the District Magistrate, the question being whether the evidence of defence witness No. 3 or that of Ramdas and Rampati should be believed. It is not shown that the evidence on behalf of petitioners has not been adequately considered or that the decision of the Courts below is wrong on the merits.

In my opinion none of the grounds urged in support of the Rule are well-founded. The Rule is accordingly discharged.

Mr. Khundkar Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The four appellants before us were tried before the Sessions Judge of Faridpur and a Jury on various charges of offences committed in the course of a riot in which they were accused of having taken part. The first two appellants were sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment each under s. 304/149, Indian Penal Code and two years' rigorous imprisonment each under s. 324, Indian Penal Code, the sentences to run concurrently. The third appellant was sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 304/149, and no separate sentence was passed on his conviction under s. 147, Indian Penal Code. The fourth appellant was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 147, Indian Penal Code.

As regards the appellant Basir Sardar a special point is taken, and that is that his conviction should be set aside on the ground of illegality in the proceedings before the Committing Magistrate. Five persons were committed to the Court of Sessions in this case one of whom has been acquitted. The commitment proceedings commenced against four of these accused other than Basir Sardar, and on the 25th June 1924 ten prosecution witnesses were examined. The Magistrate then directed that warrant should issue against Basir Sardar and he was produced before the Court on the 8th July. On that date three prosecution witnesses were examined in the presence of all the accused. On the 23rd July two more prosecution witnesses were examined in the presence of all the accused and the charge was framed. On the 28th July the investigating Police Officer and the Sub-Deputy Magistrate who recorded the dying declaration were examined apparently under s. 219, Cr. P. C. It is contended that this procedure was contrary to the provisions of s. 208, Cr. P. C. In our opinion even if the provisions of that section were not strictly followed that would not be a sufficient ground for setting aside this conviction. No reported cases have been shown to us in which the conviction has been set aside on the ground of irregularity or illegality in the commitment. It is not shown that the appellant Basir has been in any way prejudiced. Even assuming that there has been such an irregularity or illegality in the proceeding as would justify us in quashing the commitment had such an application been made to us before the commencement of the trial we hold that we should not, therefore, be bound to hold that the conviction should be set aside. The Sessions Judge has jurisdiction to try a case which has been committed for trial to him, and if the trial is legally held we doubt if an irregularity in the commitment would vitiate the proceeding in the Sessions Court. In the case of In the matter of Empress and Sagambur (1) it was held that when a person had been put on his trial and pleaded to the charge the commitment cannot be quashed and we agree with that decision that it is too late to object to the commitment after the accused has pleaded to the charge before the Sessions Court. Taking this view it is not necessary to decide whether there was an illegality in the commitment but we may state that we have some doubts on this point. Section 208, Cr. P. C., provides that the Magistrate shall when the accused is brought before him proceed to hear the complainant if any and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution. It does not appear that in this case the Magistrate omitted to take any evidence which was produced in support of the prosecution of the accused Basir. The same objection was taken before the Sessions Judge and he overruled it on the ground that one or two prosecution witnesses who were examined in the presence of Basir named him in the committing Court as "being present in the dock and taking part in the riot."

It is urged that the Magistrate was in any case under this section bound to hear the complainant in the presence of the accused. But it is not clear that the word complainant in this section applies to the person who laid the first information. Section 250 (3) of the Code draws a distinction between an informant and a complainant. In s. 170 the words there used in the second clause "the complainant if any" indicate that the informant in a case which has been investigated by the Police is not necessarily the complainant. Section 444 of the Code gives the definition of a complainant which would include the informant under s. 154 but that definition is a special definition limited to the use of that word in the proceedings s. 443.

But though we hold that there was nothing in the method in which the commitment proceedings were held against this accused which would vitiate the trial we must not be held to approve of this procedure. We may point out that by following this procedure it might happen that the prosecution would be seriously embarrassed at the Sessions trial, since if they wished to take advantage of s. 288 and put in any deposition under that section for use at the Sessions trial, this could not be done as against the accused in whose presence the depositions were not recorded. Other difficulties also might arise.

The next point urged on behalf of all the appellants is that there was serious non-direction amounting to misdirection on account of failure of the learned Sessions Judge to draw the attention of the Jury to an important passage in the dying declaration made by the man Abdul Karim who has been found to have been killed in the riot. In this statement Karim after giving an account of the occurrence and the wounds inflicted on him stated, "no one else but any one else." It is said that this is totally contradictory to the case for the prosecution and, therefore, the special attention of the Jury should have been drawn to this point. It seems to us that the point is not one of real importance. There is a mass of evidence on the side of the prosecution contradicting the statement. It is obvious that Karim could not know what happened after he was struck and became unconscious. Further it was not even the case for the defence that Karim was the only man assaulted, for we find that Karim Molla, the first appellant, when examined in the Sessions Court said, "I too assaulted them," thereby admitting that others than Karim were also assaulted.

It is objected that the charge did not sufficiently deal with the evidence against each accused individually. But we find that there is a paragraph in the heads of charge dealing with this point pointing out that the evidence against all the five accused as regards their presence at the time of the occurrence has not been exactly the same. That the Jury appreciated the necessity of weighing the evidence against the accused individually is clear from the fact that they acquitted one of the accused who was on trial before them with the appellants.

The last point urged is that the Jury were not told that the presence of the accused persons [at the occurrence was not sufficient for a conviction under s. 147, Indian Penal Code, the only charge on which the four appellants have been convicted. But the learned Sessions Judge told the Jury that one of the points they had to find to support a conviction on a charge of rioting was that the members of the unlawful assembly must have a common object. It does not appear either in the defence set out in the statements of the accused or as disclosed by the cross examination of the prosecution witnesses that it was ever suggested that any of the appellants were present at the riot without being members of the unlawful assembly or without having the common object of that assembly. We, therefore, hold that there was no misdirection on this point.

The appeal fails and is dismissed. The appellants must surrender to their bail and undergo the unexpired portion of their sentences.

Revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Gaya, dated the 27th March 1925.

Messrs. S. P. Varma and S. Prasad, for the Petitioners.

Mr. B. K. Singh, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Sen, J.—The petitioners four in numbers are amlas of Gidhaur Estate against whom proceedings under s. 107, Cr. P. C., have been drawn up by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Nawadh. They pray that the proceedings may be quashed or in the alternative, for a transfer of the case to the file of some other Magistrate.

The circumstances under which they apply are briefly as follows:—On the 30th July 1924 one Gursahay applied to the Maharaja of Gidhaur for a lease of village Suarkole Dumarkole in Rajauli Police Station. On the same date the Maharaja gave a hukumnama to Gursahay in the name of the amlas of the village. It is said that the hukumnama contained a condition to the effect that if a patta were not executed within a fortnight then the hukumnama would be deemed inoperative. A fortnight having elapsed notice was then given to Gursahay to the effect that the mouza would be settled with another person. Thereafter one Dasrath Ram applied for thica and a hukumnama was issued in his favour. Afterwards Dasrath took possession and Gursahay made a verbal complaint to the Sub-Divisional Officer of Nawadah and the Sub-Divisional Officer made an enquiry on the 22nd September 1924. On the 26th September final orders were passed in a proceeding under s. 144 drawn up by the Sub-Divisional Officer whereby he purported to come to a finding that Gursahay had been in possession for two months prior thereto, and he issued notice under s. 144 against Dasrath, Mahabir and some others. It is to be noted that the servants of the Maharaja were not parties to these proceedings. It is said that Dasrath then relinquished his thica and took back his money; and the petitioners on behalf of Gidhaur Estate took possession of the manza. In January last Gursahay filed a further petition alleging that he was being wrongfully dispossessed by the Maharajas men and praying for proceedings under s. 107, Cr. P. C. On the 4th of February 1925 the Sub-Divisional Officer issued notice calling upon the petitioners and some others to show cause why proceedings under s. 107 of the Cr. P. C. should not be drawn up against them. On the 4th March 1925 the proceedings were amended finally by including two more names. It appears that an application was then made before the learned District Magistrate praying either for a transfer of the proceedings from the file of the Sub-Divisional Officer to that of some other Magistrate or in the alternative, that the proceedings might be quashed or proceedings drawn up under s. 145, Cr. P. C., instead. The learned District Magistrate thought that it was doubtful whether he had power to quash the proceedings or to order proceedings to be drawn up under s. 145 and he refused the application for transfer.

On the question of transfer the learned Counsel appearing for the petitioners has not laid much stress, nor is there much to be said in favour of it. He has addressed his arguments in the main on the subject of quashing of the proceedings. It is urged that unless and until the Court is in a position to say that the party sought to be bound down is clearly in the wrong, s. 107 of the Cr. P. C. should not be resorted to especially when there is a bona fide dispute on the question of possession. Reliance is placed on numerous reported cases out of which the following may be mentioned: Balajit Singh v. Bhoju Ghose (1), Dolegobind Chowdhry v. Dhanu Khan (2) and Shebalak Singh v. Kamaruddin Mandal (3). Upon the authorities the principle is clear that the provisions of s. 145 are mandatory and while it is discretionary with the Magistrate to draw up proceedings under s. 107 of the Cr. P. C., the proper course when there is a bona fide dispute as to lands is to proceed under s. 145. Otherwise, the effect would be to bind down one of the parties only to the dispute without any adjudication upon the question as to which of the two parties is in possession. The other side relies on the case of Sheoraj Roy v. Chatter Roy (4) and Emperor v. Basiruddin Mollah (5). The facts and circumstances of these two cases are clearly distinguishable from those of the present. The law on the subject was fully discussed in Shebalak Singh v. Kamar-ud-din (3) and it was laid down there that where one party is clearly in the wrong and threatens to disturb the rights of another who is in actual possession of the land s. 145 has no application. This is more than what can be said in the present case. The facts of the case, to my mind, do not show that one party is clearly in the wrong but, on the contrary, that there are circumstances which point to a bona fide dispute as to possession that should be adjudicated upon.

In the circumstances, I think, the proceedings under s. 107 should be quashed. I, therefore, order accordingly.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 9—Identification of accused in Jail, evidence of—Person identified not specified—Magistrate conducting identification, evidence of, whether admissible.

In order to enable the Court to rely on the evidence of a person who identified the accused in Jail, but failed to do so in Court, the fact of the Jail identification must be stated in the witness' evidence. An identification in Jail is in essence a statement by the witness, "I saw this man who is now before me taking part in the offence." That statement can be used to corroborate his evidence given in Court. If the witness says in his evidence, "a number of persons were shown to me at the Jail and from among them I pointed out those persons whom I had seen committing the offence," it is permissible under s. 9 of the Evidence Act to call independent evidence, such as that of the Magistrate who conducted the identification, to prove the identity of the persons whom he picked out at the Jail, even though the witness himself may not correctly remember who they were. [p. 445, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal against an order of the Officiating Additional Sessions Judge, Kheri, dated the 6th December 1924.

Mr. H. N. Das, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants Chhutkau, Data Ram, Sri Ram, Sheobaran Singh and Bansi Lal have been convicted with a large number of other persons who have not appealed of taking part in a dacoity at the house of Jagannath in the village of Kondri on the night of 2nd August last. The facts of the case are stated in detail in the judgment of the Court below. The case against the accused rests on their identification by witnesses who saw them at the dacoity, on the confession of a co-accused named Bhudar supported by a witness named Hulasi, who deposes to having been taken by Sheobaran Singh to a grove where the accused were assembled for the purpose of committing the dacoity, but having turned back on the way owing to illness. This last witness is of course not a man of high character, and he has some reason for ill-will towards the appellant Bansi.

The learned Sessions Judge has stated the evidence against each accused separately. The defect in his judgment is that he has gone solely on the number of identifications, and has not considered the various identifying witnesses. This is clearly stated in the identification note of the Magistrate who conducted the identification but was not brought out in his evidence in Court, and I have been obliged consequently to refer to the identification note in order to test the value of the evidence. Some of the accused pleaded that they had been shown to the witnesses before or that the complainant had seen them in the Bazar and, therefore, knew them. The Magistrate states in his cross-examination that at the time of the identification none of the accused complained of having been shown by the thanadar to the identifying witnesses. From the Magistrate's identifying note this appears to be inaccurate as regards the accused Bansi who did say that he was shown to many persons at Kondri after his arrest. The Magistrate thought however from his manner that he was lying. Of the witnesses on whose identification the case against the various accused rests the largest number of accused were identified by Jagannath. The number of persons identified by him is so large as to suggest that he must have known some of them at least before, for he escaped from the house with his son while the dacoity was in progress. He named 13 of the accused and made six wrong identifications. Jagannath's wife Musammatt Mula is absolutely unreliable. She identified four of the accused and nine wrong persons. It is clear that she was identifying at random and her evidence may be eliminated altogether. Khagga at the identification of 24th August identified eight accused and seven wrong persons. Ram Sewak, son of the complainant, at the same identification identified ten of the accused and six wrong persons. Jagannath's daughter Musammatt Ananti identified nine of the accused and picked out five wrong persons. Khagga's son Ram Charan was the most reliable witness of the whole lot. He identified seven accused and only made two mistakes.

One other remark is also to be made in criticism of the learned Judge's judgment. In two cases he relies on the evidence of persons who identified in Jail but failed to do so in Court. In order that this may be permissible the fact of the Jail identification must be stated in the witness' evidence. An identification in Jail is in essence a statement by the witness, "I saw this man who is now before me taking part in the dacoity". That statement can be used to corroborate his evidence given in Court. If the witness says in his evidence a number of persons were shown to me at the Jail and from "among them I pointed out those persons whom I had seen in the dacoity," it is permissible under s. 9 of the Evidence Act to call independent evidence, such as that of the Magistrate who conducted the identification, to prove the identity of the persons whom he picked out at the Jail, even though the witness himself may not correctly remember who they were.

In the case of Sheobaran Singh and Bansilal there is no room for doubt. They are identified respectively by five and six witnesses including Ram Charan the most reliable of the witnesses. They are also named by Bhudar in his confession and Bansilal is named by Jagnu in a confession which he made. Data Ram apart from a witness who identified him in Jail but failed to identify him in Court is identified by three witnesses including Ram Charan. He is also named by Bhudar and by Hulasi, none of whom have any motive for implicating him falsely. The other two accused Chhutkan and Sri Ram are not identified by any witness whose identification is at all reliable. I, therefore, allow their appeals and acquitting them direct that they be set at liberty. The appeals of Data Ram, Sheobaran Singh and Bansilal are dismissed.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 476, 476-B—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Government of India Act, 1915, (5 & 6 Geo. V, C. 61), s. 107—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 193, 471—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 40—Proceeding for commutation of rent instituted in Revenue Court—Application to prosecute petitioner for forgery, refusal of—Appeal to Collector—Complaint by Collector—Appeal to Commissioner, whether competent—Revision—High Court, power of, to interfere—Question, whether must be finally determined in Revenue proceedings—Refusal of Revenue Court to determine question—Denial of right of fair trial—Superintendence, power of, exercise of.

Petitioner filed an application for the commutation of his rent under s. 40 of the Bengal Tenancy Act before the Sub-Deputy Collector and filed a patta alleged to have been given to him by the opposite party in support of his application. The opposite party contended that the patta was a forgery and asked the Court to direct the prosecution of the petitioner for an offence under ss. 471 and 193 of the Penal Code, but the Sub-Deputy Collector after enquiry refused the application. The opposite party moved the Collector on appeal and that officer set aside the order of the Sub-Deputy Collector and made a complaint against the petitioner under ss. 471 and 193 of the Penal Code. The petitioner thereupon appealed to the Divisional Commissioner who held that no appeal lay to him and rejected the appeal. On an application for revision being made to the High Court:

Held, (1) that the Collector was acting as a Revenue Court and was exercising judicial powers in setting aside the order of the Sub-Deputy Collector and was, therefore, subject to the superintendence of the High Court and his order was revisable under s. 115 of the C. P. C.; [p. 446, col. 2.]

(2) that the Court also had jurisdiction to interfere under s. 107 of the Government of India Act; [ibid.]

(3) that the Commissioner had jurisdiction to hear the appeal preferred by the petitioner against the order of the Collector and to set aside that order if necessary. [p. 447, col. 2.]

Section 476-B of the Cr. P. C. contemplates that if an Appellate Court sets aside the order of the Original Court, the party prejudicially affected by the order of the Appellate Court has a right of appeal to the Court to which appeals from such Appellate Court ordinarily lie. [ibid.]

When a criminal offence is alleged to have been committed in the course of a revenue or civil proceeding, the rule is that the facts upon which the criminal offence is founded should, as far as possible, be finally determined in the Civil or Revenue Court before a prosecution in respect of the criminal offence is commenced. The refusal of the Revenue or Civil Court to try out the proceedings in which the criminal offence is alleged to have been committed materially affects the criminal proceedings and amounts to a denial of the right of fair trial. In such a case the High Court is competent to interfere with the order directing the institution of criminal proceeding under s. 107 of the Government of India Act. [ibid.]

Revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Champaran, dated the 23rd February 1925.

Mr. S. P. Varma, for the Petitioner.

Mr. N. N. Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against a complaint made by the Collector of Champaran on the 23rd February 1925, under s. 476 of the Cr. P. C., against the petitioner Faujdard Rai for his prosecution for offences under ss. 471 and 193, Indian Penal Code. It appears that on the 1st July 1924 the petitioner filed an application for the commutation of his rent under s. 40 of the Bengal Tenancy Act before the Sub-Deputy Collector of Champaran. On the same day he filed a patta alleged to have been given to him by the opposite party Reoti Raman Ojha. On the 5th August the petitioner was examined and the patta was tendered in evidence. On the 6th August the opposite party took a certified copy of the patta. On the 20th August the parties having come to an arrangement, the commutation case was withdrawn by the petitioner. On the 26th August the opposite party asked the Sub-Deputy Collector not to return the patta to the petitioner; but by that time it had already been taken back. On the 11th September the opposite party asked the Court to direct the prosecution of the petitioner for offences under s. 471 and 193, Indian Penal Code, but the Sub-Deputy Collector after inquiry refused the application.

On appeal the Collector set aside the order of the Sub-Deputy Collector and on the 23rd February 1925, he made a formal complaint under s. 200 of the Cr. P. C. to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Motihari for the prosecution of the petitioner.

The petitioner thereupon appealed to the Divisional Commissioner; but he on the 30th March 1925 held that no appeal lay.

Now the first question is whether the High Court has any jurisdiction to interfere with the order of the Collector. The Collector was clearly acting as a Revenue Court and he was exercising judicial powers in setting aside the order of the Sub-Deputy Collector and in making a complaint under s. 200 of the Cr. P. C. He was, therefore, subject to the superintendence of the High Court and his order is revisable under s. 115 of the C. P. C. Raktu Singh v. Emperor (1) is authority for this view.

The Court also has jurisdiction to interfere under s. 107 of the Government of India Act. Undoubtedly the Collector had jurisdiction in appeal to set aside the Sub-Deputy Collector's order declining to make a complaint against the petitioner. But in arriving at this result the Collector did not apply his mind to the evidence in favour of the petitioner and, therefore, he has failed to exercise jurisdiction. Finding that the opposite party had withdrawn from the compromise and instituted criminal proceedings against him, the petitioner renewed his application for commutation and re-filed the patta in the Sub-Deputy Collector's Court on the 14th November 1924. It is suggested that this is not the patta which was filed on the 1st July, but the Sub-Deputy Collector states definitely that it is the same patta and that it contains the endorsements made by him on the former occasion; the learned Collector has not considered how a prosecution for forgery can be maintained when there is no trace of any alteration in the document. It is true that a certified copy was issued from the Collector's office on the 6th August in which the plot alleged to have been leased by the patta is described as within Khata No. 226, Khasra No. 1227, while in the original document it is said to be within Khata No. 191 and Khasra No. 279. It is also true that in the certified copy the word "nij" appears and in the original patta contains the word "khas." The landlord denies that he ever gave any patta to the petitioner and his case is that the patta which is alleged to have been given in 1901, must be a forgery because the land is described by the number given to it at the revisional survey which took place long after 1901. It is suggested that after taking back the document on or about the 20th August, the petitioner altered the revisional survey numbers which are originally in the document into the numbers allotted to the land in the Cadastral Survey which took place before 1901.

Now there is no evidence to show that the Nos. 226 and 1237 which appear in the certified copy have any relation to the Nos. 191 and 279 which now appear in the patta and the object of altering the patta is, therefore, not clear. Moreover, if, as appears from the evidence, the opposite party was aware on the 21st July 1924, that the patta contained the revisional survey plots and was, therefore, a forgery, it is not understood why he did not bring that fact to the notice of the Sub-Deputy Collector on the 5th August, but allowed the case to be withdrawn on the 20th August without demur; nor is there any explanation why only six days later he asked that the documents by the petitioner should be attached. In my opinion the suspicious conduct of the opposite party has not been considered.

The learned Collector relies upon the statements of his copying staff, but they do not really touch the case. It has not been shown that the document, which was given to the copying staff, was the document now under consideration. On the contrary as there are no marks of alteration on the document, the presumption is that it is not the document which was made over to the copying department for the issue of a certified copy. The petitioner suggests that the copying department were in conspiracy with the opposite party and intentionally inserted the revisional survey plot numbers instead of the numbers on the document, but without going so far it is possible to hold that the copying department were deceived and that they copied out a document which was neither filed nor exhibited by the petitioner.

There is another point which requires notice. The learned Collector was asked to proceed with the commutation case which is now pending in order that the question of the genuineness of the patta might be determined before the criminal law was put in motion against the petitioner; but his order is that the question whether in fact the petitioner is a tenant or not should first be determined by the Criminal Court. This is a reversal of the ordinary procedure and cannot be permitted. When a criminal offence is alleged to have been committed in the course of revenue or civil proceedings, the rule is that the facts upon which the criminal offence is founded should, as far as possible, be finally determined in the Civil or Revenue Court. Here the refusal to try out the commutation case materially affects the criminal proceedings and amounts to a denial of the right of fair trial. This Court is, therefore, competent to interfere under s. 107 of the Government of India Act.

There is a third point raised, namely, that the learned Commissioner was wrong in declining to hear the appeal preferred by the petitioner. I think the contention must be accepted. Section 476-B of the Cr. P. C. appears to contemplate that if an Appellate Court sets aside the order of the Original Court, the party prejudicially affected has a right of appeal to the Court to which appeals from that Appellate Court ordinarily lie. In this case, therefore, the Commissioner had jurisdiction to hear the appeal from the order of the Collector and to set it aside, if necessary, and I am asked to direct that the criminal prosecution should not proceed till the Commissioner has disposed of the appeal. In my opinion it is not necessary to make any such order as I think I have jurisdiction to interfere under s. 115, C. P. C., and 107 of the Government of India Act. I direct that the order of the Collector be set aside.

The application is allowed but without costs.

471—Forgery—Using forged document as genuine—Witness deposing that he saw execution of document—Offence.

Where a party to a judicial proceeding relies on a forged document in support of his case, a witness who states that he saw the execution of the document by the person by whom it purports to have been executed, intentionally aids by his deposition the using of the document as genuine and is liable to prosecution for an offence under s. 471 read with s. 109 of the Penal Code, although he could not be charged with abetment of the forgery itself.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Gonda, by his letter No. 63, dated the 1st July 1925.

The Government Pleader, for the Opposite Party.

ORDER.—This is a Reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Gonda, I am asked to quash a commitment. The facts set forth are that one Sital Prasad lodged a complaint against one Baba Gayan Das under s. 406 for embazzlement of a sum of Rs. 35,400 which Sital Prasad had deposited with him. The case was tried in the Court of the Magistrate, and Sital Prasad produced a receipt to prove the deposit purporting to be signed by Baba Gayan Das. The Magistrate found that this document was forged and he took proceedings under s. 476 against six persons. One of these was Sital Prasad. He was charged under s. 465 with forgery and under ss. 467/114 with abetment of forgery of the valuable security amounting to the offence itself, also under s. 471 with using a forged document as genuine, and under s. 474 with having in his possession a document which he intended to use as forged document. This charge appears to be somewhat redundant, but it is not this that I am asked to quash. The Magistrate also committed Chhedi described as attesting witness, but with this commitment I am not now concerned.

There were three witnesses, Ram Kishor, Baba Gayan Das and Ram Dhani, who gave evidence that a sum of Rs. 35,400 had been deposited by Sital Prasad with Baba Gyan Das and that Baba Gayan Das had executed a receipt. These three persons have been committed on charges under s. 465 of forgery, ss. 467/114 of abetment of forgery, and ss. 471/109 of abetment of the fraudulent use of a forged document. It is this commitment which I am asked to quash.

The learned Judge says that even if the entire prosecution evidence is to be believed, it cannot be said that they committed forgery or abetted that offence. He goes on to say that if the entire prosecution is to be believed, then the offence which they have committed is that under s. 196 of the Indian Penal Code for giving false evidence and he has learnt that separate cases under s. 193, Indian Penal Code, are already pending against them. It is certainly difficult to see how they can be said to have abetted the forgery itself, if the only evidence is that they made a deposition in Court with regard to it. But it is not equally clear that they were not abetting the use of a forged document as genuine. If these three witnesses gave evidence, as they appear to have done, that they had seen Baba Gayan Das writing the receipt, it would appear that they intentionally aided by their deposition, the doing of the act. The deposition itself would be an act towards the use of the document in the case that would bring them under the third clause of s. 103. It is also possible that it might be a fair legal inference that they had engaged in conspiracy, for they could hardly have come into Court unless it had been previously arranged between themselves that Sital Prasad should use a forged document, and that they would give false evidence in support of it.

It is not desirable that there should be two trials in respect of the same act, namely, the giving of false evidence, one under s. 193 and another under ss. 471/109. But I do not think I have power to quash a commitment on such grounds as that. I think the best course will be to let the commitment stand, and to stay proceedings in the Magistrate's Court in respect of the offence under s. 193, Indian Penal Code. If the learned Sessions Judge, on trying the case, does not record a conviction under any section, the matter will come before this Court for decision whether the present suit in the Magistrate's Court should be allowed to go on.

The learned Sessions Judge when he has finished trying the case, will forward the record to this Court in order that the Court may decide whether the proceedings ought to go on in the Magistrate's Court or not.

The learned Sessions Judge will convey the orders of this Court to the Magistrate who is trying the cases under s. 193.

Commitment not quashed.

CIVIL CASE NO. 57 OF 1922.

July 21, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Buckland.

In the matter of KANHYA LAL
SEWBUX—PETITIONER.Ex parte RAM GOPAL PODDAR—OPPOSITE PARTY.Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), Sch. II, r. 11—High Court Insolvency Rules, r. 128—Creditor under composition—Proof of debt.

The mere fact that a sum is payable under composition and is stated therein to be payable does not of itself forego the need for proof, required by the concluding part of r. 128 of the Insolvency Rules.

Mr. K. P. Khaitan, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. N. Banerjee (Sr.), for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application made on behalf of Ram Gopal Poddar, one of the creditors of the insolvent, Kanhya Lal Sewbux, for an order that the trustee under the composition may be directed to pay him Rs. 19,159-6-0. On the 17th December 1923 an order was made approving the terms of composition annexed to the order, under which Babu Shedmull Dalmia of 69, Cotton Street, a creditor to the extent of Rs. 47,216 was appointed to be the trustee. The terms of composition recite two mortgages, one in favour of Shedmull Dalmia amounting to Rs. 35,000, and the other in favour of the applicant for Rs. 15,000 and it says that these sums shall be paid first of all as soon as sufficient funds come into the hands of the trustee.

It is alleged that the trustee has paid away considerable sums to unsecured creditors out of the assets, of which at present Rs. 20,000 are still in his hands. The trustee admits a certain amount of assets and that he has paid sums to unsecured creditors, but says that he has paid them out of his own pocket.

It is objected that the applicant's mortgage which is dated 7th March 1922 has not been proved, and that until that has been done he is not entitled to be paid. This is based upon r. 128 of the Insolvency Rules of this Court, which provides that "every person claiming to be a creditor under any composition or scheme, who has not proved his debt before the approval of such composition or scheme, shall lodge his proof with the trustee thereunder, if any, or, if there is no such trustee, with the Official Assignee who shall admit or reject the same." The rule concludes that no creditor shall be entitled to enforce payment under a composition unless he has proved his debt and proof has been admitted. I have also been referred to the 2nd Schedule, r. 11, of the Insolvency Act, which says:—"If a secured creditor does not either realize or surrender his security, he shall, before ranking for dividend, state in his proof the particulars of his security, the date when it was given and the value at which he assesses it, and shall be entitled to receive a dividend only in respect of the balance due to him after deducting the value so assessed."

The point is not altogether easy of determination, because the order approving the composition is made under the Act after it has been submitted by the Official Assignee to the creditors, and in the presence of the insolvent. In such circumstances, it may reasonably be argued that proof is not necessary, and that the order is admitted.

On the other hand, there is no provision either in the Act or in the rule contemplating any such position. The mere fact that the sum is payable under the composition and is stated therein to be payable does not of itself forego the need for proof. This appears from the latter part of r. 128.

Having regard to the terms of the Act and the terms of the rule, although possibly it may be superfluous, it seems to me that it is the duty of the secured creditor to lodge his proof which should be done with the trustee, now that the composition has been approved and there is a trustee.

It is not necessary at this stage to anticipate what may follow hereafter. It has been said that the object of insisting on proof is to obtain the benefit of the security for the unsecured creditors. That may be so. All I have to determine at present is whether or not before the money can be paid out the debt has to be proved, and, in my opinion, it should. I decide no more than that and as matters stand the applicant cannot obtain the order and I dismiss the application with costs.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. R. Deo, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal raises one question of law, namely whether oral evidence was legally admissible to prove a lease given for a period of six years in full satisfaction of the mortgage dated the 29th March 1909 involved in this suit. Both the Courts below have admitted such evidence and held that the mortgagee was in possession of the mortgaged property for a term of six years under an agreement that the debt was to be treated as fully satisfied as the result of the enjoyment of such possession. The plaintiffs' claim was accordingly dismissed. They have, therefore, come up in second appeal.

Before dealing with the question of law I would dispose of the contention raised regarding the incorrectness of the finding of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. My attention is drawn to the Perepatraks (Exs. 4 D-1, 4 D-2, 4 D-3, 4 D-4 and 4D-5) and it is urged that the Perepatraks do not support the finding that the plaintiffs' father was in possession of the land inasmuch as Exs. 4 D-1 and 4 D-2 do not mention his name but show somebody else's name as the actual cultivator. It is true that if the said Perepatraks had stood by themselves they would not have supported the defence but the entries in them read along with the oral evidence of plaintiffs' own witnesses P.

W. Nos. 3 and 4 make it sufficiently clear that the actual cultivators whose names are shown in the Perepatraks, Exs. 4 D-1, and 4 D-2 were lessees from the plaintiffs' father. I, therefore, see no reason to hold that the finding arrived at to the effect that the plaintiffs' father was in possession of the mortgaged property in full satisfaction of the mortgage debt for a period of six years, is not warranted by any evidence proper for consideration. I, therefore, overrule the contention, and hold that the finding is good finding for the purposes of this second appeal, provided the evidence on which it is based is legally admissible.

At this stage I propose to deal with the question of the admissibility of the oral evidence. It is argued that the effect of admitting the oral evidence for proving satisfaction by an oral lease for six years, is to modify the written contract embodied in the mortgage-deed regarding the manner of satisfying the mortgage-debt. Reliance is placed on s. 92, proviso (4) of the Indian Evidence Act. There are a number of cases wherein this question has been decided in favour of admitting oral evidence to prove the fact of satisfaction or discharge of an obligation created by a written and registered instrument.

In a similar case of Rama Bakhsh v. Durjan (1), it was held that such an oral agreement was not one which detracted from, added to or varied the original contract, but only provided for the means by which the instalments were to be paid, and that it was, therefore, admissible. In Ram Lal Chandra Karmokar v. Govinda Karmokar (2), it was similarly held that oral evidence was admissible to prove a discharge and satisfaction of the mortgage bond and that the provisions of s. 92, proviso 4 of the Evidence Act did not exclude such evidence. To the same effect was the decision in Ram Awatar v. Tulsi Prasad Singh (3), where it was held that oral evidence was admissible to prove a subsequent arrangement under which the usufructuary mortgagee allowed the mortgagor to possess and enjoy a portion of the mortgaged property in lieu of the payment stipulated by the terms of the mortgage-deed.

to be made by him to the latter inasmuch as it did not supersede and vary any stipulation regarding the payment but merely concerned the mode of payment.

In Kamla Sahai v. Babu Nandan Mian (4), the mortgagee was under a subsequent arrangement placed in possession and authorised to receive the profits in satisfaction of his dues under the mortgage. It was held by Mukerji and Richardson, JJ., that this was not an agreement contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from the terms of the original contract but merely providing means for the satisfaction of the bond, and could be proved by oral evidence, and that s. 92 of the Evidence Act did not apply. Mitra, A. J. C., in Second Appeal No. 15-B of 1913 which arose out of a mortgage suit held that oral evidence of discharge or satisfaction of a debt was always admissible. In this view of the law it is idle to contend that an oral agreement of satisfaction or discharge of a mortgage-debt is not capable of being proved by oral evidence and that the evidence offered in the present case in support of it was inadmissible under law.

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Those in the lower Courts which will be paid as already ordered.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 11, 12—Darpatni tenure—Security of charge for payment of rent, whether ceases on transfer of tenure—Rent, liability to pay, after transfer of tenure—Rule against perpetuities, charge or security if offends.

As soon as the lessee of a darpatni tenure transfers it in accordance with the provisions of ss. 11 and 12 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and ceases to have any estate, his liability for the payment of the rent ceases if that liability is based on the privity of estate. But if by the terms of the lease some further rights and liabilities, (e. g., security or charge for the payment of the darpatni rent) are created between the parties, they do not cease automatically on the transfer of the tenure and the termination of the relationship of landlord and tenant. [p. 454, col. 1.]

The rule against perpetuities affects only the creation of a future interest in property and the restricting of transfer of property by tying it up. The rule has no application to the case of a charge where a present interest is created and there is no transfer of an interest in property, but the property is merely made security for the payment of money. Therefore, where a charge or security is created as a part of the consideration for a darpatni lease, that charge or security is not extinguished on lessee's transfer of his interest under the lease. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—The facts necessary to be stated for the purposes of this appeal are these: In 1309, the plaintiff and his co-sharer obtained a darpatni settlement of 4-annas share of three villages from the predecessors of defendant No. 1 and executed a kabuliyat in their favour hypothecating the said 4-annas share of the three villages as well as seven other mouzahs as security for the payment of the darpatni rent and for the performance of obligations and discharge of liabilities incidental to the darpatni. In 1312 they sold the said darpatni to the defendant No. 2; and the defendant No. 1 recognized the transfer and accepted rent from the defendant No. 2. In the kobala by which the darpatni was sold there was a stipulation that the defendant No. 2 would furnish security to the defendant No. 1 or to the plaintiff and his co-sharer in order to re-place the security given by the plaintiff and his co-sharer. On the defendant No. 2 failing to furnish the said security the plaintiff, to whom the seven mouzahs in suit were subsequently allotted on partition between him and his co-sharer, instituted a suit against the defendant No. 2 making the defendant No. 1 pro forma defendant, for specific performance, and obtained a deposit of security in cash; but the defendant No. 1 did not accept the said security,

The plaintiff then instituted the present suit praying for a declaration that the said seven mouzahs were no longer subject to any charge.

The Munsif dismissed the suit, but the Subordinate Judge on appeal reversed that decision and granted the plaintiff a decree declaring that the charge no longer subsisted. From that decree the present appeal has been preferred by the heirs of the defendant No. 1.

The appellants' contention, which was the defence to the action, is that the liability of the lessee to the lessor continued notwithstanding the transfer, as based on the privity of contract between the parties; that the lessor had also a remedy against the transferee for rent and on the covenants running with the land, the transferee was under a liability based on privity of estate; that although the lessor has his remedy as against the transferee who is to be treated as primarily liable, the original lessee remains in the position of a surety and he cannot get rid of his liability merely by transfer. It is contended further that even if the liability to pay the rent be held to cease in consequence of the transfer the security remains in force and the charge is not extinguished.

The respondent urges that the lessee ceases to be liable for the rent as soon as the transfer is complete, and in any event if the lessor has accepted the transferee, whether expressly or impliedly, e. g., by acceptance of rent; that there having been acceptance of rent in the present case the original lessee's liability for rent has altogether ceased; and that to hold under such circumstances that the security still remains in force would be to offend against the rule against perpetuities.

Now, there is no dispute that the darpatni is a permanent tenure governed by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, Mahomed Abbas Mondul v Brojo Sundari Debia (1). Under s. 11 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is capable of being transferred in the same manner and to the same extent as other immoveable property. Section 12 provides a limit as to the mode in which the transfer is to be made. As soon as the document by which the transfer is made is registered—and the registration is not to take place until a condition precedent mentioned in s. 12 is fulfilled—the transfer is complete. When the estate is transferred and the vendor ceases to have any estate, then if the vendor's liability is a liability consequent on privity of estate, that liability ceases: Kristo Bulluv Ghose v. Kristo Lal Singh (2) and Girish Chandra Guho v. Khagendra Nath Chattopadhyaya (3). The same principle has been held to apply in the case of transfer by the original lessee, Hamendra Nath Mukerji v. Kumar Nath Ray (4). It is clear therefore that after the transfer the plaintiff was no longer liable for the rent, and the defendant No. 1 was thenceforward to look to the defendant No. 2 for the same.

The next question is as to whether, when the liability for payment of the rent ceased, the security continued and the charge remained in force. The appellants' contention is that it did, and that though as a consequence of the transfer the transferee became by operation of law the tenant of the tenure and the transferror ceased to be a tenant, the transferror was not necessarily absolved from the liability which was created by the contract. In support of this contention reliance has been placed upon a passage in the judgment of the Court in the case of Rupchand Ghose v. Narendra Krishna Ghose (5). The passage indicates that the fact that by transfer the transferror ceases to be a tenant does not imply that he is absolved from liability under the terms of the contract between him and the lessor, and that it is conceivable that a person may cease to be a tenant and yet continue liable to the landlord under his personal covenant.

The respondent urges that if it is held that the security remains in force in spite of the transfer, it would mean that the lessor would be competent to impose a restriction on transfer of a permanent tenure which is transferable by law and that in that case the security might continue for ever and thus offend against the rule against perpetuities.

As regards the first of these objections, in my opinion, it is not well-founded on principle. In the case of Dinobundhu Roy v. W. C. Banerjee (6), it was held by this Court that a transfer of a tenure made in terms of the provisions of the Bengal

(1) 18 C. 360; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 240.

Tenancy Act is not binding on the landlord, if there is a contract between the landlord and the tenant that the transfer shall not be valid and binding until security to the satisfaction of the landlord has been furnished, and if such security has not been given; and that in such a case the original tenant is still liable for the rent. Permanent leases no doubt are transferable under s. 11 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; but a provision in a lease of a permanent tenure for forfeiture or re entry in case of assignment in violation of its terms would not be invalid. In Keshab Lal Nag Majumdar v. Madhu Sudan Pal Knndu (7), it was held by this Court that the provisions of s. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act saving conditions restraining alienation in leases where the conditions are for the benefit of the lessor, are not inconsistent with the provisions of s. 11 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that the two provisions of the two Acts are not inconsistent or repugnant to each other but are capable of standing together. It follows, therefore, that the lessor is competent to insist on a stipulation that he would not be bound by the transfer unless the transferee keeps the security in force. The whole question then resolves itself into one as to whether such an intention or its contrary may be gathered from the kabuliyat. The learned Subordinate Judge has proceeded upon the decision in the case of Bijoy Chand Mohatab Bahadur v. Sarat Chandra Adhiya (8) which he treats as an authority for the proposition that the liability to pay the rent having ceased, the charge created for payment of rent is automatically extinguished. The decision in that case, however, rested upon the terms of the kabuliyat on which the case was based and not upon any such general principle. The kabuliyat in that case provided that so long as the lessees were not released from the liability to pay the rent, the lessees shall not be able to transfer in any manner the property mortgaged as security for the rent. It was held in the case that on the transfer being completed the lessees' liability to pay the rent ceased and, therefore, the security was at an end.

The relevant passages in the kabuliyat in the present case are the following—“

“We shall without objection provide the rent instalment by instalment. If we fail therein you will be entitled to recover the arrears, according to the law which is in force, or which will be in force, from the said darpatni mehal and from the properties hypothecated as specified in Schedule (kha) or from our other moveable and immoveable properties which stand in our names or benami. To that neither we nor our heirs or representatives shall have any objection at any time whatsoever If you suffer any damage by our acts then you will be entitled to recover the same from whatever moveable or immoveable properties we or our heirs or representatives shall have in our own name or benami and from the properties hypothecated and specified in Schedule (kha) and to that neither we nor they shall be entitled to raise any objection If this darpatni mehal be sold for arrears of rent due by us or in execution or is transferred in any other way, our representatives shall be bound by all the terms of this kabuliyat Being in possession as darpatni talukdar and maintaining intact the boundaries and regularly paying the rent, with our sons, grandsons, heirs and representatives shall in great felicity enjoy and possess the darpatni interest with powers of gift and sale In case we do anything injurious to you we and our heirs and representatives shall be bound to compensate you therefore, and in order to secure the said damages and for the performance of all the stipulations of this kabuliyat we give as security the properties in Schedule (kha) below owned and possessed by us”

These conditions created a charge on the seven mouzahs for all times to come for the due payment of the darpatni rent and the performance of the other obligations arising under the kabuliyat, and there is nothing in the kabuliyat which may go to indicate that the security would be extinguished on the lessees' liability to pay the rent ceasing with the transfer. That this was the intention of the parties is also suggested by the term in the kobala by which the plaintiff and his co-sharer transferred the darpatni to the defendant No. 2 by which the latter was required to furnish security to the plaintiff and his co-sharer or to the defendant No. 1 in order to re-place the original security. This intention is also evidenced by the fact of the institution of the suit for specific performance, the result of which, however, is not binding on the defendant No. 1.

As regards the contention that a security of this description which is to last for all times to come is repugnant to the rule against perpetuities, I am not prepared to regard the contention as well-founded. This rule affects only the creation of a future interest in property and the restricting of transfer of property by tying it up. The rule has no application to the case of a charge where a present interest is created and there is no transfer of an interest in property, but the property is merely made security for the payment of money. The creation of this charge was a part of the consideration for the darpatni lease, and I am unable to see how it could be extinguished merely because the lessee chose to transfer his interest under the lease. The position, therefore, is this: The liability to pay the rent subsists so long as the relationship of landlord and tenant exists. This relationship as between a landlord and his lessee, the permanent tenure-holder, ceases on the latter transferring the whole of his tenure. The lease may create further rights and liabilities as between the parties thereto and where it does, they do not cease automatically on the termination of the relationship.

For these reasons I am of opinion that plaintiff by merely transferring the darpatni to the defendant No. 2 could not get rid of the charge created by him under the kabuliyat, and that the mere acceptance of rent by the defendant No. 1 from the defendant No. 2 has not extinguished the same. The plaintiff, in my opinion, is not entitled to the declaration sought for by him.

The decree of the learned Subordinate Judge should be set aside and that of the learned Munsif restored and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Walmsley, J.—I agree.

Hindu Law—Debt incurred by father—Pious obligation of son to pay off father's debt, extent of—Misappropriation by father, effect of.

Where a Hindu father appropriates money belonging to another person under circumstances which do not render the taking of the money itself a criminal offence, a subsequent misappropriation by the father cannot discharge his sons from their liability arising out of their pious obligation to satisfy the debt. But the position is different if the money is taken by the father and misappropriated under circumstances which render the taking itself a criminal offence. [p. 455, col. 2.]

One J was plaintiff's patwari and owed the plaintiff a sum of money in respect of the collections made by him on behalf of the plaintiff and being unable to pay the amount he arranged with A that the latter should execute a mortgage-bond in favour of the plaintiff to discharge the debt. After A's death plaintiff brought a suit to enforce the mortgage-bond against A's son:

Held, (1) that it was J's duty to account for the money which had come into his hands to the plaintiff and his failure to do so involved on his part a breach of civil duty and that even if he had misappropriated the money it was a subsequent act which did not render the original taking of the money by J a criminal offence and that, therefore, J's debt in discharge of which A had executed the mortgage-bond in suit was not tainted with illegality or immorality, and A's son was under a pious obligation to discharge the debt secured by the mortgage-bond; [p. 456, col. 1.]

(2) that the plaintiff was not, however, entitled to a mortgage-decree inasmuch as the debt was not incurred by A for the benefit of the family; [ibid.]

(3) that the plaintiff was entitled to a simple money-decree for the amount of the mortgage-bond with interest and could recover the amount of the decree out of the entire ancestral property in the hands of A's son. [ibid.]

Das, J.—This appeal is directed against the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur, dated the 26th of May 1922, and arises out of a suit instituted by the appellant, the Maharaja of Darbhanga, to enforce a mortgage-bond executed by one Adhik Lal Mandar in his favour on the 4th of April 1916.

The plaintiff's case as made out in the plaint is as follows: One Jag Narayan Lal Das was his patwari and he owed the plaintiff Rs. 1,231-15-9 in respect of the collection made by him on behalf of the plaintiff. The patwari being unable to pay the amount arranged with Adhik Lal Mandar to execute the mortgage-bond in question in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff states that there were money-lending transactions between Adhik Lal Mandar and Jag Narain and that Adhik Lal paid Rs 200 in cash to the plaintiff and executed a mortgage bond for Rs. 1,031-15-9 in favour of the plaintiff. Adhik Lal Mandar is dead and the suit is now brought against defendant No. 1, the minor son of Adhik Lal, and Billo Mandar his brother. The allegation in the plaint is that the defendants were members of a joint family of which Adhik Lal Mandar was the karta and that, as such the plaintiff is entitled to enforce the mortgage-bond as against the members of the joint family.

The learned Munsif found that the mortgage-bond was in fact executed by Adhik Lal Mandar for valuable consideration. According to him Jag Narain Lal misappropriated the sum of Rs. 1,231-15-9 and Adhik Lal executed the mortgage-bond in question in consideration of the plaintiff abstaining from taking criminal proceedings as against Jag Narain. On this finding he thought that the mortgage-bond could not be enforced as against the defendants, and he dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs. On the question whether defendant No. 2, the brother of Adhik Lal Mandar, was in any event liable, he came to the conclusion that Billo Mandar was separate from Adhik Lal and could not in any case be liable on a bond executed by Adhik Lal. The plaintiff appealed to the learned Subordinate Judge. That learned Judge agreed with the finding of the Court of first instance on the question whether Billo was joint with Adhik Lal. He thought that there was no consideration for the mortgage-bond and that, were Adhik Lal Mandar alive, the plaintiff could not enforce the mortgage-bond against him. He also agreed with the finding of the learned Munsif that the defendants could not be made liable on the bond in question, and dismissed the appeal. The plaintiff now comes to this Court.

The finding of the Courts below that Billo Mandar was separate from Adhik Lal Mandar is a finding of fact which is binding on us in second appeal. The plaintiff's suit as against Billo Mandar must accordingly fail.

The next question is whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover the money covered by the mortgage-bond from the defendant No. 1. The solution of this question depends on whether what Adhik Lal undertook to pay was tainted with illegality or immorality. The argument on behalf of the respondents in this Court was to the effect that Jag Narain Lal was guilty of a criminal offence and that, if he had executed the mortgage-bond in question, it could not be enforced as against his sons; and that, that being so, and Adhik Lal having undertaken to pay the money tainted with illegality or immorality, his son defendant No. 1 cannot be called upon to pay the debt of his father. There are many decisions in the books on the question how far a Hindu son is under a pious obligation to discharge a debt of his father when such debt consists of money misappropriated by the latter. Here the mortgage-bond was not executed by the patwari, but by Adhik Lal Mandar, who certainly was not guilty of any criminal misappropriation. But the problem is exactly the same, namely, is there any illegality or immorality involved in a transaction of this nature. There is a divergence of judicial opinion on this question but, as was pointed out by Mookerjee, J., in Chakouri Mahton v. Ganga Proshad (1), "the case might possibly be reconciled if we recognize the distinction between a criminal offence and a breach of civil duty". That learned and distinguished Judge discussed the various cases on the point and came to the conclusion that "Where the taking of the money itself is not a criminal offence, a subsequent misappropriation by the father cannot discharge the son from his liability to satisfy the debt; but the position is different if the money has been taken by the father and misappropriated under circumstances which render the taking itself a criminal offence". I entirely agree with the view taken by Mookerjee, J.

(1) 12 Ind. Cas. 600-30 C. 862; 15 C. L. J. 228; 16 C. W. N. 519.

in the case to which I have referred which is founded on the decision of the Madras High Court in Medai Dalavoy Tirumalaiappa Mudaliar v. Veerabudra (2).

What then is the position? Jag Narain was the plaintiff's patwari. It was his duty to make collections on behalf of the plaintiff and the taking of the money was in the ordinary course of his employment as patwari and was in no sense a criminal offence. Now what was the position when the money originally came into the hands of Jag Narain? It was his duty to account for it to the plaintiff and the failure to do so involved on his part a breach of civil duty. It is said that he misappropriated the money; but if he did so, it was a subsequent act, for as I have said it was part of his duty to make collections on behalf of the plaintiff. That being so, the son is clearly under a pious obligation to discharge the debt incurred by Adhik Lal Mandar. The plaintiff is, however, not entitled to a mortgage-decree, for he has not shown that the debt was incurred for the benefit of the family. He is entitled to a decree for the sum of Rs. 1,031-15-9 with interest thereon at 12 per cent. per annum up to the date of this decree. The plaintiff is also entitled to interest at 6 per cent. per annum on his decree up to the date of realization. He is entitled to recover the money out of the entire ancestral property now in the hands of defendant No. 1. The plaintiff will also get his costs throughout from the defendant No. 1.

tained on other ground—Appeal, whole case, whether can be opened in.

In a suit to set aside the sale of an estate, held by a Collector under the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, on the ground that no arrears were due from the estate, the plaintiff must make out a prima facie case by showing that no arrears were actually unpaid on the date of the sale. [p. 457, col. 1.]

Where a plaintiff bases his claim on two grounds and the Court decrees it on one of them only without discussing the other, but on a review application by the defendant, rejects the ground on which it had based its decision formerly and maintains the decree on the second ground, in an appeal by the defendant, although his application for review was limited only to the first ground, it is open to the plaintiff to re-open in the Court of Appeal the question concerning the second ground as well. JUDGMENT.

Walmsley, J.—This appeal is preferred by the first defendant, the purchaser at an auction-sale held under the provisions of Act XI of 1859.

The estate sold was a residuary share bearing Touzi No. 2017 of the Chittagong Collectorate. The plaintiffs alleged that there were no arrears due from the estate and, granted that there were arrears, that the processes required by the Act were not duly served.

The First Court decreed the suit in February 1918 on the ground that there was no arrear of revenue on account of which the sale could be held. The purchaser then preferred an application for review of judgment, and this was allowed on April 1918. Both sides adduced additional evidence, and then the learned Subordinate Judge held that there were arrears for which the estate could be sold, but that there was collusion between the appellant and one of plaintiffs' co-sharers, and consequently he directed the appellant to re-convey the property to the plaintiffs.

Then the defendant purchaser preferred an appeal and on his behalf it was urged before the Appellate Court that the order allowing a review of judgment was limited to the question whether as a fact there were arrears of revenue on account of which the estate could be sold. The learned Judge accepted this argument and confined his attention to that question. He then dealt with the evidence about the kists, and about the entries in the Touzi Department's ledgers and he agreed with the view taken in the second judgment of the First Court that the Pous kist if unpaid, became "arrears" within the meaning of s. 2 of the Act and that if such arrears remained unpaid on February 1925, the latest date for payment, as fixed under s. 3, there could be a valid sale; but he held that it was for the auction-purchaser to prove that there were arrears, and that he had produced no evidence to that effect. Consequently he dismissed the appeal.

It will be convenient to deal first with the main ground on which the purchaser attacks the Judge's decision. It is this, that the learned Judge was wrong in laying upon the purchaser the burden of proving that there were arrears of revenue, instead of requiring the plaintiffs to prove that there were no arrears. It is conceded for the respondents that the authorities quoted by the Judge do not bear out his view, but the learned Pleader for the respondents says that the view is correct. Among other things he said it was a matter within the special knowledge of the purchaser. That argument appears unsound: if anybody has special knowledge it must be the late owners. The question, however, does not turn upon special knowledge, but on the ordinary rule that a plaintiff must make out a case. If the plaintiffs want the Court to hold that the Collector had no authority to put the machinery of Act XI into force after 25th February they must make out a prima facie case to that effect, and they must do so by showing that actually there were no arrears unpaid on 25th February. If that were the only question it might be possible for us to treat the statements made in the plaint as admissions that arrears were left outstanding. Another aspect of the case, however, has been put before us. The result of the review has been that the other arguments advanced by the plaintiff have never been considered by the Appellate Court. Their case was that there had been fraud in the matter of service of processes, and fraud in the failure of their co-sharers, acting in connivance with the purchaser to deposit money given to them by the plaintiffs for deposit in the Collector's office. The learned Judge held that he could not deal with these questions, because the order granting review of judgment was confined to the question whether there were arrears and he took this view although the Judge of the First Court had again dealt with all questions.

This is very unsatisfactory. The plaintiffs appealed to the District Judge against the order granting review of judgment, but it was held that no appeal lay. It is said that they appealed to this Court but whether it was an appeal or an application under s. 115, C. P. C., they were unsuccessful. Does it follow that the plaintiffs are unable to put before the Appellate Court the argument that the First Court was wrong in holding that notices were duly served and that the defendant was not a party to any fraud? It appears to me that the plaintiffs are protected by r. 7 of O. XLVII, and that whether the order granting review of judgment was limited in its scope or not, it remained open to the plaintiffs after the second judgment of the First Court to re-open in the Court of Appeal the questions of fraud and suppression of processes.

It is very desirable, now that the litigation has lasted so long, that all the matters in controversy should be threshed out.

The order that I think we should make is this: The judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are set aside, and the appeal will be re-heard: the purchaser will be the appellant as he has been throughout: the question whether there were arrears outstanding on 25th February will be dealt with on the footing that the burden of proof lies on the plaintiffs to prove that there were no arrears: the respondents will be entitled to support the decree passed in their favour by the First Court by showing that the processes were not properly served, or that on account of fraud or irregularity the sale cannot be allowed to stand.

The costs of this hearing will abide the result.

Suhrawardy, J.—I agree.

*Hindu Law—Joint family—Mortgage by manager—Interest, high rate of—Necessity—Burden of proof—
Finding by Trial Court—Appellate Court, interference

The manager of a Hindu joint family, whether the father or not, is not entitled in law to borrow money at an exorbitant rate of interest unless there is necessity for such a rate, and, if the rate of interest is excessive, the onus will be on the lender to show that there was necessity for such an onerous rate; that is, where the rate is shown to be onerous, it must be shown that there was pressing necessity at the time of the loan for such an onerous rate. The actual result brought about by the mounting of interest, if not paid, to a crushing figure cannot affect the principle. A Court is not entitled to presume that any particular rate of interest is onerous. A rate prima facie harsh may, considering the nature of the security offered, its dubious title or its exiguous nature, be perfectly reasonable when the facts are known. Those attacking the transaction must first show prima facie that the rate of interest is unnecessarily high for the circumstances of the case, although in certain cases the rate may be prima facie so excessive that proof is practically unnecessary. [p. 461, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the Trying Court has not considered it necessary to call on the lender to explain the rate of interest, and no issue has been framed, therefore, a Court of Appeal should not interfere without giving an opportunity to the party affected to explain it, unless the rate is so monstrous as to be unconscionable in any conceivable set of circumstances. [p. 462, col. 1.]

Where a mortgage of family property was executed by a Hindu father at 12 per cent. compound interest consolidating a series of prior simple money loans at 12 and 18 per cent. simple interest:

Held, that the fact that the money due on the mortgage had aggregated to a very large sum on account of non-payment of interest was insufficient to render the rate of interest excessive or not binding on the sons. [p. 461, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Odgers, J.—This is a petition by the plaintiff for an order directing the Additional District Judge of the Agency Division, Waltair, to review his judgment and decree in A. S. No. 2 of 1923, dated 30th April 1923. The suit came to the Additional District Judge on appeal from the Judicial Assistant Commissioner of the Agency Division, Vizagapatam, in a mortgage suit on a bond dated 9th May 1901 executed by the first defendant in favour of one K. Perrazu, said to be the adoptive father of the plaintiff. The first defendant is the undivided father of the defendants Nos. 2 to 6 and the manager of the joint family. No less than 14 issues were originally framed in the case and there is in fact a petition by the defendants Nos. 2 to 6 against the findings of the learned Additional District Judge on points of adoption, limitation and the binding nature of the mortgage. These points were all given up before us, and the petition is confined to the conclusions arrived at by the learned Judge in para. 8 (a) to (f) of his judgment.

The dealings between the parties began on the 12th December 1892 by a promissory note of that date for Rs. 600 at 18 per cent. Ex. D. This was followed by a promissory note of 4th February 1893, Ex. D-2 for Rs. 600 at 12 per cent. and also on the 7th May 1895 Ex. D-1 for Rs. 1,000 at 12 per cent. Nothing having been paid on any of these promissory notes, they were consolidated into a mortgage on the 11th November 1895, Ex. L for Rs. 6,000 at 10½ per cent. payable on the 11th November, every year, in default interest to be compounded, the whole principal and interest being re-payable on the 11th November, 1897; and if it is not paid within that time interest shall be at 12 per cent. compound. Nothing having been paid under this, the further suit mortgage, Ex. S, dated 9th May 1901 for Rs. 11,000 was executed at Rs. 1-0-6 or 12-3-8 per cent. compound interest. Nothing having been paid for this mortgage the plaintiff instituted the suit for no less than Rs. 1, 07,000 odd. The learned Additional District Judge evidently impressed, I think, with the way in which this debt has accumulated, has reduced the interest payable so as to make the whole amount due from the defendants Rs. 45,000 odd. The learned Additional District Judge in para. 8 (a) to (f) considers whether the bargain was harsh and unconscionable based on undue influence by the mortgagee or the inherent harshness of the bargain. It may be said at once that no case of undue influence was proved and in fact I think it is fair to say that the contention of the parties and their Counsel was not really focussed on this point of excessive interest until the last moment. Their attention was concentrated on that date on the more important points of adoption, limitation, etc., and Mr. C. Sambasiva Rao, Barrister-at-Law, who was present at the hearing in the Additional District Court, has stated to us that it was only in the later stages in the hearing of the appeal that this point was raised and was pressed on the attention of the learned Judge owing to Counsel and the Vakils in the case having received a copy of the Privy Council decision in Ram Bhujhawan Prosad Singh v. Nathu Ram (1) which will be presently noticed. The suit had a curious history. It began as O. S. No. 41 of 1913 before the Subordinate Judge of Cocanada some of the properties being situated in the Godavari District and some in the Agency. The plaintiff got a decree and costs. Execution was taken of the properties within the ordinary jurisdiction and a small sum was recovered. As for the balance due the decree was transferred to the Agency Judge for execution. It was held, however, that a fresh suit must be brought in the Agency Court. So O. S. No. 7 of 1921 was filed in consequence. The learned Judges held in Ram Bhujhawan Prosad Singh v. Nathu Ram (1), that where, as here, the manager of a Hindu family borrows money on the mortgage of a family property, it must be proved that there was necessity to borrow at the rate contracted for and, secondly, that it was not unreasonable to borrow at some such high rate and upon such terms. The learned Judge took these propositions from the judgment in Ram Bhujhawan Singh v. Nathu Ram (1), where they are quoted from Nawab Nazir Begam v. Rao Raghunath Singh (2), and this is the law report referred to by Mr. C. Sambasiva Rao in his statement to us from the bar. The learned Judge proceeds:—"The main thing is to see if results show that the terms taken as a whole were harsh and unconscionable". On the other hand the Privy Council in a case reported as Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (3) say that it is misleading to have regard to the result alone. Their Lordships say: "It is not enough—indeed, it is misleading—to look at the result alone.....A borrower who obtains a loan secured by a promissory-note on a quite reasonable term, by neglecting to pay the note at maturity, further neglecting to pay the accruing interest for the several years following, and then giving a renewal note for the original debt plus the capitalised interest, could produce a result which might at first sight appear oppressive, and yet there would be nothing harsh or unconscionable in the creditor's demand, since the added interest only accumulated while he forbore to enforce the payment of the sums from time to time due to him". As to this the learned Judge himself says: "There is no suggestion that the mortgagee wilfully allowed default, so as to take advantage of an improvident man and to pile up debt swiftly; on the other hand, it is clear that the mortgagee warned the mortgagor of the rapidity with which the debt was swelling". The learned Judge is obviously swayed by the hardship on the younger sons losing practically the whole of their estate owing to the improvidence of their father, not in borrowing the money for interest as it was in fact admitted or found to exist, but in failing to pay interest as it fell due and thereby causing payment of compound interest to become necessary.

Ordinarily speaking it is extremely doubtful whether the sons would have been allowed to raise this plea at all. The issues taken as regards this point are issues Nos. 3 and 11. The third issue is: "Is the suit mortgage debt binding on the defendants Nos. 2 to 6? It is contended for the sons that this issue opens the whole point of liability of the sons for the father's debts created by the mortgage. This point is considered at length by the learned Judge in para. 8 (a) to (f) and he agrees with the lower Court that the mortgage is a valid charge on the joint family property. The question that it lay on the plaintiff to show that the father could not raise money at a lower rate is not considered in that part of the judgment and it is perfectly clear to me that neither side at the hearing of the appeal contemplated that issue No. 3, would admit that discussion at all. The only other issue properly referable to the point is issue No. 11, whether the interest claimed is usurious and penal. On an examination of the respondent's grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court, the only grounds urged are that the enhanced rate of interest provided for in Ex. L, and carried into Ex. S, is penal and unconscionable and that the lower Court erred in thinking that it had no power to give relief for the usurious and preposterous claim. Cases have been cited to us by the learned Vakil for the respondent to show that the pleadings in this country are to be leniently considered. He contends that practically any objection to the transaction can be made to raise this point as to the binding nature of the interest claimed. He points for example to Gangapershad Sahu v. Maharani Bibi (4). There the issue was whether the defendant is bound to pay off the debt. It was held that that enabled the question of the amount to be raised. I cannot, speaking personally, see why in this case the issue could not have been clearly and distinctly taken. One view of it was certainly advanced in issue No. 11 but Mr. S. Varadachari for the respondents quite frankly says that their case here is not for relief under s. 74 of the Contract Act. He based his case entirely on the Hindu Law. I have carefully considered all the cases that we have been referred to. The principle laid down in Nawab Nazir Begam v. Rao Raghunath Singh (2) is that where there is no evidence on either side, i. e., as to the necessity for borrowing at the particular rate, their Lordships of the Privy Council would relieve, where "the thing speaks for itself". This is the case previously quoted by the later decision of their Lordships in Ram Bhujawan Singh v. Nathu Ram (1). Their Lordships holding that, although there may be necessity to borrow, it is open to the defendants to show that there was no necessity to borrow on the onerous terms of the mortgage. In that case the rate was Rs. 2-8-0, 30 per cent. simple and in default Rs. 3-2-0 or 37½ per cent. compound. So it seems to me that before any question of reduction of the amount in question can be raised, there being no evidence on either side, we must see if "the matter speaks for itself," that is to say, if it is obvious from the terms of the document that an unfair bargain as against the sons has been concluded by the father. The Privy Council cases to which we have been referred, nearly all concern a rate which is obviously very high. In the case just referred to in Nawab Nazir Begam v. Rao Raghunath Singh (2) the sum originally borrowed Rs. 398 became 3 lakhs. In Rai Radha Kishun v. Jag Sahu (5), another Privy Council case, the rate was 24 per cent. compound with half yearly rests. Their Lordships observe there that it was evident on the face of the document that the interest charged was far in excess of the commercial rates. In Ram Bhujawan v. Nathu Ram (1), the interest was 35 per cent. compound with quarterly rests. Nand Ram v. Bhupal Singh (6) refers to a very high rate of interest, the original sum borrowed being Rs. 80 at 27 per cent. compound. In Manna Lal v. Karu Singh (7), the Privy Council concurred in altering 18 per cent. compound to 18 per cent. simple. In Ramchandra Prasad v. Mahabir Prasad Singh (8), the Patna High Court held that an agreement to pay compound interest on failure to pay simple is not invalid and does not fall within s. 74 of the Indian Contract Act. It, will, I suppose, be agreed that each case must be judged by its own circumstances. In the present case, we have a series of prior transactions between the parties at 12 per cent. and 18 per cent. simple. We have Ex. L with 10½ per cent. simple and in default 12 per cent. compound. Nothing having been paid for over a period of nine years to the lender, the final transaction, Ex. S, which consolidates all the others, reserves a rate of interest at 12 per cent. compound there being no increase on that rate in case of default.

It is all very well to consider the case of hardship of the family, but they presumably had the benefit of the amount borrowed. They have also what benefit there might be in delaying the payment of interest and principal. That this has now aggregated to a very large sum there is no doubt. But, on the other hand, the interests of the lender who has been kept out of his money for a long series of years have also to be considered and as stated there is no evidence that he took any undue advantage of his borrower. On the other hand, he warned him that the sum due was very rapidly growing. I cannot agree that on the face of the document or that the thing of itself speaks of an unjust or unfair transaction as far as the sons are concerned. What the commercial rate of borrowing referred to by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ram Bhujawan Singh v. Nathu Ram (1) may be in Cocanada we have no means of knowing. But it is not an unfair inference from the facts as we know them that the lender was not willing to wait for his money any longer unless the borrower consented to pay 12 per cent. compound interest which he had already bound himself to pay by his default in the repayment of the sum borrowed under the previous mortgage; Ex. L. On the best consideration I can give to both the facts and law of this case, I am bound to say, I think, that the learned District Judge was wrong in the view he took of this transaction as far as it affects the sons. In my view the petition must be allowed with costs and the decree of the Additional District Judge set aside and the First Court's decree restored.

IN C. M. P. No. 3092 OF 1923.

This is a petition by the defendants Nos. 2 to 6 with regard to the question of necessity of borrowing and its binding character on the sons and also raises the question of limitation and adoption which were not raised before us. It must be dismissed with costs.

The defendants will have six months from this date to redeem.

IN C. M. P. No. 2561 OF 1923.

Wallace, J.—I agree. I do not quarrel with the principle that the manager of a joint family, whether the father or not, is not entitled in law to borrow money at an exorbitant rate of interest unless there was necessity for such a rate, and that, if the rate of interest is excessive, the onus will be on the lender to show that there was necessity for such an onerous rate. This involves two principles, firstly, that the rate must be shown to be onerous, and, secondly, that there was pressing necessity at the time of the loan for such an onerous rate. I fail to see how the actual result brought about by the mounting of interest, if not paid, to a crushing figure can affect the second principle. If the manager, bona fide was in urgent necessity for money and could not get it at a lower figure, then he was in law justified in borrowing at that figure, and the after math of that transaction is irrelevant to the consideration of whether he was justified or not. The onerous nature of the interest would only be justified reasonably if the necessity for the money at the time of the loan was really urgent. The more urgent the need the less unjustifiable a high rate of interest. Both questions are, therefore, questions of fact to be decided by the circumstances of the case. This is the principle approved by the Privy Council in the case quoted by my learned brother reported as Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (3).

Hence it appears to me that a Court has no right to presume without evidence that any particular rate of interest is onerous, at least without affording the plaintiff an opportunity of rebutting that view. A rate prima facie harsh may, considering the nature of the security offered, its dubious title or its exigious nature, be perfectly reasonable when the facts are known. Therefore it seems to me that normally the Courts are not entitled to presume anything either way without evidence and these questions are entirely matters of proof in the circumstances of each case. Those attacking the transaction must first show prima facie that the rate of interest is unnecessarily high for the circumstances of the case. It may be that in certain cases the original rate of interest is prima facie so excessive that proof is practically unnecessary and that the plaintiff must know that it is his duty to show necessity for it. But in other cases, it may be that the rate, although high is not so high that the plaintiff should reasonably take it for granted that he has to explain it, even though the Court does not call upon him to do so. In such a case he cannot reasonably be mulct-ed if he does not explain it. It seems to me not proper that, when the Trying Court has not considered it necessary to call on the plaintiff to explain the rate of interest, and no issue has appraised him that it is necessary for him to explain it, Courts of Appeal should not interfere without giving him an opportunity to explain it, unless the rate is so monstrous as to be unconscionable in any conceivable set of circumstances, that is, so harsh that no explanation whatever would have any chance of acceptance by the Courts. Under some such principle I would group the Privy Council cases which have been quoted before us. They resolve themselves into three classes:—first, where there is a finding of fact that the rate of interest was excessive and the Privy Council saw no good reason to disturb it, such as Gangapershad Sahu v. Maharani Bibi (4), Hurro Nath Rai Chowdhri v. Randhir Singh (9), Nand Ram v. Bhupal Singh (6), Nawab Nazi Begam v. Rao Raghunath Singh (2), Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (10) and Manna Lal v. Karn Singh (7), secondly, the cases in which the Privy Council has reduced the rate of interest awarded by the High Court such as Ram Bhujawan v. Nathu Ram (1) and Rai Radha Kishen v. Jag Sahu (5) in which they restore the Subordinate Judge's finding, that is, the Trying Court's finding on the rate of interest. In the former case the initial rate was 26 per cent. compound interest and in the latter it was 24 per cent. compound interest, rates which the Trying Court had already found excessive. In the former case the Subordinate Judge had, on the question of fact, held that the fair commercial rate was 12 per cent. simple interest. The third class of cases is those in which the Privy Council has increased the rate of interest awarded by the High Court and restored the rate of interest awarded by the Trying Court, such as Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (3). In no case, therefore, has the Privy Council decided "in the air", if I may use that expression, without a finding of fact by one or the other of the lower Courts, that finding of fact being based also not "in the air" or on an appeal ad miseri cordiam but on the circumstances surrounding the transaction.

In the present case, the Judicial Assistant Commissioner, the Trying Court, has considered whether the interest could be called usurious or penal and he had found that it could not. The Additional District Judge has given a very halting judgment on this point, based merely on an ad miseri cordiam appeal by the sons, and, without considering whether the rate was at the time of the bond excessive in the circumstances of the case, has based his decision on what has resulted purely from the father's failure to pay anything whatever towards either interest or principal which has caused the interest to mount up to a very large sum.

I should have preferred to send the case back for a finding of fact on this matter of the alleged excessive rate of interest, but I am not prepared to dissent from the order proposed to by my learned brother, considering the long delay that has already occurred in the trial of this case, which is chiefly due to the obstructive tactics of the defendants, to which again is due very much of the swelling of the interest. A further remand would have the further result of prolonging the litigation and swelling the interest still more. As has already been pointed out by my learned brother in neither of the lower Courts was any issue taken on this matter, nor was any plea put forward of any undue influence, while the bond in question was taken in renewal of loans which had run for several years, without payment of a pie either for interest or for principal. I am not prepared to hold that in the present case the rate of interest is on the face of it excessive or unconscionable.

Under these circumstances I agree with my learned brother that the Additional District Judge was not justified in relieving the sons of their obligation to pay the debts since they have not shown that the interest was unduly high in the circumstances of the case, and it was, therefore, not necessary for the plaintiff to prove necessity for such a rate of interest.

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 15, 16, 23—Unlawful agreement—Agreement to stifle prosecution—Coercion—Threat not to withdraw prosecution—Undue influence—Relation between creditor and debtor.

In order to avoid a contract on the ground that its object was to stifle prosecution, two things must be established,

(1) that there was really a criminal case in respect of a non-compoundable offence pending at the time when the agreement was entered into, and

(2) that one of the objects for which the agreement was entered into was to stifle prosecution of the case. [p. 464, col. 1.]

A threat not to withdraw criminal proceedings, already instituted, unless a bond was executed, is not "coercion" as defined in s. 15 of the Contract Act. [p. 464, col. 2.]

The relation between a debtor and a creditor is not necessarily one in which the former is to be taken as being situated in such a position that his will is bound to be dominated by the latter. [p. 464, col. 2.]

So long as there is no agreement not to prosecute, there is nothing to prevent a creditor from taking a security for the payment of his debt, even if the debtor is induced to give the security by a threat of criminal proceedings. [p. 465, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Hughly, dated the 12th May 1923.

Babus Baranashibashi Mukerjee and Gopendra Krishna Banerjee, for the Appellant.Mr. Amarendra Nath Bose and Babu Hiralal Chakravarty (for Babu Suresh Chandra Mukherjee), for the Respondent.JUDGMENT.*Mukerji, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiff for recovery of a sum of Rs. 7,662-8-0 due on an instalment bond executed by the defendant on the 13th May 1899, in favour of the plaintiff and his deceased brother, Ram Kumar Marwari. The suit has been dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge and the plaintiff has, thereupon, preferred

this appeal. The execution of the bond was not denied by the defendant in his written statement but several objections were taken by him as to why the plaintiff should not be granted a decree on the bond. Apart from the objections of a formal nature, the first objection was that the bond was not executed by the defendant out of his free will; the second objection was that the sum of Rs. 18,051 that was mentioned in the bond as being the amount for which the defendant had been found liable on adjustment of accounts was not really due to the plaintiff as the accounts has not been properly adjusted; and the third objection was that the bond had been executed by the defendant at a time when there was a case of a criminal breach of trust pending against him at the instance of the plaintiff and the bond was executed, because it was stipulated that if it was executed the criminal case would be withdrawn. These objections were substantially dealt with by three of the issues that were framed in the suit, namely, Issues Nos. 6, 7 and 8. The learned Judge in his judgment has taken up all these issues together. He has found that there was no proper adjustment of accounts. He has also found that the plaintiff and his brother took the law into their own hands and force the defendant to execute the bond and that the defendant executed the bond under pressure of a criminal prosecution. In dealing with the case as he has done it seems to me that the learned Judge has not kept in view the distinction between the different lines of defence upon which the defendant relied for the purpose of avoiding the liability under the bond. I propose to deal with these defences separately.

Taking the last one first, namely, as to whether the bond was executed for a consideration or object which was unlawful, that is to say, as having been entered into with a view to stifle a criminal prosecution and so, as being opposed to public policy, it appears to me that the facts that are necessary to be established in order to bring the case under s. 23 of the Indian Contract Act have not been established in the present case. The defendant has not produced any of the papers relating to the said criminal case. An application was filed on his behalf asking for time in order to enable him to file copies of the proceeding in that case, and time was granted to him for that purpose. Thereafter, nothing further was done and all that appears upon the record with regard to this matter is the oral evidence of the defendant himself which is to the effect that Ram Kumar, the plaintiff's brother, and one Srilal instituted a case against him for criminal breach of trust and warrant of arrest was issued against him and that he, therefore, executed the bond in order to get rid of the criminal case. He says further that as he executed the bond the criminal case was withdrawn. He admits in cross-examination that he received no summons in connection with the criminal case and also that no warrant of arrest was served upon him but that there was a search for his khatas in the house in which he lived. This is all the evidence on the side of the defendant. On the other hand, the witness examined on behalf of the plaintiff proved that Ram Kumar did not institute the criminal case. This witness, however, was not in a position to say whether any of the other partners instituted the case. Now in order to show that the object of the agreement was to stifle the criminal prosecution it is necessary to prove that there was an agreement between the parties, express or implied, the consideration for which was to take the administration of the law out of the hands of the Judges and to put it into the hands of a private individual to determine what is to be done in the particular case, and that the contracting parties should enter into a bargain to that effect. This is what was laid down in the leading case of Collins v. Blantern (1) and other cases, amongst which reference may be made to those of Keir v. Leeman (2) and Williams v. Bayley (3). On the particular facts of the case before us it will have to be shown that there was really a criminal case in respect of a non-compoundable offence pending at the time when this agreement was entered into and it will also have to be shown that one of the objects for which this agreement was entered into was to stifle the prosecution in that case. It cannot be said that these facts have been established in the present case. As is well-known the same transactions may give rise to a civil as well as a criminal liability and an agreement to settle a dispute amicably will not be invalid unless the object of the agreement is to stifle a criminal prosecution. This rule enunciated in the cases to which I have referred has been adopted in our Courts as well. See Rai Charan Purkait v. Amrita Lal Gain (4).

Then as to the question whether the document was executed by the defendant out of his own free will. In this connection reference must be made to the provision of s. 14 and also, upon the facts of the present case, to ss. 15 and 16 of the Indian Contract Act, because the consent in the present case is said to have been vitiated by coercion and undue influence. The learned Judge has found that the defendant had been forced and coerced to execute the bond. He has come to this conclusion upon the evidence that was before him to the effect that the defendant was threatened by the plaintiff's brother that the criminal case which had already been instituted against him would not be withdrawn. Now these facts, even if established, would not bring the case within s. 15 of the Contract Act, which defines coercion. As regards undue influence the contract would be vitiated if it has been induced by undue influence where the relations subsisting between the parties are such that one of the parties is in a position to dominate the will of the other and uses that position to obtain an unfair advantage over the other. The relation between a debtor and a creditor is not necessarily one in which the former is to be taken as being situated in such a position that his will is bound to be dominated by the latter. It is, however, urged that there are facts from which this domination of the will may be justly presumed. We have been referred to certain circumstances for the purpose of coming to the conclusion that the case comes within sub-s. (3) to s. 16 of the Contract Act. These circumstances are that although the defendant was only a partner to the extent of $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share in the business, yet by the bond he acknowledged a liability to the extent of R. 18,000 or Rs. 19,000, which, it is stated is much in excess of the amount for which he was really liable. It has also been stated, that the stipulation in the bond for payment of interest on default of payment of any of the instalments as well as other stipulation with regard to stock-in-trade show that the transaction was an unconscionable one. As I have already stated the defendant himself was examined in the case; but in his examination-in-chief I do not find that he made the least attempt to make out a case of undue influence at all. In cross-examination he states that at the time when the bond was executed the matter was settled by one Devendra Nath Ghose, who is apparently an independent man and coal merchant and also by his own eldest brother one Prem Chand Sarkar. The terms of the bond may be considered to be stringent but there is no reason to suppose that the bargain was an unconscionable one. I am, therefore, of opinion that it has not been proved that there was any undue influence in consequence of which the defendant was made to execute this bond. So long as there is no agreement not to prosecute, and as I have said, there are no materials in this case upon which it may be held that there was such an agreement, there is nothing to prevent a creditor from taking a security for the payment of his debt, even if the debtor is induced to give the security by a threat of criminal proceedings: Flower v. Sadler (5) and Jai Kumar v. Gauri Nath (6).

The argument advanced before us to the effect that there was no proper adjustment of liabilities does not commend itself to me inasmuch as I am unable to find that there was either coercion or undue influence or want of free consent for any other reason which may be taken to have vitiated the transaction. Unless the bond can be impugned on that ground the admission made by the defendant himself as to his liabilities must be taken to be binding on him.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be supported and that it should be set aside and that a decree should be entered in favour of the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 7,662-8-0 with interest pending the suit at the rate of six per cent. per annum.

The plaintiff-appellant will be entitled to his costs in this Court and in the Court below.

JUDGMENT.—The question to be decided is, whether s. 11, C. P. C., bars the trial of the present suit.

The facts may be shortly stated. The plaintiff is a trader in the Madras Presidency and the defendant is his agent residing in the Presidency of Bombay. I shall, in my judgment, refer to the plaintiff as principal and to the defendant as agent. The duties of the agent were to purchase goods for the principal, to advance, if necessary, monies for that purpose, to sell the goods so purchased or to despatch them to other constituents named by the principal. The agent filed O. S. No. 356 of 1919 on the file of the Havari Sub-Court claiming the balance of the amount alleged to be due to him on account of the advances made by him for purchase of goods. In the plaint he gave credit for various sums including an item which represents the sale proceeds of 82 bags of chillies belonging to the principal. It is this item which has been the subject of controversy in this appeal. The suit was thus for the recovery of the advances made, less certain credits which inter alia included the sale proceeds referred to above. After the agent filed the suit in the Havari Court, the principal instituted a suit in the District Court, Anantapur, claiming damages from the agent on the ground that sale of the 82 bags in question was unauthorized and contrary to instructions. The agent applied to the District Court under s. 10, C. P. C., for a stay of the later suit and it was accordingly stayed. The agent's suit in the Havari Court was then taken up and tried. The principal raised the contention that a large sum was due to him in respect of damages for the unauthorized sale of 82 bags and if that amount was taken into consideration, the agent would be found indebted to him, far from his being liable to pay the agent any sum. At the trial, the Sub-Judge of the Havari Sub-Court directed the principal to pay a Court-fee on Rs. 3,053-10-0, the amount which the principal claimed as due to him. He, however, failed to pay the Court-fee on the ground that he had already paid the requisite Court-fee on the plaint which he filed in the District Court, Anantapur. He requested the Judge not to raise an issue in regard to damages stating that he intended to have the claim to damages decided in the suit at Anantapur. The Sub-Judge of Havari accordingly gave no decision of the question relating to the unauthorized sale of the 82 bags and passed a decree in favour of the agent for a certain sum. The principal has now asked the Anantapur Court to proceed with the trial of his own suit. The Sub-Judge of Anantapur dismissed the suit on the ground that the trial of it is barred under s. 11, C. P. C. The District Judge of Anantapur in appeal has confirmed the decision of the Sub-Judge. The principal has filed the present appeal.

The point to be decided is whether the question of the principal's right to claim damages from the agent has become res judicata. In the previous suit, the agent claimed the balance due in respect of the advances made by him in the course of the agency. There is no dispute that that amount was substantially due. The principal's main defence was that he was entitled to set off a certain sum of money as damages on account of the sale of the 82 bags in question contrary to his instructions. In effect, the principal admitted the amount due and claimed that on account of damages a different sum would be payable to him. This amounts to a pleading of a set-off. But as the sum claimed is not an ascertained sum of money, it is no doubt true that O. IV, r. 6, C. P. C., is inapplicable. But if cross-demands arise out of one and the same transaction or are so connected in their nature and circumstances that they can be looked upon as part of one transaction, Courts of Equity in England have held that the defendant may be allowed to plead a set-off although the amount may be unascertained. The doctrine of equitable set-off has been recognized by Indian Courts and it was open to the principal to plead in the former suit that an amount was due to him for damages. Under s. 11, Explanation 4, any matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of defence in the former suit should be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in that suit. There is no doubt that the claim to damages might have been a ground of defence in the former suit. The question then is, ought the claim to have been made a ground of defence or, in other words, was it incumbent upon the principal to claim in the previous suit the equitable set-off? I put the question in this way because although the principal raised the contention relating to damages in the first instance, his failure to have the issue tried leads to the same legal consequence as an entire omission to raise the plea.

It is conceded at the Bar that a defendant is not under an obligation to plead a legal set-off and that his omission does not preclude him from bringing a separate suit in respect of it. But it is urged that so far as an equitable set off is concerned, if the defendant fails to plead it, he does so at the risk of the question becoming res judicata. I cannot agree to this contention. If there is no obligation on the part of a defendant to plead a legal set-off, which is a matter of right, I fail to see why he should be in a worse position in regard to an equitable set-off which originally was merely permissive in character. The learned Vakil for the agent has relied upon Mahabir Pershad Singh v. Macnaghten (1) but a close examination of the facts of the case will show that this case does not support his argument. It will be seen that the mortgagor in that suit was given a decree for the rents which according to the present contention ought to have been claimed by way of set-off in the previous suit by the mortgagee. The claim disallowed by the Judicial Committee was the claim to have the two decrees, the decree in the mortgage suit and the decree in the rent suit, set-off against each other and to treat, as a consequence, the mortgage decree as of no avail. This is not an authority bearing on the question.

The next case relied upon is Ameenammal v. Meenakshi (2). The facts are entirely different and such observations as there are in the judgment of Sadasiva Iyer, J., to the effect that it is imperative upon a defendant to plead an equitable set-off are obiter and are opposed to the practice and the decisions of the English Courts: see Jenner v. Morris (3), and 25 Halsbury's Laws of England, page 485. Pichaiyar v. Subbarayar (4) also supports my view.

It is not obligatory, therefore, upon a defendant to plead an equitable set-off. But there is a feature in the present case which presents some little difficulty. In the agent's suit he gave credit for a certain item which according to him represented the sale proceeds of the 82 bags in question. A decree was passed on the footing that the principal was entitled to that credit. The effect of this is, that the principal has already obtained by virtue of this decree a portion of the damages which he claims he is entitled to. If in the present action, the Court comes to the conclusion that the principal is entitled to damages, it will become necessary to reduce the amount which otherwise may be awarded to him, by the sum for which he has obtained credit in the previous suit. In other words if it is held that the question of damages has not become res judicata the principal will, in effect, be allowed to split up his claim to damages, and as he has obtained a portion in the first action the balance will be awarded in the second. It is the propriety of this proceeding that has to be decided in this appeal. There is no Indian case on the point, but the law is clearly laid down in English decision that this procedure is authorized.

In Mondel v. Steel (5) it was held: "In all actions for goods sold and delivered with a warranty, or for work and labour, as well as in actions for goods agreed to be supplied according to a contract, it is competent for the defendant to show how much less the subject-matter of the action was worth by reason of the breach of the contract; and to the extent that he obtains, or is capable of obtaining, an abatement of price on that account, he must be considered as having received satisfaction for the breach of contract; and he is precluded from recovering in another action to that extent, but no more." To take a concrete instance, suppose A entrusts his watch to B for repairs to be effected. B effects the repairs but breaks the lid and delivers the watch to A. B sues A for Rs. 50 charges for repairing the watch. A may plead that he is not liable to pay B Rs. 50, because he estimates the damage to his watch by the lid having been broken at Rs. 125. If A's case is made out the suit of B is dismissed. This suit will not bar A from claiming in a separate action the balance of the damages payable to him, Rs. 75. The principle on which this decision is based is that in truth there was no dividing of the cause of action, but the employer is merely allowed to defend himself by showing how much less the subject-matter of the action was worth by reason of the breach of the contract. To the extent that he obtains an abatement of price or wages, he must be considered as having received satisfaction for the breach of the contract and he is precluded from recovering in another action only to that extent. The previous suit does not operate as a bar to any further extent. This principle applies in action for goods sold and delivered with a warranty as also for work and labour. which was delivered by Parke, B., traces the course of the decisions on this point and deals exhaustively with this subject.

Davis v. Hedges (6) takes the matter a little further. The defendant has the option to obtain an abatement in the first action, but he is not bound to do so. Hannen, J. who delivered his own as well as Blackburn, J.'s judgment says at page 692*.

"We have, though not without some doubt, come to the conclusion that the better rule is, that the defendant has the option, if he pleases, to divide the cause of action, and use it in diminution of damages, in which case, as Parke, B., says, he is concluded to the extent to which he obtained, or was capable of obtaining, a reduction; or he may, as in the present case, claim no reduction at all, and afterwards sue for his entire cause of action."

Going back to the illustration which I have given, A, the owner of the watch is not bound to plead in B's action that he is entitled to an abatement. He may allow a decree to be passed for the sum claimed, namely, Rs. 50 and bring a second suit for the damages sustained by him, namely, Rs. 125. The first action is not a bar to the second suit. In the case of Davis v. Hedges (6) the process is described as dividing the cause of action, but nevertheless the second suit is not held to be barred. The point again is very fully considered in the judgment.

Following these two decisions I hold that the question of the principal's right to claim damages from the agent has not become res judicata. The second appeal is, therefore, allowed, the decision of the District Judge is reversed and the suit is remanded for trial on the merits. I make no order as to costs. The appellant will have a refund of the Court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal in this and in the lower Appellate Court.

As the Subordinate Judge's Court at Anantapur is not in existence at present, the suit will be tried by the District Judge of Anantapur.

*Appeal allowed;
Suit remanded.*

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT. SPECIAL BENCH.

ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.

Present:—Sir Lancelot Sanderson, Kt., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose and Mr. Justice Buckland.

In the matter of two ATTORNEYS.

Attorney, duties of—Duty to Court—Breach of duty—High Court, disciplinary jurisdiction of—"Incorporated Law Society, Calcutta," whether can move High Court.

An attorney, being an officer of the Court, owes a duty to the Court, as well as to his client. [p. 470, col. 1.]

The "Incorporated Law Society, Calcutta" is competent to bring a breach of his duties by an attorney to the attention of the High Court, when the matter is brought to its notice. [p. 470, col. 2.]

The plaintiff in a suit, who had obtained an attachment of certain furniture before judgment, stored it at premises belonging to a charitable trust, under arrangement with the trustees. The furniture was sold after some months by the Sheriff, who realized the sale-proceeds. A claim was then made by the trustees upon the plaintiff for rent amounting to Rs. 3,250. The attorney who was acting for the plaintiff, thereupon, wrote to the Sheriff, asking for the amount to pay the rent, and enclosing the bill. The Sheriff sent the amount. The plaintiff, however, did not wish to pay the amount to the landlords, and, on his instructions, the attorney wrote a letter to the trustees repudiating all liability in respect of the rent of the premises, but "as a matter of grace" enclosing a cheque for Rs. 474 as a donation to the trust. The trustees brought the matter to the notice of the "Incorporated Law Society, Calcutta", and the latter moved the High Court in the matter:

Held, (1) that the attorney made a serious mistake in making himself a party to the course adopted by his client, and that although it was not suggested that there was any moral turpitude on his part, yet he was guilty of a breach of the duty which he owed to the Court; [p. 470, col. 1.]

(2) that having regard to the way in which the money was obtained from the Sheriff, and the purpose for which it was obtained, the attorney should have insisted on his client paying the money to the landlords in full, or returning it to the Sheriff. [ibid.]

Rule obtained by the Incorporated Law Society, Calcutta.

Mr. N. N. Sircar (with him Mr. B. K. Ghosh), for the Society.

Messrs. L. P. E. Pugh and T. Ameer Ali, for the first Attorney.

Mr. H. D. Bose (with him Mr. R. Westmacott), for the second Attorneys.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is a Rule which was issued against two attorneys of the Court and which was based upon allegations contained in a petition, presented by the President of the Incorporated Law Society, Calcutta.

In view of the course, which has been adopted by the learned Counsel, who appear for the attorney, whose name stands first on the record, it is possible for me to deal with this matter shortly.

It appears that one Gora, the plaintiff in a suit of Gora v. Templeton, instituted in the High Court, obtained an attachment of certain furniture before judgment.

The furniture was in some premises in Calcutta which were rented at about Rs. 600 per month. Apparently it was thought desirable on the part of the plaintiff that the furniture should be removed to premises which could be obtained at a less rental. The result was, that by an arrangement made by or on behalf of the plaintiff and the person representing a certain trust, the furniture was removed to and stored at premises belonging to the trust, namely, 84, Dhurumtolla Street.

The Sheriff, who had attached the furniture, had nothing to do with this arrangement.

The furniture was lying in the premises 84, Dhurumtolla Street for about 10 months and was then sold. The proceeds of the sale were in the hands of the Sheriff. A claim was then made by the owners of the premises upon the plaintiff for rent at the rate of Rs. 325 per month.

The attorneys, against whom this Rule was issued and who were acting for the plaintiff, wrote to the Sheriff on the 9th of May 1924 as follows:—"Perhaps you may remember that our client rented the premises No. 84, Dhurumtolla Street for storing the furniture attached herein and the landlord has submitted his bill at Rs. 325 per month. We shall be much obliged if you will kindly send us your cheque for Rs. 3,250 out of sale proceeds to enable our client to discharge the liability. We enclose herewith a copy of the said bill."

Accordingly a cheque for Rs. 3,250 was sent to the attorneys by the Sheriff and a receipt was given dated the 13th of May. The terms of the receipt were as follows:—"Received from the Sheriff of Calcutta by cheque No. 61 on the Imperial Bank of India the sum of Rs. (3,250 0 0) three thousand two hundred and fifty only being the rent of the premises No. 84, Dhurumtolla Street from November 1922 to August 1923 in the above cause."

The cheque or its equivalent was handed by the attorneys to their client and they obtained a receipt from him in these terms: "Received from (the attorneys) the sum of Rs. 3,250 being amount realized by them from the Sheriff of Calcutta for payment of rent of premises No. 84, Dhurumtolla Street which I undertake to settle with the landlord."

It seems clear that the sum of Rs. 3,250 was obtained by the attorneys from the Sheriff upon the representation that the money was due to the landlords of 84, Dhurumtolla Street, for the rent of the premises and that if it were received from the Sheriff it would be paid in full to the landlords.

When the attorneys handed the money to their client I have no doubt that it was expected that the client would pay the amount in full to the landlords. I think that is obviously the meaning of the receipt which the plaintiff gave to the attorneys.

It turned out, however, that the attorneys' client did not propose to pay the Rs. 3,250 to the landlords.

In my opinion, it was then the duty of the member of the firm of attorneys, who had this matter in hand, to have told his client in effect: "You must either pay this money (3,250) to the landlord in full or the money must be returned to the Sheriff."

Instead of that being done the attorney, upon the instructions of his client, wrote to the trustees of the society a letter, the material part of which is as follows:—"Our client is informed by the Sheriff that you have sent in a bill to him in respect of the rent of the premises and he tells us that the Sheriff repudiates all liability in the matter on the ground that he did not engage the premises. Our client also denies liability on the ground that he did not engage them but as a matter of grace he instructs us to send you as we do herewith a cheque for Rs. 474, the balance remaining in his hands out of the monies realized by the sale after deducting the expenses he has been put to. Our client considers this sum a very handsome donation to charity in the circumstances."

In my judgment, that is a letter which ought not to have been written and the attorney ought not to have made himself a party to the course adopted by his client. The money had been obtained from the Sheriff on the express understanding that the money was due to the owners of the premises and that the whole amount would be paid to them in respect of the rent of the premises. But for that representation the money would not have been paid to the attorney by the Sheriff. Having regard to the way in which the money was obtained from the Sheriff and the purpose for which it was obtained apart from other considerations, it is clear that the plaintiff in this suit was not entitled to retain the balance in his hands. The attorney, being an Officer of the Court, owed a duty to the Court, as well as to his client, and in my judgment the attorney made a serious mistake in the course which was adopted. If the money was not to be used for the payment of the rent, it should have been returned to the Sheriff. The learned Counsel, who appeared for the attorney, has stated that the attorney now recognises that a serious mistake was made.

It is not suggested that there was any moral turpitude on the part of the attorney: I am of opinion, however, that there was a breach of the duty which the attorney owed to the Court.

I understand that at some date, subsequent to the above-mentioned letter, the plaintiff sent a cheque for Rs. 800 to the owner of the premises but that sum was not accepted and the cheque was not cashed. The result is that at present no part of the Rs. 3,250 has been used for the payment of the rent. The attorney, through his learned Counsel, has undertaken to return the sum of Rs. 3,250 to the Sheriff to-day, and, through his learned Counsel he has expressed his regret for the mistake, which was made.

In these circumstances and in view of the above-mentioned undertaking, my learned brothers and I are of opinion that with regard to the first attorney, on the record, it is not necessary for this Court to take any further steps or to make any order in respect of Rule, which accordingly is discharged.

With regard to the second attorney on the record, it is clear that at the time when the material incidents of this case occurred, he was not in India and he was in no way responsible for the matters, upon which the Rule was based. If that fact had been known to the Court at the time the application for the Rule was made, I feel sure that the Rule would not have been issued in his case. In the case of the second attorney on the record, therefore, the Rule is discharged.

The learned Counsel who appeared for the Incorporated Law Society stated that if the first attorney would withdraw certain passages in the correspondence to which objection was taken, the Law Society would not ask for costs. The passages have now been withdrawn. Consequently we make no order as to costs.

There remains one more matter to which I must refer having regard to certain remark which were made by the learned Counsel who appeared for the first attorney on the record, with regard to the action which was taken by the Incorporated Law Society.

My learned brothers and I are of opinion that when the matter, which we have been considering, was brought to the notice of the Incorporated Law Society, it was competent to and proper for the Society to bring the matter to the attention of the Court.

FIRST CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 38 AND 46 OF 1923.

Babuain SHAGHUNATH KUER—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), as amended by U. P. Act) III of 1910), ss. 13A (2), (3), 22—List II Estate—Will by taluqdar in favour of agnate—Legatee not nearest agnate at time of testator's death—Will, whether governed by sub-s. (2) or sub-s. (3) of s. 13A—Registration, form of—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 35, 42, 43. Per Daniels, J. C., and Simpson, A. J. C. (Dalal, A. J. C., dissenting).—A Will made by a taluqdar of an estate entered in List II of the Lists prepared under s. 8 of the Oudh Estates Act, where the succession is governed by s. 22 of the Act, in favour of an agnate who is not the nearest agnate of the testator at the time of the testator's death, is governed by sub-s. (2) of s. 13A of the Oudh Estates Act, as amended by the Oudh Estates Amendment Act of 1910 and, therefore, a Will in favour of such a person duly executed and attested more than three months before the testator's death and registered under ss. 42 and 43 of the Registration Act is, in all respects, a good and valid one. [p. 478, col. 1; p. 480, col. 1.]

Per Dalal, A. J. C.—The plain meaning of cl. (2) of s. 13A of the Oudh Estates Act is that it includes every kind of heir mentioned in the amended s. 22 of the Act and no one else. Clause (10) of s. 22 provides only for the nearest male agnate and where a person is not such male agnate at the time of the testator's death when the bequest takes effect he does not come under that clause. [p. 473, col. 1.]

In interpreting cl. (2) of s. 13A of the Oudh Estates Act, the Court has to look for possible heirs at the time of the taluqdar's death and in cl. (10) of s. 22 the only possible heir can be the nearest male agnate. [ibid.]

Per Daniels, J. C.—The words "in the absence of other heirs" in cl. (2) of s. 13A of the Oudh Estates Act apply just as much to the absence of heirs who might take in priority under cl. (10) as to the absence of other heirs falling under cls. (1) to (9) of s. 22 of the Act. [p. 476, col. 2.]

The classification introduced by s. 13A of the Oudh Estates Act is a perfectly natural and intelligible one, namely, first the immediate heir and one or two persons who are grouped with him, then the remote heir, and lastly the person who is not a possible heir at all, and there is nothing either absurd or improbable in the Legislature enacting that when the estate is bequeathed to a kinsman of the testator it should continue to be governed by the Act, whereas if it passes to a stranger it should not be so governed. [p. 477, col. 2.]

The difference between cls. (2) and (3) of s. 13A of the Oudh Estates Act is that in the case of cl. (2) the Will may be registered by deposit with the Registrar in a sealed cover with the name of the testator and a statement of the nature of the document, whereas in the case of a person falling under the third clause there must be what may be called open registration, that is to say, the document must be registered with the same formalities as any ordinary deed. There is this further difference that by ss. 14 and 15 of the Act a Will in favour of any of the persons mentioned in cls. (1) and (2) of the section leaves the estate still subject to the provisions of the Act, whereas a Will in favour of a person under cl. (3), except where it is in favour of another taluqdar, takes the estate out of the Act and brings it under the operation of the ordinary law of succession. p. 476, col. 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated 26th of May 1923, in Regular Suit No. 172 of 1921.

JUDGMENT.

Dalal, A. J. C.—(February 19, 1925).—A Taluqdar B. Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh made a Will in favour of the plaintiff Achal Singh. This Bench has held that the Will was duly executed, attested and deposited with the Registrar. So far the decision of the Trial Court was affirmed and the appeal of the defendant Babuain Sagonath Kuar the widow of the deceased taluqdar has been dismissed.

In that suit the Trial Court further held that the Will was inoperative as regards the taluqdari property because the Will was not registered openly but deposited with the Registrar in accordance with s. 43 of the Registration Act. Under s. 13-A of the Oudh Estates Act, as amended by local Act No. III of 1910, a Will of a taluqdar property has to observe certain formalities which are more or less rigorous according to the class to which the beneficiary belongs. If the beneficiary is a person falling under cl. (1) of that section a Will to be operative need only be executed and attested; if he belongs to cl. (2) in addition to execution and attestation, it must be registered either openly or by deposit within a certain time of the testator's death and of the date of the execution; if he belongs to cl. (3) the Will besides being executed and attested must be openly registered with the same conditions as to time fixed for a Will in favour of a person of cl. 2 (2). There is no difficulty here as to the period of time allowed by the Act. The Will was deposited 10 years prior to the death of the taluqdar and two days after its execution.

The point which arises for decision is whether Achal Singh is one of the persons included in cl. (2) of this section. At the time of his death the taluqdar had no son or any lineal descendant alive and he was the only son himself of his father. His mother pre-deceased him, but his widow was alive and is now defendant to the present suit. Achal Singh plaintiff belonged to a distant branch of the taluqdar's family and counting according to degrees he would have been the next reversioner if fourteen intermediate relations had not existed. On these facts the learned Judge of the lower Court held that he was not a person included in cl. (2).

I am in agreement with that finding. Section 13A is one of two sections which replaces and considerably alters s. 13 of Act I of 1869. The former section treated jointly transfers and bequests and in the amended Act the two are distinguished. In this case we are concerned only with a bequest which is dealt with in s. 13A. Confining ourselves to a bequest the former section reads as below:—

"No taluqdar shall have power to bequeath his estate to any person not being either

(1) a person who under the provisions of this Act or under the ordinary law to which persons of the donor or testator's tribe and religion are subject would have succeeded to such estate . . . if such talukdar . . . had died intestate, or

(2) a younger son of the talukdar . . . in case the name of such talukdar appears in the third or the fifth of the lists mentioned in s. 8 ;

Except by . . a Will executed and attested not less than three months before the death of the . . . testator in manner here in provided . . . and registered within one month from the date of its execution."

"Registered" here includes deposit under s. 45 of the Registration Act as enacted in the amending Act X of 1885.

This Court interpreted the words "would have succeeded" widely and did not confine them to the immediate heir under s. 14 of the Act. It was held here that the word included every heir mentioned under s. 22 of Act I of 1869 which laid down the special devolution of a taluka by way of succession: Rae Jagatpal Singh v. Thakurain Balraj Kuar (1). On appeal their Lordships held that a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act meant the person or one of the persons to whom the estate would have descended according to the provisions of the special clause of s. 22 applicable to the particular case. In that case the younger son of a talukdar had acquired a taluka from his father by bequest and their Lordships held that the property went out of the entail as laid down in s. 15.

It appears that the talukdars did not desire their estate to go out of the entail under such circumstances and their desire to continue the entail where a bequest was made to some one other than the immediate heir led to the amendment of the Act in 1910.

We are not concerned with, nor have we any evidence as to exactly what the talukdars desired. In my opinion codification in India is to a certain extent a gamble. First of all Indians have to express themselves in a language which is after all foreign to them. Local Governments do not command the help of men trained in drafting laws and, even at the time of legislation, I do not think that it is settled accurately and in detail what a particular Act is required to provide for. There are vague notions to remedy an evil or to satisfy certain sentiments but the full details are not worked out. When this is my view of present day codification in India, arguments as to what the Legislature desired or did not desire leave me unimpressed.

It will be safer for a Judge to give effect to the language of the Act apart from all other considerations. It is obvious that in cl. (1) the interpretation of their Lordships of the Privy Council given to the words "would have succeeded" is adopted and a daughter and daughter's son are added to that clause. Persons of the clause are defined as below:—

"To a person who might, in the absence of other heirs, have succeeded to such estate, portion or interest under the provisions of this Act applicable to such estate, had the person so bequeathing died intestate as to his estate, at the time when the bequest took effect."

To my mind the plain meaning of these words is that the clause includes every kind of heir mentioned in the amended s. 22 and no one else. In s. 22 the persons stated to be heirs under intestate succession are:—

"(1) The eldest son and his male lineal descendants ;

(2) if such eldest son shall have died in the lifetime of the talukdar, leaving male lineal descendants, then to the eldest and every other son of such eldest son successively, according to their respective seniorities and their respective male lineal descendants ;

(3) if such eldest son shall have died in his father's life-time, without leaving male lineal descendants, then to the second and every other son of the said talukdar successively according to their respective seniorities and their respective male lineal descendants ;

(4) in default of such son or his male lineal descendant, then to such person as the talukdar shall have adopted and his male lineal descendants ;

(5) in default of such adopted son and his male lineal descendants, then to the eldest and every other brother of such talukdar according to their respective seniorities and their respective male lineal descendants ;

(6) in default of such brother and his male lineal descendants, then to the widow of the deceased talukdar (provision being made in case of more than one surviving widow) ;

(7) on the death of such widow, then to such son as the said widow shall, with the consent in writing of her deceased husband, have adopted and his male lineal descendants;

(8) similarly every other widow;

(9) in default of any such widow or any such adopted son, or his male lineal descendants, then to the mother of the talukdar (widows and mothers have only a life estate);

(10) in default of or on the death of such mother, then to the nearest male agnate according to the rule of lineal primogeniture."

We need not go on to cl. (11) because the plaintiff claims to belong to cl. (10). Clause (10) provides only for the nearest male agnate and as the plaintiff was not such male agnate at the time of the talukdar's death when the bequest took effect he does not come under that clause. This is the plain answer to the plaintiff's claim.

It was argued on his behalf that the nearest male agnate meant the entire class of agnates and included every possible agnate. In my opinion such an interpretation would be a contradiction of terms. In interpreting cl. (2) of s. 13A we have to look for possible heirs at the time of the talukdar's death and in cl. (10) the only possible heir can be the nearest agnate. Some ridicule was cast by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant on the expression used by the lower Court of a possibility upon a possibility. What the lower Court meant by that expression is obvious. It meant that the Court has to look to possible heirs and not to heirs who would be possible on the disappearance of these possible heirs. We have already noticed the expression "in default" used at the commencement of every clause of intestate successors beginning with cl. (4) of s. 22 and in cls. (2) and (3) the right of members of cl. (2) is stated to accrue on the death of members of cl. (1) and that of cl. (3) on the death of the members of clauses (1) and (2). The words "in the absence of other heirs" in clause (2) of s. 13A must be given the same meaning. What is meant is that all the persons who could come under cls. (1) to (10) of s. 22 are included in this cl. (2) of s. 13A.

The argument of the appellant's learned Counsel that on this interpretation all except the immediate heir would be excluded has no substance. The eldest son and his descendants are mentioned in cl. (1) of s. 22. They will all come under cl. (2) of s. 13A except the eldest son who being the next heir would go to cl. (1). Every son of the talukdar and the descendants of every such son are described in cl. (3) of s. 22 so they also will fall under cl. (2) of s. 13A, similarly the adopted son and his lineal descendants—(cl. 4 of s. 22); all the brothers and their lineal descendants (cl. 5), every widow, her adopted son, and the descendants of that adopted son, cls. 6, 7 and 8), mother (cl. 9) and nearest agnate (cl. 10). All these persons according to the language of the Act come within cl. (2) of s. 13A, so it is difficult to understand how brothers and sons would be barred from entry into cl. (2) if the interpretation put upon that clause by me is correct.

It was questioned how the talukdar will know who would be his nearest male agnate at the time of his death? The answer to this question being that he would not know the argument was founded on this answer that the talukdar would not know how to make a bequest in favour of a particular agnate. The answer to such an argument is short. The talukdar must not take risks and should register a Will of his in favour of an agnate publicly. If such an agnate happens to be the nearest male agnate at the time of the testator's death the estate will remain in the entail otherwise it will go out of the entail. In my opinion the talukdars were more concerned with the preservation of the entail in certain cases than with doubt as to how to register their Wills. Even where a Will is openly registered in favour of an agnate and that agnate at the time of the testator's death happens to be the nearest male agnate, the entail will not be broken because at the time the bequest took effect that agnate would come within cl. (2) of s. 13A.

If the interpretation of the appellant that cl. (2) of s. 13A included every agnate of the talukdar and every relation who may be an heir under cl. (11) of s. 22 were right, no need arose of enacting the words "under the provisions of this Act applicable to such estate had the person so bequeathing died intestate as to his estate at the time when the bequest took effect." If all the agnates were to be included why should the possible heirs be limited to the time when the bequest took effect? It should also be observed that cl. (3) is not relegated to strangers as would be the case if cl. (2) included every conceivable relation of the talukdar.

Clause (10) of s. 22 does not designate a class but only one person the nearest male agnate according to the rule of lineal primogeniture at the time of the taluqdar's death. It is noticeable that no intestate heir is mentioned as a class; for instance, the Act does not content itself by mentioning brother in cl. (5) of s. 22 to indicate all members of that class but goes on to mention one brother after another and also provides for lineal descendants of each. I am not in agreement with the interpretation put on the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Thakurain Balraj Kunwar v. Rae Jagatpal Singh (2) that the person who would have succeeded indicated a class of persons including the descendants of that person. The opinion of Pandit Kanhaiya Lal at present a learned Judge of the High Court of Allahabad appears to me to be correct that their Lordships interpreted these words as the immediate heir not including his descendants [Ghulam Abbas Khan v. Bibi Ummatul Fatima (3)]. I mention this point because an argument was sought to be founded on behalf of the appellant on an assumed analogy that just as the immediate heir as a class included, according to their Lordships, his descendants so the nearest male agnate in cl. (10) of s. 22 included every possible agnate.

I would, therefore, hold that the Will in favour of Achal Singh does not operate as a bequest of taluqdari property.

The other issues which arise in this appeal are grounds of appeal Nos. 5, 6, 7 and 9. Ground No. 8 was abandoned. It was admitted by the learned Counsel for the respondent lady that the lower Court omitted through an oversight to grant a decree to the plaintiff for Rs. 1,900 which was the balance of the current account in the Allahabad Bank at the time of the taluqdar's death and that the plaintiff appellant was entitled to mesne profits in respect of village Paicharwa since the date of the death of the taluqdar.

The fifth ground of appeal urges that Rs. 7,600 which was in deposit in the Allahabad Bank on the date of the taluqdar's death belonged to the taluqdar and not to the defendant lady, his widow. The lower Court has held that this money was part of a gift of Rs. 30,000 which the lady received from her father-in-law to whom the money was presented by her father. The finding is one of fact and the learned Judge of the lower Court had the advantage of noting the demeanour of witnesses. We feel, however, that we cannot agree with this finding. The defendant lady did not offer herself for examination. A copy of the fixed deposit account (Ex. 91, p. 143) shows that this sum of Rs. 7,600 was deposited in cash on behalf of the taluqdar by his agent Munshi Baqar Ali on 31st July 1917. Baqar Ali is still in the lady's service but was not examined as a witness. The story that the money belonged to the lady is told by an inferior servant Gajadhar Prasad (D. W. No. 2). He narrates a strange story of the deceased taluqdar's father leaving the sum of Rs. 30,000 with him for two months after the marriage of the lady. He goes on to state that B. Sheo Sahai ordered him to take the money to the zanana house and give it to the defendant. For some 20 years he had no knowledge as to what became of the money. Then suddenly in 1917 the lady gave him Rs. 7,600 to deposit in the Allahabad Bank. He took the money to the Bank which refused to accept it, the usual practice of the Bank was not to accept a deposit from a married lady whose husband was alive. Gajadhar Prasad thereupon referred the matter to the taluqdar who ordered that the money may be deposited in his own name. The evidence of another servant Khuda Bakhsh is of no value. He deposes only to bringing a sum of Rs. 30,000 on his elephant as a present from the lady's father to B. Sheo Sahai. He has no knowledge of the alleged deposit nor of B. Sheo Sahai making over any sum to the lady. No accounts were produced to show that subsequent to 1917 the taluqdar paid interest on this sum to his wife. On behalf of the plaintiff it is proved by reference to an account in the District Co-operative Bank of Rae Bareilly (Ex. 93, page 221) that only a day previous to the deposit of Rs. 7,600 in the Allahabad Bank the taluqdar had withdrawn Rs. 7,530 and odd from the Co-operative Bank. It is true that there is nothing to connect the two sums but the proximity of the dates and the close identity of the amounts satisfy us that it was this sum with a small addition which was taken to the Allahabad Bank and deposited there. Better evidence to prove ownership of this amount, if it did belong to the lady, was within her control and was withheld from the Court. The conclusion is that such evidence if produced would not have favoured her case. We hold that this sum of Rs. 7,600 belonged to the taluqdar and not to the lady and that the plaintiff is entitled to receive it.

As to ground No. 7 it was admitted that the decree ought to have been passed in the plaintiff's favour on this account for Rs. 1,960. This valuation of List A of the plaint was admitted by the defendant (see page 33 of the printed record, Part I). The list is printed on page 9 of the printed record. As to plaintiff's further claim for Rs. 1,000 as price of 22 guns (item No. 13 of his list) it is not proved. The lady has denied possession of the guns and there is no evidence produced by the plaintiff to the contrary.

My learned senior colleague is not in agreement with me in my decision on the question of law. He agrees in the other findings. The question of law, shall, therefore, be referred under s. 98, C. P. C., to another Judge of this Court for decision.

In any case the appeal must succeed with proportionate costs in the following matters:—

(1) The plaintiff shall be entitled to recover the deposit of Rs. 7,600 from the Allahabad Bank.

(2) He shall be entitled to recover Rs. 1,900 balance of current account in the Allahabad Bank.

(3) The valuation of moveables (see list printed at page 344) shall be altered from Rs. 1,015 to Rs. 1,960.

(4) The plaintiff shall be declared entitled to mesne profits of the Paicharwa property from the date of the taluqdar's death to the date of his taking over possession of that property from the defendant lady.

A decree shall be passed granting the above reliefs to the plaintiff in addition to the decree passed in his favour by the lower Court.

If my learned colleague's opinion prevails the plaintiff shall be further decreed possession with mesne profits of all the taluqdari properties of List A of the plaint Nos. 1 to 6. If the point of law is decided against the plaintiff-appellant his appeal as regards the taluqdari property shall be dismissed.

Parties shall receive and pay costs according to their final success and failure.

Daniels, J. C.—(February 23, 1925).—The question of law which arises in this appeal is whether a Will executed on 18th June 1910 by Babu Sahdeo Bakhsh Singh, Taluqdar of Osah in favour of the plaintiff-appellant Babu Achal Singh alias Madho Singh was executed in accordance with the requirements of s. 13A of Act I of 1869, (hereinafter referred to as the Act) as amended by U. P. Act III of 1910. The Will was executed in accordance with sub-s. (2) of that section, that is to say, it was duly executed and attested more than three months before the testator's death, and was registered under ss. 42 and 43 of the Indian Registration Act two days after its execution. It was not registered with the formalities required by sub-s. (3), that is to say, it was not registered under the ordinary law relating to the registration of documents other than Wills in accordance with s. 35 of the Act. The question is whether the plaintiff is a person falling under sub-s. (2) or sub-s. (3) of s. 13A. If he comes under the former sub-section the Will was in all respects a good and valid Will, if he comes under sub-s. (3), the Will is invalid in respect of any property coming under the provisions of the Act. The learned Subordinate Judge has taken the latter view and has, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's suit in respect of all the taluqdari property of the deceased. The remaining plaintiffs are the heirs of Raja Rameshwar Singh to whom Babu Achal Singh sold part of the estate for the purpose of obtaining funds to finance the litigation. The defendant Babuain Saghunath Kunwar is the widow of the deceased and is entitled to succeed to the estate under s. 22 (6) of the Act in the event of the Will being held invalid.

The estate is one entered in List II of the lists prepared under s. 8 of the Act and the succession is governed by s. 22. The plaintiff and the deceased were both descended through males from a common ancestor, though in different lines. The plaintiff was not, in the events which happened, the nearest male agnate when the succession opened, but he would have been entitled to succeed under s. 22, cl. (10) if certain other persons, including his own father, who were nearer to the testator in agnatic relationship, had pre-deceased the testator.

The question of law which arises appears to me to admit of only one answer, and it is not the answer which the learned Subordinate Judge has given. Section 13A divides possible legatees into three classes, Subsection (1) applies to the person who would have succeeded to the estate under the Act if the testator had died intestate at the time when the bequest took effect, that is to say, the immediate heir. With him are grouped the daughter, the daughter's son and the younger son of the testator. The only question of interpretation which is likely to arise under this sub-section is whether, when the immediate heir is the testator's son, it applies to a Will in favour of that son.

In the case of a Will in favour of these persons no registration is necessary.

In the case of a Will in favour of any person not included in cl. (1) certain additional formalities are required one of which is that the Will must have been presented for registration within one month of its execution and it must have been registered. The difference is that in the case of cl. (2) the Will may be registered by deposit with the Registrar in a sealed cover with the name of the testator and a statement of the nature of the document whereas in the case of a person falling under the third clause there must be what may be called open registration, that is to say, the document must be registered with the same formalities as any ordinary deed. There is this further difference that by ss. 14 and 15 a Will in favour of any of the persons mentioned in cls. (1) and (2) leaves the estate still subject to the provisions of the Act, whereas a Will in favour of a person under cl. (3), except where it is in favour of another taluqdar, takes the estate out of the Act and brings it under the operation of the ordinary law of succession. The second clause, omitting words which are immaterial for the purposes of this case, applies to a Will in favour of "a person who might, in the absence of other heirs, have succeeded to such estate under the provisions of this Act applicable to such estate had the person so bequeathing died intestate as to his estate at the time when the bequest took effect," that is to say it applies to any person who is a possible heir to the estate. Now the plaintiff comes precisely within the language of this clause. It is common ground that he is a person who would have succeeded to the estate had no nearer heir been in existence at the testator's death. The language of that section being clear and applying exactly to the circumstances before us, it would seem that there is nothing more to be said. Any enquiry as to the intentions of the Legislature becomes unnecessary, though in fact there is no reason to suppose that such enquiry would lead to any different result.

The view pressed by the respondent's learned Counsel and accepted by the Subordinate Judge is that because the plaintiff was in fact not the nearest agnate at the death of the testator, therefore, he does not come within the clause. He wishes to read the sub-section as if it ran, in cases to which s. 22 applies, "to a person who might, in the absence of any heir belonging to any of the prior classes mentioned in s. 22, have succeeded to such estate had the person so bequeathing died intestate."

The words "in the absence of other heirs" apply just as much to the absence of heirs who might take in priority under cl. (10) as to the absence of other heirs falling under cls. (1) to (9).

The reasons which led to the passing of the Act lend further support to this view. It is common knowledge, and is the case of both parties to this appeal, that the main reason for the amendment of the law by Act III of 1910 was the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Thakurain Balraj Kunwar v. Rae Jagatpal Singh (2) which reversed the decision of this Court in Rae Jagatpal Singh v. Thakurain Balraj Kunwar (1). The law as laid down by their Lordships was not acceptable to the taluqdars and steps were taken to alter it. In the judgment of this Court which their Lordships reversed Mr. Spankie had said :

"The testator ought to be in a position to know whether or not his legatee will hold the estate subject to the same rules of succession as himself, because he may wish that his legatee should hold the estate subject to those rules of succession. He cannot give effect to such wish unless the words refer to a legatee who may possibly succeed to his estate if he were to die intestate."

The view taken, therefore, was

(1) that the testator when he makes his Will ought to be in a position to know whether the bequest will have the effect of taking the estate outside the Act or not, and

(2) that it ought to remain subject to the Act if it was bequeathed to a person who might possibly have succeeded. If the view taken by the respondent is correct neither of these objects has been attained by the amending legislation. The defendant's whole case depends on the contention that the second has not been attained. As regards the first the validity of the Will, according to the defendant's interpretation, must depend on a variety of uncertain circumstances. Suppose the two nearest agnates to be father and son. Then the validity of a Will in favour of the son made in accordance with sub s. (2) of s. 13 A will depend on whether the father survives the testator or not. Even a Will in favour of the nearest agnate at the time when it is made may turn out to be invalid, for a posthumous son may be born in an elder line.

I have passed over in silence a good deal of what the learned Subordinate Judge has said on this issue because I agree with the learned Advocate for the appellant that there are some passages from which it is impossible to extract any intelligible meaning, while others are wholly irrelevant to the matter at issue. What the learned Subordinate Judge means by talking about a possibility upon a possibility I cannot pretend to say. The simple question for decision is whether the words "in the absence of nearer heirs" include the absence of nearer heirs under cl. (10) of s. 22, or are confined to the absence of heirs who would take under the preceding clauses. Nor can I follow him in drawing any conclusion from the absence of the words "and his male lineal descendants" in cl. (10) of s. 22. He is willing to allow that a Will in favour of any descendant of a brother, however remote, is governed by sub s. (2) of s. 13A because the male lineal descendants of the brother are mentioned in s. 22 (5), but would exclude a Will in favour of the second nearest agnate because the words "male lineal descendants" do not occur in s. 22 (10). But on any construction of s. 13A these words are unnecessary. When the Legislature is dealing with a single line of succession such as that of a brother or a son they are appropriate, but they are quite out of place in dealing with an agnate. Inasmuch as the nearest agnate is to be found according to the rule of lineal primogeniture, as soon as the father dies the son becomes the nearest agnate in his place. As soon as that particular line is exhausted the senior representative of the next senior branch becomes the nearest agnate. In fact as soon as the nearest agnate dies the next nearest steps automatically into his place. A person who would be a remote agnate in presence of another agnatic heir becomes at once the nearest agnate in his absence.

It is argued that what appears to be the natural construction of the Act would lead to results which the Legislature could not have contemplated, because if so, a Will in favour of any possible heir, however remote, will have the effect of maintaining the character of the property as an estate as defined in the Act. It does not appear to me that there is anything improbable in the Legislature having contemplated this result. The classification introduced by s. 13A is a perfectly natural and intelligible one, namely, first the immediate heir and one or two other persons who are grouped with him, then the remote heir and, lastly, the person who is not a possible heir at all; and there is nothing either absurd or improbable in the Legislature enacting that when the estate is bequeathed to a kinsman of the testator it should continue to be governed by the Act, whereas if it passes to a stranger it should cease to be so governed.

The defendant's Counsel supports his argument by a reference to cl. (11) of s. 22, under which cognate heirs are allowed to succeed in default of agnates, on the ground that this widens the scope of s. 13A (2) too much. Now there are two possible views of cl. (11). It may be said sub-s. (2) of that s. 13A does not apply to such an heir at all, because he takes not under the special rules of succession contained in the Act but under the ordinary law of inheritance applicable to the testator's family, or it may be said that though he would have been the heir apart from the Act, yet he does in fact take by reason of cl. (11) which might equally well have prescribed a different line of succession. The question is quite independent of the construction of s. 13A, and if the latter view is to be adopted for the purpose of testing the plaintiff's case it must equally be adopted for testing that of the defendant. But on the defendant's view of s. 13A it leads to a manifest absurdity. Defendant says that the person to whom s. 13A applies must be a person who at the time of the testator's death is named in s. 22.

Under cl. (10) the heir will be the person who happens to be the nearest agnate at that time.

Under cl. (11) he will be the nearest cognate. The defendant's construction of s. 13A leads to this manifest absurdity that whereas according to the scheme of the Act cognates can only take when all the agnates are exhausted yet a Will in favour of the second nearest agnate at the testator's death is governed by sub-s. (3) of s. 13A, while a Will in favour of the nearest cognate is governed by sub-s. (2).

If the Legislature intended sub-s. (2) of s. 13A to apply to any possible heir under the Act it is difficult to see what language it could have used more apt to convey that meaning than that which is found in the section. Possible heirs and persons who might in the absence of other heirs have succeeded are equivalent expressions. If, however, it intended the construction for which the defendant contends it must be conceded that the language employed is singularly ill-adapted for the purpose it had in view. I have no doubt that the plaintiff's construction is the correct one, and I would accordingly allow the appeal and decree the suit in respect of the talukdari property.

As regards the other questions which have been argued I agree with the judgment of my learned colleague.

ORDER.

Daniels, J. C., and Dalal, A. J. C.—(February 23, 1925).—Under s. 98 of the C. P. C. we refer for the decision of a third Judge the following question of law on which we differ:

Whether a Will made by a talukdar in favour of an agnate of the testator who is not the nearest agnate at the time of the testator's death is governed by sub-s. (2) or sub-s. (3) of s. 13A of Act I as amended by the Oudh Estates Amendment Act of 1910.

As the present Second Additional Judicial Commissioner was Counsel for one of the parties in the Court below a date will be fixed in April when it is expected that there will be a Judge on the Court capable of dealing with the reference.

JUDGMENT.

Simpson, A. J. C.—(July 13, 1925).—Under s. 98 of the C. P. C. the following question of law has been referred to me, my learned colleagues Daniels and Dalal having differed.

"Whether a Will made by a talukdar in favour of an agnate of the testator, who is not the nearest agnate at the time of the testator's death, is governed by sub-s. (2) or sub-s. (3) of s. 13A of Act I as amended by the Oudh Estates Amendment Act of 1910."

It is agreed by Counsel on both sides that the question of law arising in the case is slightly narrower than this. It refers to a Will made by a talukdar whose name is entered in List No. 2 of the Act. It is also restricted to a bequest in favour of a male agnate who is not the nearest male agnate. Section 13A runs as follows:—

"No talukdar or grantee, and no heir or legatee of a talukdar or grantee and no transferee referred to in s. 14, and no heir or legatee of such transferee, shall have power to bequeath his estate, or any portion thereof or any interest therein:—

(1) (a) to a person who would have succeeded to such estate, portion or interest under the provisions of this Act applicable to such estate, had the person so bequeathing died intestate as to his estate, at the time when the bequest took effect,

(b) to his daughter,

(c) to a son of his daughter, or

(d) to a younger son, except by a Will duly executed and attested;

(2) to a person who might, in the absence of other heirs, have succeeded to such estate, portion or interest under the provisions of this Act applicable to such estate, had the person so bequeathing died intestate as to his estate, at the time when the bequest took effect, except by a Will duly executed and attested not less than three months before the death of the testator and presented for registration within one month from the date of its execution and registered;

(3) to any person other than a person mentioned in cls. (1) and (2), except by a Will duly executed and attested not less than three months before the death of the testator and registered according to the law for the time being in force relating to the registration of assurances but presented for such registration within one month from the date of its execution."

In order to ascertain who the persons are who would have succeeded to the estate in case of intestacy it is necessary to look to s. 22 of the Act, which runs as follows:—

"If any talukdar or grantee whose name shall be inserted in the second, third or fifth of the lists mentioned in s. 8, or his heir or legatee, or if any taluqdar, grantee, heir or legatee whose name shall be inserted in the list referred to in s. 31A, sub-s (3), or his heir or legatee, shall die intestate as to his estate, such estate shall descend as follows, namely:—

(1) to the eldest son of such taluqdar or grantee, heir or legatee, and his male lineal descendants, subject to the same conditions and in the same manner as the estate was held by the deceased;

(2) or if such eldest son of such taluqdar or grantee, heir or legatee, shall have died in his lifetime, leaving male lineal descendants, then to the eldest and every other son of such eldest son, successively, according to their respective seniorities, and their respective male lineal descendants, subject as aforesaid;

(3) or if such eldest son of such taluqdar or grantee, heir or legatee, shall have died in his father's lifetime without leaving male lineal descendants, then to the second and every other son of the said taluqdar or grantee, heir or legatee, successively, according to their respective seniorities, and their respective male lineal descendants, subject as aforesaid;

(4) or in default of such son or his male lineal descendants, then to such person as the said taluqdar, or grantee heir or legatee shall have adopted, and his male lineal descendants, subject as aforesaid;

(5) or in default of such adopted son, or his male lineal descendants, then to the eldest and every other brother of such taluqdar or grantee, heir or legatee, successively, according to their respective seniorities, and their respective male lineal descendants, brothers of the whole blood and their descendants being preferred to brothers of the half blood and their descendants, subject as aforesaid;

(6) or in default of any such brother, or his male lineal descendants, then to the widow of the deceased taluqdar or grantee, heir or legatee, for her lifetime only, or, if there be more widows than one, to the widow first married to such taluqdar or grantee, heir or legatee, for her lifetime only;

(7) and on the death of such widow, then to such son as the said widow shall, with the consent in writing of her deceased husband, have adopted, and his male lineal descendants subject as aforesaid;

Provided that, after the expiration of six months from the commencement of this Act such consent shall be expressed by means of a registered instrument or by means of a Will or codicil, executed and attested in the manner required by this Act;

(8) or on the death of such first married widow and in default of a son adopted by her with such consent as aforesaid, and his male lineal descendants, then to the other widow, if any, of such taluqdar or grantee, heir or legatee, next in order of marriage, for her life, and on the death of such other widow, to a son adopted by her with such consent as aforesaid, and his male lineal descendants; or in default of such adopted son, then to the other surviving widows in the order of their respective marriages for their respective lives and on their respective deaths to the sons so adopted by them respectively, and to the male lineal descendant of such sons respectively, subject as aforesaid;

(9) or in default of any such widow or any such adopted son or any such male lineal descendants, then to the mother of the deceased taluqdar, or grantee, heir or legatee, for her lifetime only;

Explanation:—In this clause the word 'mother' does not include a step-mother; and in the case where the deceased was an adopted son, it means that wife or widow of the father who joined in or made the adoption, or, if the adoption was made by the father alone and there are at the time of the death of the deceased more widows than one, it means the one who was first married, and, on her death, the other surviving widows in the order of their respective marriages in succession;

(10) or in default of or on death of such mother, then to the nearest male agnate according to the rule of lineal primogeniture, subject as aforesaid;

(11) or in default of any such agnate, then to such person as would have been entitled to succeed to the estate under the ordinary law to which persons of the religion and tribe of such taluqdar or grantee, heir or legatee, are subject;

Provided that, when there are more persons than one so entitled, the estate shall descend to a single person according to the following rules, that is to say:—

(i) where among such persons some are connected by blood relationship and some by reason of marriage, the blood relations shall exclude the relations by marriage;

(ii) where among such persons some are related by the whole blood and some by the half blood, those related by the whole blood shall exclude those related by the half blood;

(iii) where, subject to the provisions of the rules (i) and (ii), among such persons some are related through males only and some through females, the persons related through males only shall exclude the others; and amongst the others those shall be preferred in whose relationship the steps from the deceased proceed furthest through males;

(iv) where among such persons some stand in a nearer and some in a more remote relationship to the deceased, but both are equally qualified under the three preceding rules, those in the nearer degree shall exclude those in the more remote;

(v) where such persons stand in equal degree of relationship to the deceased and are equally qualified under the four preceding rules, the estate shall descend to the eldest male in the senior line, but if there be no male heir in that line, then to the eldest male in the next senior line in which there is a male heir; and if there be no male heir in any line, then to the eldest female in the senior line."

In the present case the taluqdar made a Will in favour of the plaintiff, Achal Singh, who is his male agnate, but not the nearest male agnate. I have to decide whether Achal Singh is a person, who might, in the absence of other heirs, have succeeded to the estate if the testator had made no Will. The heirs in intestacy are to be found in s. 22, and we are concerned with cl. (10). The questions I put to myself are these:—

Q. Would Achal Singh have succeeded to the estate if the testator had died intestate?

A. No.

Q. Why not?

A. Because he would have been excluded by nearer heirs.

Q. Might he, in the absence of other heirs, have succeeded to the estate?

A. Yes.

My decision on the point of law, therefore, is that the Will is governed by sub-s. (2) of s. 13A of the Act.

FINAL JUDGMENT.

Dalal, J. C. and Wazir Hasan, A. J. C.—(July 24, 1925).—The reference has been decided by a learned Judge of this Court in favour of the plaintiff-appellant. This appeal shall, therefore, be decreed in the terms mentioned in Mr. Dalal's judgment of 19th February 1925:—

(1) The plaintiff is hereby decreed possession with mesne profits of all the taluqdari properties of List A of the plaint Nos. 1 to 6.

(2) The plaintiff shall be entitled to recover Rs. 7,600 from the Allahabad Bank.

(3) He shall be entitled to recover Rs. 1,900 balance of current account in the Allahabad Bank.

(4) The valuation of moveables (see list printed at p. 344) shall be altered from Rs. 1,015 to Rs. 1,960.

(5) The plaintiff shall be declared entitled to mesne profits of the Paicharwa property from the date of the taluqdar's death to the date of his taking over possession of that property from the defendant lady.

The reliefs are granted to the plaintiff in addition to the decree passed in his favour by the lower Court.

The plaintiff has practically succeeded in obtaining all that he desired so he shall receive costs of both the Courts.

Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit out of which this appeal has arisen the plaintiff sued for a declaration of his title to and for recovery of possession of the land in suit, for compensation for damages and for an injunction on the defendant.

The suit was dismissed by the Trial Court and the plaintiff appealed to the District Court. The learned District Judge held that the question of the plaintiff's title was res judicata by reason of a previous decision of the same Court in 1915; and on that finding the learned Judge allowed the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court of first instance and ordered that the plaintiff would get a decree declaring his title to the land subject to the defendant's right of way. It was further ordered that each party would bear their own costs.

The defendant has appealed to this Court and the learned Vakil for the appellant has contended first of all that the judgment of 1915 does not operate as res judicata; secondly, that, the subject-matter of the previous suit is not identical with the subject-matter of the present suit; and, thirdly that with regard to the piece of land which is common in both the suits the plaintiff in the first suit stated that he claimed no relief as he was in possession; and the suit was dismissed on that ground.

I deal with the first point. In the previous suit the present plaintiff was defendant and the present defendant was the plaintiff and the Trial Court in that case held that not only had the plaintiff in that suit failed to prove his title but that the defendant had proved his. On appeal the learned District Judge in dealing with the appeal said: "the learned Munsif found that the plaintiff had no title to the lands in suit that he had not acquired any right in the land by his alleged adverse possession and that he has a right of way over the existing darja as admitted by the defendant". Then in dealing very briefly with the evidence he came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had not proved his title and he dismissed the appeal. It cannot, therefore, be said that he decided the question as to whether the defendant in that suit who is the plaintiff in the present suit had or had not any title to the land in question. "When the judgment of a Court of first instance upon a particular issue is appealed against, that judgment ceases to be res judicata and becomes res subjudice, and if the Appellate Court declines to decide that issue and disposes of the case on other grounds, the judgment of the First Court upon that issue is no more a bar to a future suit than it would be if that judgment had been reversed by the Court of Appeal". This is the principle enunciated in the case of Nilvaru v. Nilvaru (1), and applying this principle to the present case it seems quite clear to me that the Appellate Court did not decide the issue as to whether or not the defendant in that case who is the plaintiff in the present case had or had not a title to the land. The only question which the learned District Judge decided was whether the plaintiff who is the defendant in the present suit had any title and he decided that he had not. In the present suit the plaintiff, who was the defendant in the former suit, prayed for a declaration of title and for possession. He has, therefore, as against the defendant to prove his title. It is not sufficient for him to say that the defendant in this suit has no title which is the only question which was decided in the other suit. He must prove his own title in order to succeed. In this view of the matter I think the former judgment does not operate as res judicata so far as the title of the plaintiff in the present suit is concerned. I, therefore, set aside the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge and send the case back to him in order that he may decide the appeal on the merits.

Costs of this Court will abide the result.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 38—Sale of goods—

Vendor, duty of—Offer of goods—Opportunity for inspection—Duty of purchaser—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 45, scope of—Negotiable instrument, suit on—Partial failure of consideration, whether can be pleaded.

Clause (3) of s. 38 of the Contract Act only requires that the promisee should have a reasonable opportunity of seeing that the thing offered is the thing which the promisor is bound by his promise to deliver. The promisor is under no obligation to prove the identity of the thing offered to the promisee's satisfaction. It is the promisee's duty to take the steps necessary to satisfy himself. The promisor has only to give him an opportunity for it. [p. 485, col. 1.]

Where on an offer by the vendor to deliver the goods, the goods could have been inspected if the purchaser had applied to the vendor to enable him to do so, for the purpose of satisfying himself that the goods offered corresponded with the goods contracted for, but the purchaser took no steps for this purpose but contented himself with writing letters with a view to raise a defence subsequently; in a suit for damages by the vendor for non-acceptance of goods:

Held, that the plaintiff had done all he was bound to do under the contract and there was no default on his part and that consequently the defendant was liable in damages. [ibid.]

Actual physical possession of the goods by the vendor is not necessary. It will be enough if the goods are under his control and he is able and willing to deliver on the price being paid. [p. 485, col. 2.]

Per Krishnan, J.—Partial failure of consideration in respect of a negotiable instrument is a defence pro tanto against an immediate party when the failure is an ascertained and liquidated amount, but not otherwise, that is, when a collateral enquiry becomes necessary for the purpose. Where a bill is drawn for the price of two bales and only one is delivered, the defence that consideration has failed to the extent of one half is available. Where a hundi amount represents the advance price paid for a number of bales, the advance towards each bale being definite and fixed, the consideration for the hundi can be pleaded to have failed with reference to the undelivered bales and that is a sum that can be computed without any inquiry. [p. 483, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Madura, in O. S. No. 13 of 1920. (O. S. No. 1 of 1919 on the file of the District Court of Madura).

Petition, under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, to revise the decree and judgment of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Madura, in O. S. No. 12 of 1920, (O. S. No. 13 of 1919 on the file of the District Court, Madura).

Messrs. K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer and K. Rajah Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Krishnan, J.—This appeal arises from a suit brought by the plaintiffs in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Madura on a hundi or Bill of Exchange, executed by one Pasimuthu Pillai on behalf of the firm of one Kuppuswami Iyer, now deceased, in Madura whose agent he was. The hundi was drawn in favour of one Kolandavelu Pillai the 2nd plaintiff as representing the 1st plaintiff's firm on the 23rd of August 1918 and is for a sum of Rs. 22,066. It was drawn on the 1st defendant's firm in Madras and is marked Ex. A in the case. It was dishonoured when presented to the Madras firm; notice was given of it to the 1st defendant who was called upon to pay but failed to do so. Hence this suit was brought. Kuppuswami Iyer died, leaving the 2nd and 3rd defendants as his sons and heirs who succeeded to their father's estate and his trade. The 2nd plaintiff has been joined as a plaintiff to avoid any objection as to parties.

The circumstances under which this hundi was executed are briefly these:—

The 1st defendant's firm carried on trade in Madura in yarn and cotton thread and in the course of that trade, the agent of the firm Pasimuthu Pillai who was looking after the business entered into seven contracts with Kolanthavelu Pillai, the agent of the 1st plaintiff's firm about the middle of August 1918 for the purchase of 229 bales of yarn to be manufactured by the Madura Mills of certain counts at certain stated prices. Of these contracts, we are concerned in the suit with only four relating to 163 bales. The contracts were originally made orally but at the request of the 1st defendant's agent, they were reduced to writing on the 7th September 1918. They are called Varthamanam letters Nos. 21, 22, 23 and 24 and are filed in the case as Exs. B, B-1, B-2 and B-3. The terms of the contracts are fully set out in these letters. It appears from them that the suit hundi amount was made up of advances agreed to be paid under the contracts towards the purchase-moneys at the rate of Rs. 150 per bale, for 24 bales under Ex. B, 20 bales under Ex. B-1 and 10 bales under Ex. B-2, and at the rate of Rs. 142 per bale for 98 bales under Ex. No. B-3, less Rs. 100 paid in cash, which is the subject-matter of the suit Original Suit No. 12 of 1920 brought by the 1st defendant against the 1st plaintiff and tried along with this suit. Only two bales were actually taken delivery of and paid for by the 1st defendant under the contracts. Plaintiffs assert in their plaint that the contracts were broken by the 1st defendant and not by themselves. They claim the amount due under the hundi with interest and costs.

The defendants pleaded that the plaintiffs committed breach of contract and were not, therefore, entitled to claim the hundi amount and further that the hundi, having been passed in part payment of the stipulated price for goods to be manufactured, and no goods having been sold or offered for sale to 1st defendant, was not enforceable. In reply to the defendants' plea, plaintiffs contended that the suit being one on a negotiable instrument, a collateral enquiry could not be held in this suit into the question as to who committed the breach of contract, as such an enquiry is barred by s. 45 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, even though as the payee, he was a holder standing in immediate relation to the 1st defendant the drawer. They also contended that if the question of breach could be gone into, the 1st defendant committed the breach and the damages they are entitled to being more than hundi amount, there was no failure of consideration on the hundi.

The Subordinate Judge overruled the objection under s. 45 and holding that the breach was committed by the plaintiffs dismissed their suit except to the extent of Rs. 284 of the hundi amounts which had been taken into consideration in paying the price of the two bales delivered, for which he gave a decree. He also decreed O. S. No. 12 of 1920 for Rs. 100. First plaintiff's legal representatives have appealed to us against the decrees in both these cases, the latter by way of a revision petition under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887.

As regards the objection raised by the plaintiffs against the defence under s. 45, I think the Subordinate Judge is right in overruling it. This section is based on the English Law on the point which is stated by Chalmers in his book on Bills of Exchange, 8th Edition, page 115 to be as follows:— "Partial failure of consideration is a defence pro tanto against an immediate party when the failure is an ascertained and liquidated amount, but not otherwise", "that is, when a collateral enquiry becomes necessary for the purpose. Illustration 1 given on the same page explains what a collateral enquiry is. Illustration 2, however, shows that where a bill is drawn for the price of two bales and only one is delivered, the defence that consideration has failed to the extent of one-half is available. That position is supported by the case of Agra and Masterman's Bank v. Leighton (1). Now in the present case, as I have already stated, the hundi amount represents the advance prices paid for the 153 bales the advance towards each bale being definite and fixed. The consideration for the hundi can thus be pleaded to have failed with reference to all the undelivered bales and that is a sum that could be computed, without any inquiry. In this view, it will be the plaintiffs that will suffer if their objection is upheld. But it seems to me that the case should not be disposed of in that manner but the question of who committed the breach should be considered without driving the parties to another suit and thereby multiplying litigation. In England it is open now to the parties to raise the question as to breach in a suit on a bill by counter-claiming. In the present case, the question as to who committed the breach has been raised in the pleadings, each party charging the other with the breach and it has been fully tried out by the lower Court and dealt with by it in its judgment. In these circumstances it seems to me that we should deal with the case as if it were one for damages for breach of contract. If the breach is on plaintiffs' part as held by the lower Court its decree will be right if it is on the 1st defendant's part as contended for by plaintiffs, there is no reason why plaintiffs should not be allowed to recover the hundi amount as damages in this suit. No further amendments of the pleadings seems to be necessary for the purpose.

The question then is who committed the breach in this case. As the contracts referred, not to ready goods, but to goods to be manufactured hereafter by the Madura Mills and to be allotted by them to the purchasers from whom plaintiffs' vendors Ramachar and Brothers were to get them and the plaintiffs themselves were to get from the latter firm, it was naturally arranged that plaintiffs were to give notice in the first instance to the 1st defendant when the bales were issued by the mills and finally allotted to the plaintiffs by their vendors. The contracts provide that on the day after receiving such notice, 1st defendant was to pay the price deducting the advance on them and take delivery. The first two bales on which notice was given by Ex. C-1 to the 1st defendant under contract No. 24 were paid for and taken delivery of according to the terms of Ex. B-3. About 5 days after 1st defendant was again given notice by Ex. C-4 of a lot of 3 bales of 22½ counts being ready for delivery. The market seems to have fallen for these goods in the meanwhile. The 1st defendant instead of taking delivery as before, the next day after Ex. C-4 was received, as he was bound to do under his contract Ex. B-3, raised objections and sent his letter Ex. I and asked whether the mill had delivered the above mentioned goods at the prices stated in Ex. B-3., the Varthamanam letter and also said the mill invoice should be shown to him. The contract Ex. B-3 does not speak of any mill price but only of the price at which P. S. Latchmana Iyer and Sons bought the bales and there is no provision in it to show the mill invoices. In fact it is stated to us that the mill invoice remains with the original purchaser from the mill and it is not passed on to the subsequent purchasers of smaller lots. Even if the mill price were mentioned in Ex. B-3, it does not seem to be a part of the description of the goods purchased. The goods are here identified as being 22½ counts of yarn manufactured by the Madura Mills and sold by them to Tholasi Iyer and Sons and by them through the intermediary sellers to the plaintiffs. On receiving Ex. I, plaintiffs sent Ex. II, to say that they were not bound under their contract to answer the questions asked or to produce the mill invoices; they offered to show Ramachar's letter of intimation and called upon the 1st defendant to pay the price with interest for the period of the delay and take delivery at once. About 5 days after, 1st defendant sent another letter Ex. III in which he insisted on being shown the mill invoice and the bale number and stated that, on default, he would hold the plaintiffs liable in damages. Further correspondence passed between the parties Exs. D, G, D-1., H-4 and 5 but they made no difference in the position taken up by the parties. The contents of those letters are set out fully by the Subordinate Judge and need not be repeated here. It was argued that because in the last paragraph of Ex. G, the plaintiffs still offered to deliver the bales they condoned the previous breach if any, and kept the contracts alive; but this is of no importance as 1st defendant took no advantage of it, but treated the contracts as broken even after Ex. H. As the 1st defendant failed to take delivery, plaintiffs failed to take the bale from their vendors and in consequence Ramachar and Brothers gave them notice that they had sold away the goods in public auction and this fact is mentioned in Ex. IV. With that, the controversy as regards these 3 bales came to an end.

In spite of the conduct of the 1st defendant, plaintiff again gave him notice Ex. X of 2 bales of Madura Mill yarn No. 24 being ready for delivery, and asked him to pay for them and take delivery. This notice was also under Ex. B-3. The 1st defendant again adopted the same tactics as before and instead of paying and taking delivery wrote letter Ex. XI in similar terms to Ex. I. The plaintiffs wrote Ex. XII offering to give 1st defendant all facilities to inspect the goods, as well as the "papers, etc., which they had, but he did nothing, except to send a lawyer's notice Ex. XII calling for a return of his advance with interest on the footing that the contracts were off.

With that the correspondence ended. The plaintiff failed to get the 1st defendant to pay and take delivery of the goods or even to inspect them to satisfy himself that the bales were those contracted for, if he really doubted their identity. There is evidence to show that the market was falling and as it was not to the 1st defendant's interest to perform the contracts, he was clearly trying to get out of his contracts. It is true as the Sub-Judge remarks relying on the observation in Bowes v. Shand (2) that if 1st defendant thought he was going to be a loser by accepting the goods, there was nothing to prevent him from trying to escape from a losing bargain, if he could do so lawfully. But he can do so, only for a legal and proper reason but not on mere subterfuges.

The bales about which plaintiffs gave notice of readiness to deliver or asserted by them to be bales contracted for, they were buying from Ramachar and Brothers and they got notices from that firm which are produced. There seems to be no reason to doubt that the bales about which notices were given were the bales contracted for. An attempt was made by the defendants to prove that there were no bales of the contract description to which the notices Exs. C-4 and X could apply by calling the mill clerk the only witness examined in the case, but the attempt has failed. He admitted by reference to the mill ledgers that before 25th September 1918, 21 bales of 24 counts and 15 bales of 22½ counts Madura Mills yarn were delivered to Tholasi Iyer and Brothers. He mentions different prices for these bales but I do not think that that matters as I have already explained above. The bales of which notice was given by the plaintiffs were evidently part of those bales; there is nothing to show the contrary.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiffs committed breach of contract because in his opinion the "plaintiffs failed to discharge the obligation cast upon them by s. 38 of the Contract Act in regard to the identity of the goods." It is contended that because the plaintiffs did not answer the questions put to them in Exs. 1 and 2 and did not produce the mill invoice or otherwise prove to the 1st defendant's satisfaction the identity of the bales they offered to deliver with the bales contracted for, they committed breach of contract. Section 38, cl. (3) does not, in my opinion, lay such a heavy burden on the seller as is claimed. It only requires that the promisee must have a reasonable opportunity of seeing that the thing offered is the thing which the promisor is bound by his promise to deliver. The promisor is under no obligation to prove the identity of the thing offered to the promisee's satisfaction. It is the promisee's duty to take the steps necessary to satisfy himself. The promisor has only to give him an opportunity for it. In this case, the goods could have been inspected if the 1st defendant had applied to the plaintiffs to enable him to do so, and to see the count and the number of the bales which according to the mill clerk are marked on the outside of the bale. If he wanted to see the mill invoice, he could have applied to Tholasi Iyer through plaintiffs or directly. But the 1st defendant took no steps for these purposes but contended himself with writing letters with a view to raise a defence subsequently. Plaintiffs offered to place all their "goods and papers, etc.," in 1st defendant's hands by Ex. XII but he did not accept the offer. In these circumstances I have come to the conclusion that plaintiffs did all that they were bound to do under their contracts and that there is no default on their part.

It was further argued that the plaintiffs should have reduced the goods to actual physical possession before giving notice and not having done so, the notices were bad. I am unable to accept this argument. The goods were under the control of the plaintiffs and they were able and willing to deliver if the price was paid as they did in the case of the 2 bales which were taken delivery of by the 1st defendant at the beginning.

That is all the s. 38, cl. (2) requires. Actual physical possession of the goods is not necessary. Delivery is often given on delivery orders, in the trade.

Having come to the conclusion that plaintiffs committed no default, I must hold that 1st defendant committed breach by refusing to take delivery and calling back his advance and that he is liable in damages. Ordinarily an enquiry will have to be held to ascertain the amount of damages but as plaintiffs have sued for the hundi amount and as it is conceded that damages are likely to exceed the amount, I think we are justified in giving the 1st plaintiff a decree for the hundi amount. I would reverse the decree of the lower Court and give 1st plaintiff a decree for Rs. 22,066 with interest at 6 per cent. from the date of the hundi to the date of payment and costs in both this and the lower Court against the estate of the 1st defendant including the shares of his minor sons. Original Suit No. 12 of 1920 will be dismissed with costs in this and the lower Court.

Phillips, J.—I agree with the order proposed. I am satisfied for the reasons given by my learned brother that it was 1st defendant who committed the breach of the contract and, therefore, plaintiffs are entitled to damages. As plaintiffs only claim the amount of the plaint hundi which is less than the amount of damages claimable, it is unnecessary to decide the question of whether s. 45 of the Negotiable Instruments Act is applicable to the facts of this case and, therefore, on that point I reserve my opinion.

JUDGMENT.

Walmsley, J.—These two appeals are directed against a judgment which disposed of two applications for setting aside a sale held under the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819. The suits were brought one by the putnidar and the other by one of the durputnidars and the allegations were that there had been fraud on the part of the durputnidars defendants Nos. 3 to 6 who had agreed to pay the rent to the landlord and that the said durputnidars had further committed fraud by engaging a benamdar to buy the property. It was also said that the notices required to be served under the law had not been properly served by the landlord. Now, the learned Judge went into the questions of fact and found that the durputnidars defendants Nos. 3 to 6 who had agreed to pay the rent had abstained from doing so and brought about the sale in order to purchase the putni themselves and that they had engaged a benamdar to purchase the property when the sale took place. He also found that the notices were not properly served in accordance with the law. He thereupon ordered that the sale should be set aside. His order as to costs was that the defendant No. 1, that is, the present appellant—the landlord should pay the costs of the plaintiffs and that the other defendants should bear their own costs in both the suits. Now, the costs for which the landlord has been made liable amount to Rs. 1,758 odd in one suit and to Rs. 886 odd in the other and the appeals are preferred by the defendant No. 1 the landlord against this order as to costs.

An objection is taken on behalf of the respondents—the durputnidars that no appeal lies against such an order. I think that is right. Under the present C. P. C., the Court which tries the suit has full power to determine by whom the costs are to be paid. The words of the section are “the costs incidental to all suits shall be in the discretion of the Court and the Court shall have full power to determine by whom such costs are to be paid.” Unless we read those words in a very restricted meaning which has not been the practice in this Court, I think it is clear that we have no authority to interfere with the learned Judge’s discretion. I think further that the learned Judge exercised his discretion with considerable care. It is impossible to read his judgment without coming to the conclusion that it was the zemindar who contributed to the length of the case by his attitude. Further, there is this peculiar feature of the final order that the learned Judge did not order re-conveyance of the property but simply set aside the sale. He also pointed out that the zemindar recovered all the rents due to him. I think, therefore, on that ground, the learned Judge had discretion to deal with the matter of costs and he exercised that discretion, so far as I can see with care. For the reasons given I am of opinion that we ought not to interfere with the order complained of. The result, therefore, is that these appeals are dismissed with costs—three gold mohurs in each case—two gold mohurs in each case to the durputnidars respondents represented by Babu Girija Mohan Sanyal, one gold mohur to Babu Bireswar Bagchi’s client in Appeal No. 307 and one gold mohur to Babu Jatindra Mohan Chowdhury’s client in Appeal No. 308.

Where one person deals with another on the assumption that the latter is acting as a principal, it is open to the former, in a suit arising out of the transaction, to implead as defendants, along with the person with whom he had dealt, those persons for whom the latter acted as an agent and to claim that if it should be found, as a matter of fact, that the person with whom he had dealt had acted as an agent for the others, a decree may be passed both against the agent and against the principals. The provisions of s. 233 of the Contract Act would warrant the passing of such a decree in such a case. [p. 483, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the First Additional District Judge, Lucknow, at Bara Banki, dated the 31st May 1924, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 7th April 1924.

Mr. K. P. Misra, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Haider Husain and Hari Kishan Dhon, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal. The plaintiffs are the appellants. The suit was one for the sum of Rs. 1,040 made up of three items.

1. Rs. 200 being the balance due on bahi khata account for goods supplied by plaintiffs to defendant. At that time there was only one defendant Bhagirath, now arrayed as defendant No. 1.

2. Rs. 831-4 the price of two bales of cotton supplied to defendant on 27th April 1923.

3. Rs. 8-12 interest.

The defence was, as regards the first item, that nothing was due. As regards the second the pleading is not absolutely clear, but, in the light of the course taken in the litigation, may be regarded as a pleading that defendant No. 1 had bought these two bales from the plaintiffs, but that he had done so as agent for the 2nd defendant Patan Din. As regards the third item, it was pleaded that there was no agreement to pay interest.

On this defence, the plaintiffs denied that defendant No. 1 had acted as agent of defendant No. 2, but said that to avoid future litigation they would make defendant No. 2 a party. Subsequently, defendant No. 2, examined by the Court, admitted that defendant No. 1 had bought the bales as his agent. But he further stated that he himself had acted in the matter as the agent of defendant No. 3 Musammat Lalta Dei who is the real purchaser of the bales. She was made a party too, and in her written statement she admitted that she was the purchaser of these two bales from the plaintiffs, but she objected to paying for them, on the ground that her books showed various goods received and various payments made; and that the balance due to the plaintiffs was only Rs. 581-4.

On these pleadings the Court of Trial found in fact.

1. That defendant No. 1 had purchased on behalf of defendant No. 2 who was acting on behalf of defendant No. 3.

2. That plaintiffs were not aware that defendant No. 1 was an agent.

He found accordingly, as a matter of law, that defendant No. 1 was liable, but also that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were liable. He does not discuss the grounds of their liability beyond saying that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 admit that they got the two bales. But the decision would appear to be correct. Section 233 of the Indian Contract Act lays down that "In cases where the agent is personally liable, a person dealing with him may hold either him or his principal, or both of them liable." And the illustration runs:

"A enter into a contract with B to sell him a 100 bales of cotton, and afterwards discovers that B was acting as agent for C. A may sue either B, or C, or both, for the price of the cotton."

With regard to the words, "In cases where the agent is personally liable," s. 230, cl. (2) applied. It is unnecessary to quote it here, because the illustration to s. 233 is so exactly on all fours with the present case.

The interest was disallowed but the rest of the claim was decreed so that there was a decree against defendant No. 1 for Rs. 1,031-4, with proportionate costs. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were to be jointly liable with defendant No. 1 for the sum of Rs. 831-4.

and proportionate costs only. Future interest was allowed. Against this decree appeals were filed by defendant No. 1 and by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 together. The appeal of defendant No. 1 was dismissed with costs, but the appeals of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were allowed with costs. The learned District Judge also made no reference to s. 233 of the Indian Contract Act. He said:

"The plaintiffs denied that they had sold the yarn to these appellants, and their allegation in this respect was in fact found to be true. Indeed the learned Subordinate Judge has remarked that there was no privity of contract between the plaintiffs and these appellants." But s. 233 is an answer to these arguments. The plaintiffs said throughout that they had dealt with defendant No. 1 and did not know that he was anybody's agent. But in impleading the alleged principals they in fact said that if it should be found as a matter of fact that defendant No. 1 had acted as an agent then they wanted a decree against both agent and principal. And according to s. 233 they were entitled to such a decree. It was further said by the learned District Judge that if the Court wanted to act on the admission of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 it should have taken the admission as a whole. There is no rule of law to this effect. Every admission which a party makes is evidence against him, and may properly be acted on without necessarily accepting other admissions or other statements which he may have made. It has been argued before me that defendant No. 3 was entitled to refuse payment until the Court had gone into all the accounts between herself and the plaintiffs and ascertained what was due on the balance. I do not think that that was necessary in a suit framed as the present one was. The plaintiffs sold two bales of cotton to defendant No. 1, and they brought a suit against him for the price of them. Defendant No. 1 pleaded that he had acted as agent of defendant No. 3, and the Court found this to be the fact. I do not think it was then open to defendant No. 3 to bring other transactions into this suit whether by way of set off or in any other way. The case is further complicated by the fact that defendant No. 1 has made a tender of the full amount due under the decree. If this tender had been made in time it would have left the plaintiffs with no ground for proceeding against defendants Nos. 2 and 3, because it is plain that they cannot expect to be paid twice over for their goods. But this tender was made very late. The second appeal was admitted here in Lucknow on the 22nd of September 1924. The memorandum of appeal is dated the 1st September 1924. The tender by defendant No. 1 was made at Bara Banki on the 2nd of September 1924, and there is nothing to show that at the time the appeal was admitted the appellants knew of it. I must treat this tender as subsequent to the appeal, and the appeal must be decided on the state of things that existed before the tender was made.

I allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge. The appellants will get their costs of the First Court, that were awarded in the decree of that Court and will also get their costs in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 544, 547—Diet money due to witness, whether can be recovered by suit.

Where a witness pursuant to an agreement with the complainant in a criminal case attends the Court to give evidence and the Court directs the complainant to pay the witness a certain sum as his expenses, if such sum is not paid the witness is entitled to recover it from the complainant by a civil suit. [p. 489, col. 2.]

Suhrawardy, J.—Section 544, Cr. P. C., does not empower a Court trying a complaint to order payment of diet money of witnesses produced before it by the parties. Therefore, such money cannot be recovered under s. 547, Cr. P. C., but it can be recovered by the witness in a civil suit. [p. 489, col. 1.]

Rule against the judgment of the Munsif, Bolepur, dated the 27th March 1923.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This Rule arises

out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for recovery of a certain amount due to him on account of the diet expenses allowed to him by the Criminal Court in a case in which the defendant was the complainant and the plaintiff was cited as a witness on his behalf. The Munsif of Bolepur exercising Small Cause Court jurisdiction decreed the suit.

An objection is taken before us that the Small Cause Court Judge had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the suit under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and it is based mainly on s. 547, Cr. P. C. The facts are as follows:—The plaintiff was cited as a witness on behalf of the defendant in a certain criminal case in which the defendant was the complainant. The plaintiff applied to the Court that he might be allowed the amount incurred by him as expenses for attending the Court on behalf of the complainant. On that petition the learned Sub-Divisional Officer passed the following order: "Complainant to pay." The sum allowed was Rs. 16-10-6. On the date on which the above order was passed the complainant paid Rs. 5. The plaintiff has now sued for the balance of Rs. 11-10-6.

It is argued on behalf of the petitioner that the only remedy open to the plaintiff was to request the Criminal Court under s. 547, Cr. P. C., to recover this amount as if it was a fine. In my judgment, that section does not apply. It provides that any money (other than a fine) payable by virtue of any order made under the Code..... shall be recoverable as if it were a fine. The learned Vakil for the petitioner has failed to point out any provision in the Code under which this order of payment of diet money to a witness on the side of the prosecution was made. He has fallen back upon s. 544, Cr. P. C., and contends that the order might have been made under that section. But that section deals with an altogether different state of things. It empowers the Court to order that the expenses of the complainant and his witnesses should be paid by the Government under circumstances that may be considered proper by the Court. It does not empower the Court trying a complaint to order payment of diet money of a witness produced before it by the parties. That power is vested in the Court under the general rules of the High Court. It is, therefore, clear that the money in suit is recoverable by the plaintiff and that a suit may be brought for that amount unless the petitioner shows any authority to the contrary which he has failed to do. It is not contended that it offends any rule of public policy nor is it shown how the Civil Court loses its ordinary jurisdiction to entertain a suit for recovery of money payable by the defendant and which cannot be recovered in any other way. Some light upon this matter may be obtained from the decision of this Court in the case of Nemai Chundra Ghose v. Ajahar Chowdhury (1). I do not think that there is any substance in this Rule. It must accordingly be discharged with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at one gold mohur.

Page, J.—I agree. I do not think it necessary in this case to go the length of laying down any general proposition of law as to the alleged right of a witness in a criminal case to obtain travelling expenses from the complainant because in this case it is perfectly clear from the judgment that the complainant, who is now the defendant, arranged with the plaintiff that the plaintiff should give evidence in the suit. Pursuant to that agreement the plaintiff attended the Court and a certain order was made by the Court that the complainant should pay to the plaintiff a certain sum. A part of that sum was immediately paid but the rest has not been paid. In these circumstances I, speaking for myself, without deciding any question of law of a general nature, in the circumstances of this case, think that there is no substance in the application. The Rule is, therefore, discharged.

Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908), ss. 89, 139, 258—Suit to recover possession of occupancy hold.

inj—Denial of title by defendant—Suit, whether cognizable by Civil Court—Order of Attestation Officer revised by Settlement Officer—Suit to set aside order, whether maintainable—Ghatwali lands—Occupancy rights, whether can be acquired.

Section 139 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act contemplates a case where the relationship of landlord and tenant is admitted to exist between the parties. It does not contemplate cases where there is a dispute as regards title. [p. 491, col. 1.]

A suit to recover possession of an occupancy holding on the allegation that the defendant denies the tenancy right of the plaintiff and has been asserting that the plaintiff has no right in the land in suit is not cognizable by the Deputy Commissioner under s. 139 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. The relationship of landlord and tenant not being admitted, the section does not operate as a bar to the maintainability of the suit in the Civil Court. [ibid.]

All orders whether by khanapuri officers or by Attestation Officers have to be made during the preparation of the draft Record of Rights and all such orders passed before final publication of the Record of Rights are subject to revision under the provisions of s. 89 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. Where an order made by an Attestation Officer before the final publication of the Record of Rights has been revised by the Settlement Officer under s. 89, the order is final and has the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court and s. 258 of the Act operates to bar a suit in the Civil Court to set aside the order. [p. 492, col. 1.]

Occupancy rights cannot be acquired in ghatwali lands. [p. 492, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Manbhum, dated the 23rd June 1922, reversing that of the Munsif First Court, Purulia, dated the 24th January 1921.

Mr. A. K. Roy, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. B. Mukherji and B. B. Mukherji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals are by the plaintiffs and arise out of two suits brought by them for declaration of their title and for recovery of possession of certain lands set out in the schedules attached to the plaint. Their case was that the lands in dispute formed the ancestral jote jamai right of the plaintiffs and that the defendant, who is the ghatwal of the village where the lands are situated, forcibly dispossessed them in Agrahayan 1327 B. S. and that, therefore, they claimed recovery of possession on adjudication of their title to the land.

The defence of the defendant was that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit and that the suit was triable in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner alone; that the suit was barred by limitation; that the plaintiffs had no raiya interest in the lands; that the said lands were granted to the ancestors of the plaintiffs by way of maintenance and that on the death of the maintenance holders the defendant had resumed the lands and taken possession thereof; that during the settlement operations the plaintiffs tried to take possession thereof as tenants but that by an order of the Deputy Commissioner possession had been delivered to the defendant with the aid of the Police. It was contended that the suit was barred under the provisions of s. 258 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act.

The learned Munsif who tried the suit held that the plaintiffs were *raiya*s with occupancy rights of the lands in dispute; that the suit was maintainable in the Civil Court, that it was not barred by s. 258 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act; that the plaintiffs were in possession of the lands till they were dispossessed by the defendants through the help of the Police in Agrahayan 1327 B. S.; that although the lands in dispute were situated in a ghatwali village yet the plaintiffs could acquire occupancy right in the ghatwali lands. He believed the receipts for rent produced by the plaintiffs and decreed the suits for recovery of possession.

On appeal by the defendant the learned Subordinate Judge has set aside the decrees passed by the Munsif. He has held that the suit was barred under the provisions of s. 258 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act and that the plaintiffs had no right as *raiya*s in the lands in dispute. He further held that the plaintiffs could not acquire occupancy right in ghatwali lands. He has accordingly dismissed the suits.

The plaintiffs have come up in second appeal to this Court.

At the hearing of the appeals a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the respondent to the effect that the suit was not maintainable in the Civil Court. The learned Vakil relied upon the provisions of s. 139A of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, and he contended that the suit being one for recovery of possession by a tenant against his landlord on the allegation that the plaintiffs as tenants had been unlawfully ejected by their landlord their proper remedy was by an application or a suit under cl. (5) of s. 139 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act and under the provisions of s. 139A of the Act the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The objection, in the form it has been taken, here does not appear to have been taken in the Court below; moreover it is not a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal but an objection on the merits of the case relating to the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to entertain the suit. Having regard, however, to the frame of the suit I am of opinion that this objection is not sound. Section 139 provides that certain suits and applications shall be cognizable by the Deputy Commissioner and shall be instituted and tried or heard under the provisions of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act and shall not be cognizable in any other Court except as otherwise provided in the Act; and cl. (5) of the section enacts that all suits and applications to recover the occupancy or possession of any land from which a tenant has been unlawfully ejected by the landlord or any person claiming under or through the landlord is one of the suits which is so cognizable by the Deputy Commissioner. This section contemplates a case where the relationship of landlord and tenant is admitted to exist between the parties; it does not to my mind contemplate cases where there is a dispute as regards title. In the present case the relationship of landlord and tenant is not admitted; the plaintiffs expressly stated in their plaint that the defendant denied their tenancy right and that he has been asserting that the plaintiffs had no right to the land in suit. There was a specific prayer in the plaint for an adjudication of the plaintiffs' title as occupancy *raiya*s of the land. Such a suit, in my opinion, was not cognizable by the Deputy Commissioner, and s. 139 does not operate as a bar to the maintainability of the suit in the Civil Court.

As regards the bar of s. 258 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act the facts appear to be as follows:—One Manu Bauri had five sons. The eldest son was Haru Bauri who was the father of the defendant Krishna Sardar. The second son was Nafar Bauri who was the ancestor of the plaintiffs in Suit No. 986 which gave rise to S. A. No. 950. The third was Gokhul Bauri the father of the plaintiffs in Suit No. 985 giving rise to S. A. No. 943. The remaining two sons were Gopal and Mansaram. According to the plaintiffs their ancestors first came and began to live in village Dhakya and acquired lands there as tenants. Manu and his eldest son Haru subsequently became ghat- wals of the village; but before the acquisition of the ghatwali interest, the plaintiffs assert that their ancestors had already acquired *raiya*ti interest in the lands. During the khanapuri operations the plaintiffs were first recorded as tenants of the lands in dispute under the defendant; but, subsequently, during attestation proceedings the names of the plaintiffs were removed from the category of tenants and recorded in the remarks column as being in possession of the lands with the share of rent and cess payable by them. The defendant thereupon went to the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum and complained that he was the ghatwal of the lands in dispute and that he had been wrongfully dispossessed by his relations, namely, the present plaintiffs, and asked him for help to recover possession of the lands. The Deputy Commissioner by his parwana dated the 16th July 1920 directed the officer-in-charge of the Police station to oust the plaintiffs from the plots in dispute and to put the defendant in formal possession thereof. The defendant accordingly with the help of the Police obtained possession of the lands in dispute and the plaintiffs were thus dispossessed therefrom. The defendants thereafter went before the Settlement Officer. The learned Settlement Officer by his order dated the 31st January 1921 directed that the possession of the plaintiffs in respect of the lands in dispute in the khatian as made under orders of the Attestation Officer be cancelled. This last order of the Settlement Officer purports to be under s. 89 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, and it is contended that under s. 250 of the Act no suit can be entertained in any Court to vary, modify or set aside either directly or indirectly any decision, order or decree of the Deputy Commissioner or Revenue Officer in any suit, application or proceeding under s. 89 of the Act except on the ground of fraud or want of jurisdiction, and that every such decision, order or decree has the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court in a suit between the parties and subject to the provisions in the Act relating to appeals, the order is final. The learned Munsif came to the conclusion that the order of the Settlement Officer dated the 31st of January 1921 was not an order under s. 89 of the Act inasmuch as s. 89 pre-supposes a proceeding under ss. 83, 85 or 86 of the Act, and as there was no proceeding under any of these sections prior to the order of the 31st of January 1921 and, therefore, according to the Munsif the order purporting to be under s. 89 was ultra vires and without jurisdiction and that section did not apply to the present case. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, has held that there was nothing in the record to show that there was no previous case under s. 83 but that even if it were so, it would make no difference inasmuch as by the Amending Act VI of 1920 (Bihar and Orissa) any entry in the draft Record of Rights can be revised by the Revenue Officer if application be made to him within 12 months from the making of the entry. He was of opinion that the entry made by the order of the Attestation Officer was an entry made in the draft Record of Rights within the meaning of s. 89, and that, therefore, the Settlement Officer had jurisdiction to revise that entry under the provisions of s. 89 of the Act and, therefore, s. 258 which provides that such an order of revision will be final and shall have the force and effect of a decree of Civil Court operates as a bar to the present suit. In my opinion the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge appears to be sound. The order of the Attestation Officer must be taken to be an order under s. 83 of the Act. All orders whether by khanapuri officers or by Attestation Officers have to be made during the preparation of the draft Record of Rights and all such orders passed before final publication of the Record of Rights are subject to revision under the provisions of s. 89 of the Act. It is contended that the Revenue Officer can revise the entries in the draft Record of Rights within 12 months from the making thereof and in this case there is nothing to show whether the order of the 31st of January 1920 was made within 12 months of the order of the Attestation Officer. Now, it must be presumed that the Revenue Officer acted regularly and if the bar of 12 months as provided in s. 89 is to be availed of, it has to be shown by the party pleading such bar that there was a bar of limitation and that the order had been passed beyond 12 months. There is nothing in the record to show that this was the case. The present suit, therefore, was barred under s. 258 of the Act.

Having regard to the suit being barred by s. 258 the other points raised in the appeal do not really arise. As regards the title set up by the plaintiffs the learned Subordinate Judge has come to the finding that there was absolutely no evidence on the record to show that the ancestor of the plaintiffs had acquired any tenancy right before the acquisition of the ghatwal interest. He finds on a consideration of the evidence that the lands in dispute were held by the ancestor of the plaintiffs by way of maintenance; and that after the death of the maintenance holders the defendant, who is the ghatwal, was entitled to take khas possession of the lands. He moreover finds that the rent receipts produced by the plaintiffs were not genuine documents and there was no relationship of landlord and tenants between the parties. These are findings of fact which are conclusive in this second appeal.

As regards the question as to whether occupancy rights can be acquired in ghatwali lands the cases relied upon by the Subordinate Judge support his contention. In Upendra Nath Hazra v. Ram Nath Chowdhury (1), it was held that occupancy rights could not be acquired in ghatwali lands. The same view was taken in Mohesh Majhi v. Pran Krishna Mandal (2). The cases relied upon by the Munsif do not relate to ghatwali lands but to chaukidari chakran lands and have no application to the present case.

The appeals must be dismissed with costs.

Unless expressly restricted by agreement, a partner may carry on another business privately so long as it does not compete with and is not connected with the business of the firm and so long as he does not represent it to be the business of the firm. JUDGMENT.

Mukherji, J.—This is an appeal preferred by the plaintiffs from a final decree passed by the District Judge of Birbhum in a suit for dissolution of partnership, for partition of partnership properties and for accounts. A preliminary decree was passed by the learned Judge directing accounts to be taken from the 11th October 1913 up to the 3rd August 1915, and declaring the shares of the plaintiffs and the defendants therein as being a half and half respectively. On appeal preferred by the plaintiffs a direction was inserted in the decree by this Court that the accounts were to be taken of the business also from the 3rd August 1915 to the date of the final decree and making all just allowance including fair remuneration to be allowed in favour of the defendant for managing the business and that the profits for that period will be divided in the same shares as mentioned before. The decree passed on appeal as aforesaid was carried on appeal to the Privy Council, but the said appeal was dismissed. In accordance with the aforesaid directions the usual investigations were held and the final decree that was ultimately passed is the subject-matter of this appeal.

The first ground urged on behalf of the appellants is that in calculating the profits of the business for the period from the 3rd August 1915 to the date of the final decree no remuneration should have been allowed to the defendant for the period during which he acted as Receiver appointed by the Court in respect of the partnership, and further that for such period for which he may be allowed remuneration, what has been awarded to him is excessive. As regards the first branch of this contention the position is this: The defendant was appointed Receiver on the 23rd September 1916 on the principle that "if the Court on being applied to for the appointment of a Receiver thinks that a proper case for such appointment is made, and the party actually carrying on the business has not been guilty of misconduct so as to render it unsafe to trust him, the Court generally appoints him Receiver without a salary". The learned District Judge found that the defendant was not guilty of any act of bad faith and was actually carrying on the business and being of opinion that the business would suffer if a stranger were appointed on a fixed remuneration, appointed the defendant as Receiver without remuneration as he was willing to act on that condition. The defendant deposited Rs. 5,000 as security and accepted the appointment. It is said that as the defendant consented to act as Receiver without remuneration he should get no allowance for managing the business. It appears, however, that the learned Judge did not pass any order interfering with the management of the business and the business continued to be carried on as before by the defendant. The terms of the defendant's appointment as Receiver limited his acts as such to the keeping of the assets and profits and accounts of the business and submitting proper accounts thereof. By consenting to act as Receiver without remuneration, the defendant did not forego his right to such remuneration as he would be entitled to for managing and carrying on the business. Moreover, this objection, if it had any substance, would have been put forward when this Court expressly directed by its decree dated the 27th January 1921 that the defendant should get all just allowance including fair remuneration for managing the business. It should be remembered that at that date the defendant had been acting as Receiver for about 15 months. The second branch of this contention rests upon the statement made by the defendant in his written statement that if Fazil, the father of the minor plaintiffs, or the defendant would personally conduct the business of the shop, the condition was that he would get Rs. 10 as diet money and expenditure, and also upon the evidence of the defendant to the same effect. In support of this contention reference is also made to the defendant's evidence that after the death of Fazil the shop was in charge of one Abdul Rauf who used to get Rs. 55 or Rs. 60 a month as salary. The arrangement between the two brothers which obtained at a time when they jointly worked for the business, or the salary paid to a servant for doing the ordinary works in a shop can hardly be a criterion for determining the amount of remuneration that should be allowed to a surviving partner who employs all his energy, skill and experience for carrying it on. The Commissioners fixed his remuneration at 25 per cent. of the profits; the learned Judge has increased it to 6 annas in the rupee. The reason given by him for the variation is that when the shop was originally started the capitalist partner used to get at first 4 annas in the rupee and afterwards 3 annas in the rupee and the minor plaintiffs, after the death of Fazil, were more or less in the position of capitalist partners. While on the one hand the reasons given for departing from the conclusions of the Commissioners may not be very cogent, on the other hand it cannot be said that the variation is an altogether unreasonable one. The remuneration as allowed by the learned Judge works out at the rate, roughly of Rs. 150 a month, which cannot, in the circumstances of the case, be considered as altogether unreasonable or excessive.

The next ground of objection is to the effect that the assessment of profits has not been made on the basis of or in proportion to the assets which the respective parties had in the partnership in the different years. It is pointed out that the defendant withdrew from time to time large sums of money and on some occasions his withdrawal had the effect of taking out of the partnership all the assets that he had put in. This argument is based upon an examination of the statement of profits as made by the Commissioners and dated the 9th and 14th May 1922. It is true that at first sight an inspection of the statements leads to the same conclusion. On a close examination of them, however, it is clear that if the profits and respective shares of the parties therein are taken into account, the withdrawals made by the defendant were well within the amounts which would be due to him as profits, and that at no time would the amount of money belonging to the defendant and available to the partnership be less than the money which the minor plaintiffs had in the partnership. The learned Judge has been at great pains to demonstrate it in his judgment and he has made the calculations up to a certain point. The respondent has pursued the calculations up to the date of the final decree, and we are satisfied that the conclusion is correct. In fact, as the learned Judge has pointed out in his judgment, this argument though originally pressed, was ultimately abandoned as the calculations showed that the plaintiffs were at a disadvantage as a result thereof.

The third contention put forward on behalf of the appellant is to the effect that the defendant was carrying on other and rival businesses to the prejudice of the partnership in suit, and that the profits of those concerns should have been taken into account. The precise nature of this objection as formulated before the learned Judge was that these businesses were started by means of the monies belonging to the partnership and the plaintiffs, therefore, are entitled to a share in the profits of these businesses as well. In this Court the objection has been slightly varied, and it has been urged that the defendant, without the consent of the other partners, carried on businesses of the same nature and competing with that of the firm, and must, therefore, account for and pay over to the firm all profits made by him in such businesses and he must also make compensation to the firm for any loss occasioned thereby. The argument is founded upon the evidence that out of the withdrawals made by the defendant, loans were given by him to persons, some of whom are his close relations, a son and a nephew for carrying on businesses of a similar nature and one of these businesses was located in the town of Suri itself where the partnership business in suit was carried on. Now this objection in this latter form was not put forward at any of the earlier stage of the suit, and it is clear from the order of this Court passed on the 8th August 1921 on the application made by the plaintiffs for further directions that it was in the contemplation of the Court that "there may be some controversy as to whether a particular business has or has not been carried on with money which would have belonged to Fazil if accounts had been taken on the 3rd August 1915". Upon the finding of the learned Judge that the withdrawals made by the defendant were well within the amount of profits which accrued to the defendant's share—a finding which we endorse—no question can rise as to the monies lent as aforesaid belonging to Fazil's share, assuming that Fazil was alive at the dates of these loans. The controversy contemplated by this Court's order referred to above cannot, therefore, arise. As to the other contention noted above there are no materials upon which it may be held that the other businesses were businesses of a rival or competing nature or were such as would justify accounts being taken of their profits in determining the rights and liabilities of this partnership. The defendant was not cross-examined as to these matters when he was in the witness-box. After his evidence was completed the plaintiffs applied on the 20th July 1921 for directing the Commissioner to take the accounts of the different businesses mentioned therein. It was not possible for the learned Judge to accede to the prayer at that stage as nothing had been established till then which would justify the assumption that the defendant was liable to account to the plaintiffs for the profits of those businesses. The defendant was examined before the Commissioners in October 1921 and his cross-examination after a certain stage appears to have been given up. Thereafter, towards the end of December 1921 an attempt was made by the plaintiffs to get the defendant into the witness-box again in order to cross-examine him further, but it failed. Judging from the various orders that were passed in respect of this matter, it cannot be said that the plaintiffs were entitled to have a further opportunity of cross-examining the defendant. In our opinion, there are no materials on the record upon which we can reasonably hold that the profits of those other businesses should be taken into account in determining the liabilities under the partnership.

The mere facts that there were similar businesses in which the defendant was interested is not enough to justify the profits of those businesses being brought into the accounting. Unless expressly restricted by agreement, a partner may carry on another business privately, so long as it does not compete with and is not connected with the business of the firm and so long as he does not represent it to be the business of the firm. He is not bound to account for the profits of a non-competing business, even though he may be enabled to push the private trade better than would otherwise be the case, by reason of his connection with the firm.

The next objection relates to certain items in the accounts which are referred to in objections Nos. 5, 6, 9, 12, 17, 20 and 21 as set out in the Report of the Commissioner dated the 9th July 1919. The plaintiff's objection which is common to all these items is that these items have been entered in the accounts as being monies taken by the defendant or his officer Abdul Rauf to Calcutta for the purchase of goods but no vouchers or details are forthcoming as to the goods purchased out of these monies. The explanation offered by the defendants as to these items generally is that both the partners had implicit confidence in each other and that though some notes of such purchases were kept they are not exhaustive. This explanation has been accepted by the learned Judge; and in view of the fact that during the period under account Fazil also took from time to time about Rs. 48,000 to Calcutta for purchasing goods for the shop and in no case detailed or full accounts of the purchases made by him are to be found in the books, the explanation, in our opinion, has been rightly accepted. As to the last of the aforesaid items the further objection of the plaintiffs is directed to the amount of Rs. 750 which, according to the Commissioner, would be due to the credit of the plaintiffs as the result of a double entry incorrectly made, but which has been disallowed by the learned Judge. The learned Judge has gone very fully into the matter, and the respondent has satisfied us that the learned Judge is right in his conclusion that having regard to the manner in which the accounts used to be kept the fact of a double entry, if any, does not matter, for Fazil was well enough at the time to know and see what money was actually in the shop at the time.

The last objection of the defendants is directed against the order passed by the learned Judge as regards the costs. The order of the learned Judge proceeds on the basis that the plaintiffs need not have instituted the suit, that the objections preferred by them were altogether frivolous and that they protracted the proceedings before the Commissioners and unnecessarily delayed matters challenging every explanation and statement of the defendant and putting him to strict proof thereof and thereby causing him extreme inconvenience, harassment and pecuniary loss. We have considered the matter very carefully and we share in the view taken by the learned Judge of the plaintiffs' conduct in connection with the suit. We think if the plaintiffs had exhibited a little more of the spirit of tolerance, a good deal of the proceedings could easily have been avoided. We do not agree with the appellant's contention that a suit was absolutely necessary merely because there was no adjustment of accounts before the death of Fazil. Those responsible for the institution of the suit could very well have inspected the accounts, of which the defendant does not appear to have made any secret at any time, and if they had done so, this litigation perhaps would not have been necessary. The conduct of the respondent in depositing in 1916 an amount of Rs. 8,200 for the benefit of the minor plaintiffs is certainly praiseworthy, and we are not satisfied that there was at any time a refusal or failure on his part to disclose the accounts, such accounts as he had of the business, for the inspection of the plaintiffs.

The grounds urged in support of this appeal all fail, and the appeal, therefore, must be dismissed with costs.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, cl. 13—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 102—Suit for rent and cesses, nature of—Appeal, second, whether lies.

Where cesses have been paid as part of the rent, a suit to recover them does not fall within cl. 13 of Sch. II to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and the suit is consequently of the nature of a small cause. Where the value of such a suit is less than Rs. 500, a second appeal would not be competent.

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chittoor, in A. S. No. 135 of 1921 (A. S. No. 534 of 1920 on the file of the District Court, Chittoor, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Chittoor, in O. S. No. 79 of 1920)

Mr. T. K. Srinivasathathachari, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. Rajah Iyer and V. Ramaswami Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies as the suit is of a small cause nature of a value less than Rs 500. It is not disputed that this second appeal deals only with a matter of a small cause nature, namely, a claim for jodi and road-cess which has been held by this Court to be similar to a claim for rent, but it is contended that in the Original Court, the plaintiff included with his claim for rent a claim for a cess called Savari Nasar which is of the nature of the cesses mentioned in cl. 13 of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act IX of 1887. It does not appear from the plaint that any special claim was made for Savari Nasar but the claim was made for jodi, russums, etc., as mentioned in the adambadika account and this coupled with the evidence of P. W. No. 1 would show that the claim was for rent including the ressums mentioned. It has been held in Mullapudi Balakrishnayya v. Rathnavellu Chetti (1) which was approved in Harischandra Deo v. Narayana (2) that where cesses have been paid as part of the rent a suit to recover them does not fall within cl. 13 of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. Applying that decision to this case it would appear that this suit was one for rent which rent also included certain cesses. This would be a suit of a small cause nature and not of the character mentioned in cl. 13. The objection must be upheld and the appeal dismissed with costs.

A raiyat at fixed rate of rent is competent to grant a permanent lease of the land.

Amar Chand Roy v. Prasanna Dasi, 61 Ind. Cas. 529; 25 C. W. N. 9, referred to.

A lessee from a raiyat in respect of homestead land, if he holds other lands as a settled raiyat in the village, would hold the homestead land as a raiyat and would be protected from ejectment.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court at Howrah, dated the 21st of March 1923, reversing that of the Munsif, First Court at Uluberia, dated the 20th of August 1921.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy, (with him Babu Kanaidhone Dutt), for the Appellant.

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitter (with him Babus Sisir Kumar Ghosal and Sadhan Chandra Roy Chowdhury), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which this appeal has arisen the plaintiff sued to eject the defendant on the ground that he was an under-raiyat and that he had served upon him notice to quit.

The First Court decreed the suit.

The defence of the defendant was that he was not an under-raiyat but a raiyat with a right of occupancy, the plaintiff being a tenure-holder. He also appears to have contended in his written statement that the holding in question was not an agricultural holding. The Trial Court decreed the plaintiff's suit holding that the plaintiff was an occupancy raiyat and the defendant an under-raiyat. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that the land in question was governed not by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act but by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and that the kabuliyat on which the defendant relied granted a permanent right. He further held that even if the land was not governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act but by those of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the de-fendant was raiyat and so was not liable to be evicted. He held that if the case was governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act the plaintiff on his own showing was a raiyat at a fixed rate of rent and, therefore, he was competent to grant a permanent lease of the land in question in view of the decision in the case reported as Amar Chand Roy v. Prasanna Dasi (1).

On appeal the learned Advocate has contended that having regard to the defendant's own plea his case was that he was an occupancy raiyat and, therefore, he could not be allowed on appeal to make out a case that this case was one governed by the Transfer of Property Act. With regard to this contention, I think, it is clear from the written statement of the defendant and also from the judgment of the Trial Court that it was a part of the defendant's case that he did not hold the land in question as agricultural land. This, I think, is clear from para. 5 of the written statement and also from the discussion of the Trial Court in its judgment. I do not, therefore, think that the case that the suit was governed by the Transfer of Property Act was made for the first time in appeal.

The next point taken by the learned Advocate is that the learned Judge is wrong in holding that if the Bengal Tenancy Act applied, the defendant was protected from ejectment.

On the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court I think this contention is not tenable. The lower Appellate Court has found that if the case is not governed by the Transfer of Property Act, then the defendant has the status of a raiyat because he holds other lands in the village as a settled raiyat and in view of the decision in the case of Krishna Kanta Ghose v. Jadu Kasya (2). I am of opinion that although with regard to the homestead land the lessor was a raiyat, the lessee, if he held other lands as a settled raiyat in the village would hold this homestead land as a raiyat and would, therefore, be protected from ejectment.

There is a third point too on which the plaintiff's case fails. The lower Appellate Court has found that the plaintiff on his own showing is a raiyat at a fixed rate of rent and, therefore, he was competent to

The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

An Indian Christian left a Will in the following terms:—"I hereby give away to my second wife all the moveable and immoveable properties I possess. After me she should enjoy the said properties and she should at her death divide and give the same to the children of my deceased wife's daughter."

Held, that under the Will the widow of the testator got an absolute estate in the properties of the testator and not merely a life-estate coupled with a power of appointment. [p. 498, col. 2; p. 499, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastriar, dated the 23rd April 1924, made in the exercise of Original Testamentary Jurisdiction of the High Court, in O. P. No. 179 of 1922, in the matter of the last Will and testament of Mrs. Annie Shungu Pillai deceased.

Mr. N. K. Mohana Rangam Pillai, for the Appellant.

The Administrator-General, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Coutts-Trotter, C. J.—In this case a man called Shangu Pillai, who was an Indian Christian, left a Will, dated the 7th November 1903, which has been the subject of dispute as to its true construction. The material words are "I hereby give away to my second wife Annie Shangu Pillai all the moveable and immoveable properties I possess. After me she should enjoy the said properties and she should at her death divide and give (the same) to these three persons, namely, my first wife's deceased daughter Manoranjitamani Ammal's children (1) Samuel Rajarathnam (2) Alvert Karunakaran and (3) Penelope Padma according to the wishes of the aforesaid Annie Shangu Pillai". It has been argued strenuously before us and to a certain extent accepted by the learned Judge that this is not an absolute bequest to the widow but is a mere life-estate coupled with a power of appointment. I personally, whenever I can, avoid holding that the technicalities of English Chancery practice about powers and so forth are to be imputed to Hindu testators who know nothing whatever about them and, as far as possible, I adopt a construction which will steer clear of rules of this kind with which the parties are totally unfamiliar. It seems to me that a plain man interpreting the language of the Will in the ordinary way would say this was a gift to his widow with an expression of opinion that it would be desirable for her to divide the property obviously in what shares she pleased. Nobody contends that definite shares were provided for in the Will for these three people. The words "according to the wishes of the aforesaid Annie Shangu Pillai", appear to me obviously to leave in her a discretion so that, if Samuel Rajaratnam or either of the others turned out to be unsatisfactory, the widow undoubtedly on the true construction of this document would be justified in saying "you will not get a penny." Then it is said that the language which she herself used implied that she thought she was acting under a power. I suppose the idea of the power was put into her head by Chelliah or John Stuart, a clergyman of the United Free Church Mission. I do not suppose they knew much more about powers than I do. I find that although, as I say, she purported to act under what is described as a power, the language she used is quite categorical "I hereby bequeath the properties, that is, all the properties devised by Shangu Pillai and inherited by me from my late husband along with my own properties". Who reading that language, if what was in her mind was relevant and material which I very much doubt, can come to any other conclusion than that this woman believed that she had an absolute power to dispose of this property though no doubt she would in all probability have endeavoured to respect the wishes of her late husband? In my opinion this is the most satisfactory solution of the case and the one which keeps us most in the domain of realities and does not seek to apply technical rules of construction which are well enough in the case of instruments drawn by professional people who know exactly what language is apt to express the rules of construction laid down in the English cases to a Tamil document drawn by a person who knows nothing of the rules or their application.

This appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Krishnan, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice that this appeal fails. I confess that I had some doubt in the beginning as to the interpretation to be put upon the Will. But after hearing the Administrator-General for the defence, I am quite clear that it is not possible to hold on the construction of the Will of Shanga Pillai, that his wife got only a life-estate under it. The learned Judge says that the words "should enjoy and should at her death divide and give" coupled with the fact that there are no words of absolute disposition in the Will suggest to his mind that the testator did not intend that his widow should do what she liked with the properties. In the first place it seems to me that there is a misapprehension here because the opening words of the Will do amount to an absolute disposition in favour of the widow. It says: "I hereby give away to my second wife all the moveable and immovable properties I possess." The use of the word "enjoy" in the second sentence does not connote to my mind that the absolute estate given in the first sentence was cut down to a life-estate. Enjoyment of property is possible not only for a life-estate holder but also for an absolute estate-holder. In fact both enjoy the property equally and, so far as enjoyment goes, there is no difference between the two. The absolute estate-holder will no doubt have powers of alienation which the life-estate-holder will not have. Then there are the words "she should at her death divide and give to these three persons". No doubt these words require some consideration; but I think that these words cannot be used as cutting down the absolute estate, for it is left entirely to the wishes of the lady under the Will, to give as she liked. That seems to show that the matter was left entirely to her discretion and that there was no binding disposition of the property in favour of the three persons named. It is a mere matter of recommendation to the lady to do what the testator would have liked to be done with his property at the time of her death.

A case very similar to this has been cited by the Administrator-General, In re Hamilton; Trench v. Hamilton (1), and Lord Justice Kay's observations there are quite apt and applicable to this case. There are no words here to show that the testator intended that the three persons named should get an estate subject to the exercise of a power by the widow. In fact it is not a case at all of any power of appointment. It is merely a case of absolute bequest to the widow with a recommendation to her, so far as I can understand, to deal with the properties in the manner mentioned which is not binding on her. The use of the word "power" by the widow in her Will is not important. The depositive words are "I hereby bequeath the properties devised by and inherited from my late husband along with my own properties in the manner following". It is only under the second Will by the bequest in favour of the plaintiff that he can get any right to the properties, and as there is no bequest in his favour of the property now in dispute, house No. 27, Venkata Maistry Street, he cannot possibly succeed.

The appeal should, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by defendant No. 6 from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of the Second Court of Faridpur reversing a decision of the Munsif of the Third Court of Bhanga. The suit was brought by the plaintiffs for declaration of their title to and for possession of a certain plot of niskar land, plot No. 137 of the cadastral survey which was in estate No. 1187. Some question was raised in the Courts below as to whether the property in dispute was niskar or mal land of the estate but it has been found that the property is niskar and this is not questioned in second appeal. The plots originally belonged to one Raghumani Banerji. He died leaving a daughter Dakhina who had a son Purno. Purno died leaving him surviving three sons who are the plaintiffs in the present suit. Their case was that Dakhina succeeded to the property on the death of Raghumani and that on Dakhina's death the property passed to her son Purno and on his death to his sons, the present plaintiffs. Their case was that they had been in possession through their bhag tenants and that they have been dispossessed. The defendants or some of them were owners of the estate No. 1187. As we have already stated they claim the land as mal land of the estate. The case was only contested by defendant No. 6 who had purchased the land from the other defendants. Although the plaintiffs' case was that Purno had inherited after his mother, they had inherited from him, it turned out in the course of the case that Purno predeceased his mother Dakhina. The suit was dismissed by the First Court but the lower Appellate Court allowed the plaintiffs to raise what is said to be a fresh case, namely, that although Purno predeceased his mother, Dakhina, the plaintiffs inherited the property as Dakhina's heirs.

The only question that arises in this appeal is whether under the facts and circumstances stated, namely, that Purno predeceased his mother, the plaintiffs are entitled to claim the property as heirs of Raghumani. The lower Appellate Court has held that they were entitled and this is the proposition which is disputed before us. It is stated that in no case can the grandsons of a daughter inherit the property as they cannot confer spiritual benefit on the original owner Raghumani and that the power to confer spiritual benefit is the only test of inheritance. In support of this proposition we were referred, first of all, to a passage in Mayne's Hindu Law (8th Edition) page 706, s. 505 and also to a passage in Trevelyan's Hindu Law (2nd Edition) page 410 where the learned author states that the daughter's son's son is not an heir according to the Bengal School. Then we were referred to the actual test of the Dayabhaga in the translation by Colebrook, Ch. II, s. 2, verse (ii) at page 159 where it is stated as follows: "It is the daughter's son who is the giver of a funeral oblation, not his son, nor the daughter's daughter for the funeral oblation ceases with him" and in the analysis at p. IX it is stated that "in default of the widow the daughters inherit." The daughter that is barren or a sonless widow or female children, hence daughter's daughter and daughter's son's son are not heirs being incompetent to confer spiritual benefit; and in support of the proposition that inheritance depends on the power to confer spiritual benefit and on this alone we were referred to the Full Bench case of Gooroo Gobind Shaha v. Anund Lall Ghose (1). The passage relied on in the judgment of Mr. Justice Mitter is to the following effect: "Having shown by the preceding observations that the principle of spiritual benefit is the sole foundation of the theory of inheritance propounded in the Dayabhaga, we proceed to determine whether the particular claimant before us, namely, the son of a paternal uncle's daughter, is competent to confer any such benefit on the deceased proprietor. We are of opinion that he is, and we may add that this point was not even contested before us by the Pleader for the respondent." We think, therefore, that this passage clearly lays down the principle that the foundation of the theory of inheritance as propounded in the Dayabhaga proceeds on the doctrine that only those can inherit who can confer spiritual benefit on the owner whose property they claim to inherit. Similar authority is to be found in another Full Bench case of this Court in Digumber Roy Chowdhry v. Moti Lal Bundopadhya (2), the material passages in this judgment on this point being those occurring at page 567*. There is no doubt as has been pointed out by a reference to the text books and to passages in the case to which we have referred that from time to time attempts had been made to throw doubt on the proposition laid down in the passage to which we have referred in Gooroo Gobind Shaha v. Anund Lall Ghose (1), but the attempts that had been made to re-open the question have always failed on the ground that the Courts have stated that that principle must be taken as decided by the passage to which we have referred in the case which is a decision which has stood for 50 years. But it is argued on behalf of the respondents that even accepting this principle as there is no one alive who can confer spiritual benefit, the grandsons of a daughter may be entitled to inherit on the ground of their propinquity to the original owner of the property in default of the existence of persons who can confer such spiritual benefit. In support of this proposition we were referred to the case of Radharaman Chowdhuri v. Gopal Chandra Chakravarty (3). The cases to which we have referred are there considered and the argument that was propounded to the Court based on the right of persons standing in propinquity to the original owner to inherit in default of the existence of persons who can confer spiritual benefit was discussed. But in the result no decision was arrived at by the Court on the application which was merely an application to appear and contest certain probate proceedings. We do not think, therefore, that the learned Vakil who appeared for the respondents is entitled to rely on anything that occurs in Radharaman Chaudhari v. Gopal Chandra Chakravarty (3) in support of his argument for as we have already stated we do not think that any decision was come to there. In my view the passages to which we have referred in the two Full Bench cases lay down clearly that unless a person is in a position to confer spiritual benefit on the owner of the property whose property he claims, he is not and cannot be an heir of such a person and cannot, therefore, claim to inherit such property.

This being so, we think that the appeal must succeed on this ground, namely, that the respondents here who succeeded in the Courts below are not heirs of Raghumani and have, therefore, no interest in the property which they claim. They were suing in ejectment and it was for them to establish their title. This they have failed to do and the appeal accordingly succeeds and with costs in all Courts.

An auction sale like any other contract comprises an offer and acceptance. The offer is made by the Court and is advertised by the proclamation of sale. So far as the identification of the property to be offered for sale is concerned, this is the only declaration which is authorised or required. Unless, therefore, there is something to show that the Court sold something less than was advertised for sale, the sale proclamation is conclusive as to the identity of the property sold. In granting a sale certificate, it is the duty of the Court not to determine what property is to pass by the sale, but merely to record the already accomplished fact of a transaction that has taken place and to state what has been sold. The Court has no power to do more or to alter the fact of the sale which has actually taken place. Its action in granting the certificate is ministerial and not judicial. [ibid.]

In the case of a conflict between the sale proclamation and the sale certificate subsequently granted, the property sold must be determined by reference to the terms of the sale proclamation. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—In Appeals Nos. 663 and 680 to 687 of 1922, the appellant is the plaintiff in certain suits for rent against the defendants. The suits out of which these appeals arise were either wholly or partially dismissed. In Appeals Nos. 566 and 732 to 737 of 1922, the tenants are the appellants, these suits having been decreed against them.

The plaintiff sued for rent for the years 1324 to 1327 as being mokarraridars of certain shares in Taluka Gadi Mahesri. His title arose in various ways by private purchase, by lease and by mortgage from the co-sharers in the mokarrari and also by purchase in execution of two decrees. The execution cases in which these last purchases were made were No. 78 of 1913 and No. 253 of 1913; and it is with the shares purchased in these executions that the present controversy is concerned. The case for the plaintiff is that he purchased an interest in the mokarrari of the entire Taluka Gadi Mahesri. The case for the defendants is that the purchases were confined to shares in the mokarrari of Mauza Gadi Mahesri only; and as the suits relate to villages in the taluka other than Mauza Gadi Mahesri, the defendants denied that the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the plaintiff and themselves so far as the interest claimed to have been purchased in these executions extends to these villages. The learned Munsif who tried the suits disallowed the plaintiff's claim under both executions. The learned District Judge on appeal disallowed the claim under Execution Case No. 78 of 1913, but allowed it so far as Execution Case No. 253 of 1913 was concerned. Consequently there are appeals by both parties.

I shall deal first with the plaintiff's appeals. The relevant documents are the petition for execution (Ex. 19), the writ of attachment (Ex. 24), the sale proclamation (Ex. 25), the writ of delivery of possession (Ex. 18) and the sale certificate (Ex. 21). The petition for execution shows that execution was sought in respect of certain shares in Dakhinwari Khut, Khut Kalan and Uttarwari Khut in taluka Gadi Mahesri, asli mai dakhli including tolas, chaks, kitas, houses, jungles, nills, mines, etc. together with the surface and subsoil rights appertaining to the lands of the said taluka held in perpetual mokarrari, touzi No. 327. The jama sadar of the entire taluka along with that of nisf katauna is stated and also the gross annual of jama of the shares proceeded against and their respective values. The writ of attachment follows the petition for execution exactly and the sale proclamation is in similar terms. The report of the peon who delivered possession of the property purchased in execution states that he reached Mouza Dadi Mahesri and put the decree-holder auction-purchaser in possession of the mahal. The receipt for delivery of possession granted by a servant of the auction-purchaser states that the peon arrived at Mouza Gadi Mahesri and delivered possession of the perpetual mokarrari right noted in the writ of delivery of possession. From the first three of these documents, therefore, it is clear that what the decree-holder proceeded against in execution and what the Court attached and proclaimed for sale was certain shares in the three khuts of Mouza Gadi Mahesri and the report of delivery of possession is not inconsistent with these documents. The sale certificate, however, while following the earlier documents in other respects in close detail, contains the words "Mouza Gadi Mahesri" instead of taluka Gadi Mahesri;" and it is on this solitary expression that the whole defence in those suits has been based.

Now the law on the subject is clear and undisputed. As Lord Watson observed in Pattachi Chettiar v. Sangili Vira Pandaya Chinnatambiar (1) the question is "what did the Court intend to sell; and what did the purchaser understand that he bought." In Balwant Babaji Phondge v. Hirachand Gulabchand Gujar (2) there was a mortgage-decree directing that the interest of five brothers in the mortgaged property should be sold. The proclamation of sale followed the decree, but in the sale certificate, the name of one of the brothers only was mentioned. The learned Judges there pointed out that there was nothing in the Code which made a certificate of sale conclusive as to the property sold; that in granting a certificate, it is the duty of the Court not to determine what property is to pass by the sale, but merely to record the already accomplished fact of a transaction that has taken place and to state what has been sold. The Court has no power to do more or to alter the fact of the sale which has actually taken place. Its action in granting the certificate is ministerial and not judicial. It is pointed out that the sale is an offer and acceptance; that the offer is made by the Court and is advertised by the proclamation of sale; and that so far as concerns the identification of the property to be offered for sale, this is the only declaration which is authorised or required. In Raja Thakur Barmha v. Jiban Ram Marwar (3) in which there was a conflict between the sale proclamation and the certificate subsequently granted it was held by the Judicial Committee that what is sold at a judicial sale can be nothing but the property attached and that that property is conclusively described in and by the schedule to which the attachment refers. As against such description it was held that the certificate of sale had no effect. Unless, therefore, there is something to show (and it is not suggested in the present case that there is anything) that the Court sold something else than was advertised for sale, the sale proclamation is conclusive. This being the law it seems clear that if the petition for execution, the writ of attachment and the sale proclamation are clear and unambiguous, any discrepancy from the description of the property contained in these documents which occurs in the sale certificate can have no effect. Then the sale certificate itself is by no means unambiguous and it is not necessary to suppose that it was intended to refer to a different property. The term "mauza" might include the whole mahal; and from the fact that the tauzi number is given this was apparently the intention. A village which was merely a constituent of the mahal would not have a tauzi number. The learned Munsif based his decision entirely on the fact that the annual jama as stated in the various documents was much lower than what the annual jama of the whole mahal would have been and was more likely to be the jama of the single village. The learned District Judge has also accepted this argument and has further proceeded on the ground that the price paid seems to be far too low for a share in the entire taluka. Now even if the jama is mis-stated, if the document is otherwise unambiguous, this item would be disregarded as misdescription. But there are in truth no materials for the conclusion that the jama stated in these documents is the jama of Mouza Gadi Mahesri rather than of the entire taluka. The learned Munsif seems to have confused the jama with the annual income. The sale proclamation and the other documents do not pretend to state what the annual income of the share is. The learned Munsif has pointed out that the cash rental of Mouza Gadi Mahesri is about Rs. 600 and that there are more than 250 acres of kamat lands and there is also batai land. Now the produce of kamat land would not naturally be included in the term jama and there is nothing to show what the income of the batai land is. Moreover there are no materials whatsoever for estimating the jama of the entire taluka; and the ground upon which the Munsif has decided this case must, therefore, be treated as purely speculative and it is not warranted by the terms of the documents themselves.

With regard to the observations of the learned District Judge on the price, it may be that the property was purchased cheap but there may be many reasons for that. It is impossible to say on the materials before us how low the price was and this is no criterion for construing the documents. It seems to me that this is a very plain case which does not admit of doubt; the documents with the doubtful exception of the certificate of sale are all consistent with only one conclusion, namely, that what was purchased was a share in the entire taluka. But the decisions above cited show that the certificate of sale cannot override the other documents which are conclusive as to the property actually sold.

The learned Vakil for the respondents contended that the case is concluded by findings of fact. In my opinion this is not so. It is true that the learned District Judge has mentioned the execution petition and the writ of attachment and the sale proclamation in stating the argument on behalf of the plaintiff; but there is nothing to show that he considered these documents or their legal effect. I would, therefore, allow these appeals with costs.

With regard to the appeals of the defendants, the ground upon which the Munsif limited the purchase in Execution Case No. 253 of 1913 to a share in Mouza Gadi Mahesri was that the shares mentioned in the sale certificate in this case are the shares which were actually owned by the judgment-debtors in that village, whereas they had different shares in the different villages constituting the taluka. He was, therefore, of opinion, that the proceedings in execution must be limited in their operation to Mouza Gadi Mahesri alone. The learned District Judge has properly refused to give effect to this argument pointing out that, if in fact the judgment-debtors have larger shares in some of the villages than those stated in the sale proclamation, the excess will not be affected by the sale. In this case all the documents are consistent and leave no room for doubt that the shares which were proceeded against in execution and were attached and proclaimed for sale and sold were the shares of the judgment-debtors in the entire taluka. It was suggested that the learned District Judge has erred in his calculation of the price because he has understated the shares that passed by the sale. But, as I have pointed out, in dealing with the plaintiff's appeals, there are no materials for ascertaining the real value of this property; and in any case if the purchaser purchased at a low price, that is not a matter which affects the present question.

The defence in these suits appears to me to be entirely without merit and to rest on nothing better than a clerical mistake in a document of minor importance.

The result is that the plaintiff's appeals must succeed and are allowed with costs and the suits out of which these appeals arise must be decreed in full with costs throughout. The tenants' appeals are dismissed with costs.

Mullick, J.—I concur entirely. It was argued that this being a second appeal it was not competent to us to interfere with the District Judge's finding in regard to the identity of the property which was sold. The answer to this is that as the finding relates to a mixed question of fact and law it is open to revision in second appeal.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—We think that this Rule should be made absolute. The facts of the case are as follows: A decree was obtained ex parte in the Second Court of the Munsif at Khulna on behalf of certain co-sharers. The decree was executed at the instance of one of the co-sharers alone and the standing crops of the judgment-debtor were attached. The other co-sharer on coming to hear of the execution applied for being made and was made an executing decree-holder. Then apparently the other co-sharer arrived at a compromise with the judgment-debtor whereby the execution case was dismissed on certain terms. The petitioner who obtained the Rule objected to the compromise which involved the dismissal of the execution case and he, accordingly applied for a review on the ground of fraud. The review was granted which involved the rehearing of the execution case. Against the grant of the review an appeal was preferred and on appeal the order granting the review was set aside and the compromise arrived at in the execution proceedings was allowed to stand and this Rule was obtained against that order which had the effect of setting aside the review and restoring the compromise arrived at in the execution proceedings.

The Rule is supported on the ground that there is no appeal from the order granting the review. It is stated that by virtue of the provision of O. XLI, r. 7 of the C. P. C. the order rejecting the application for review is not appealable but that the order granting the application for review may be objected to on the grounds that are stated in r. 7 of O. XLVII but it is stated that inasmuch as the appeal directed against the review did not fall within any of the matters set out in r. 7 no appeal lay and we were referred to the case of Hari Charan Saha v. Baran Khan (1) which lays down that an order granting an application for review of a judgment can only be objected to on the grounds specified in r. 7 of O. XLVII. Various matters were urged before us in opposition to the Rule. First of all we were referred to a judgment to which I was a party which, it is stated, supports the view that an appeal in the circumstances does lie. We have read the judgment. I cannot see that it decides any such thing. It seems to me to have no application to the facts of the case now before us.

Then we were asked to say that the decision in Hari Charan Saha v. Baram Khan (1) to which we have referred and the other decisions to the same effect are all wrong for reasons which are stated and which it is said were not considered in these cases. We have listened to the reasons urged and we are not prepared to say that the decision in Hari Charan Saha v. Baran Khan (1) is not correct or that the other decision to which we have been referred were arrived at under a misapprehension of the law such as the learned Vakil alleges.

The result is that the Rule succeeds with costs, hearing-fee one gold mohur and the execution-case will proceed on its merits.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (3) (xi)— Receipt for payment of mortgage-debt, whether requires registration.

The extinction of a mortgage-debt must be distinguished from the extinction of the mortgage itself, and a receipt which purports to be merely a receipt in full of the mortgage-debt is admissible in evidence without registration. [p. 507, col. 1.]

The Law of Registration in the case of a receipt of mortgage-money does not enquire how the receipt operates, but merely what it purports to do. [ibid.]

A receipt granted on behalf of a mortgagee to the mortgagor was in the following terms:—"Received from S the sum of Rs. 6,000 only in full satisfaction of the amount due from him under a mortgage-deed of his share in village B executed by him in favour of the late K, who had obtained a decree for possession of the mortgaged property :

Held, that the receipt did not require registration. [p. 506, col. 2.]

Case-law referred to.

First appeal from the judgment and decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 11th February 1924.

Mr. Rajeshri Prasad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Nazir-ud-din and Hakim-ud-din, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal. The suit is one by a mortgagee to be restored to possession. The plaintiff-appellant is the junior of the two widows of Kuar Girdhari Singh, the original mortgagee. The defendant-respondent, Syed

Muhammad Taqi, is the mortgagor. The mortgage is dated 3rd January 1914. The principal mortgage money was Rs. 6,000. The rate of interest was eight annas per cent per month compoundable every six months. The period was two years, and it was stipulated that if two successive instalments of interest were not paid, the mortgagee would be entitled to possession of the mortgaged property. The mortgagee brought a suit for possession based on this clause, and his suit was decreed on 22nd November 1918. He executed his decree and obtained formal possession on 2nd July 1919. Whether he obtained actual possession is not now material. He died on 6th August 1919.

It is alleged in the plaint that the appellant was dispossessed by the defendant-respondent in December 1919. She brought the present suit on 3rd July 1922. The defence was that the mortgage deed was satisfied by a payment of Rs. 6,000 on 4th November 1919. This payment is evidenced by a receipt, Ex. A-4, and the first question for decision in this appeal is, whether that receipt ought to have been excluded from evidence, on the ground that it is not registered. The receipt is in these terms:

"Received from Sayed Muhammad Taqi Saheb, of Naubasta, the sum of Rs. 6,000 only, in full satisfaction of the amount due from him under a mortgage-deed of his share in village Birhana executed by Sayed Sahib in favour of the late Kuar Girdhari Singh Saheb who had obtained a decree for possession of the mortgaged property."

Section 17 (1) (b), of the Registration Act makes registration compulsory in the case of instruments which purport or operate to create, declare, assign or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest, whether vested or contingent, of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards, to or in immoveable property, and cl. (3) makes registration compulsory for instruments which acknowledge the receipt or payment of any consideration on account of the creation, declaration, assignment, limitation or extension of an any such right, title or interest.

The first question which came before the Court was whether a receipt for part-payment of a mortgage-deed fell within these words. It is unnecessary to discuss the earlier decisions, because it was decided by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Jiwan Ali Beg v. Basa Mal (1) that such receipts did not require registration, and this decision was given statutory force by an amendment of the Registration Act. In the present Registration Act the clause is s. 17 (2) (xi), and it is as follows:—

"Any endorsement on a mortgage-deed acknowledging the payment of the whole or any part of the mortgage-money, and any other receipt for payment of money due under a mortgage, when the receipt does not purport to extinguish the mortgage."

It will be observed that under s. 17 (1) (b), the words "purport or operate" appear, whereas in s. 17 (2) (ix), the only word is "purport." The word "operate" has been omitted. This omission is important for the decision of the question which arise in this appeal.

The Court of Trial has relied on two decisions. One of these is Neelamani Patnaik Mussadi v. Sukaduvu Behara (2). It does not appear from the report what relief was sought by the plaintiff, but he was suing on the basis of a mortgage, and in the capacity of a mortgagee. The mortgagors produced a receipt in these terms. "I have this day received payment from you of Rs. 350, on account of the principal and interest, due under the registered mortgage-bond executed by you in my favour on 26th July 1908. I have excused payment of balance of interest. Nothing remains due under the said document."

It was held that the receipt did not require registration. It was said,

"There is nothing in the document to show that the mortgage in suit was expressly extinguished by it, it is only a discharge of the mortgage-debt. We think there is a clear distinction between a discharge of a debt and the extinguishment of a mortgage interest, though one may be the result of the other. Where a receipt in terms only discharged the debt, it cannot be brought under s. 17 (b) of the Registration Act."

It is sufficient to say that I agree with that decision. But as the point does not appear to have been previously decided by this Court, I may add that I have considered all the decisions cited at Bar, and all that I was able to discover for myself. Some of the earlier cases, decided before the law assumed its present form, are in appellant's favour, but there is no subsequent case in his favour. There is clear authority for holding that the extinction of the debt must be distinguished from the extinction of the mortgage, and that a receipt which merely purports to be a receipt in full is admissible without registration. Another point is taken that this is not merely a receipt. It is also a remission of part of the money due. The sum of Rs. 6,000 was the principal money only. There was due Rs. 1,987, interest in addition, and this was remitted. There is some authority for the proposition that although a receipt may not require registration, a document remitting part of the debt will require it, in Vishnu Chotla Venkatasubbiah v. Tallapragada Lakshmipathi (3). It does not appear from the report what relief was sought, but the suit was evidently one by a mortgagee against two mortgagors. One of the mortgagors set up an agreement in which the other mortgagor was exonerated by the plaintiff on payment of a sum of Rs. 900 and a portion of the mortgage-money was remitted. This transaction was evidenced by a document, with regard to which it was said, that it was admissible as a receipt, but that if it was to be taken as evidence of the agreement, by which part of the mortgage-money was remitted, it would require registration, being a document which affects a right to immoveable property with a value of over Rs. 100. With the utmost respect to the learned Judge who decided that case, I do not think that the receipt before me requires registration. It does not purport to be anything but a receipt. It may operate in various ways, but the Law of Registration in the case of a receipt of mortgage-money, does not enquire how it operates, but merely what it purports to do. For these reasons, I think that the Court of Trial was right in admitting Ex. A-4 in evidence, although it is not registered.

Respondent's Counsel relies on nothing except Ex. A-14 itself, and the deposition of Babu Brij Narain Dayal. This gentleman is a Special Magistrate of the First Class. He has been practising in Lucknow as a Pleader for 25 years, and he is Chairman of the District Board of Lucknow. His dealings with the various parties are not altogether easy to follow. There is a recital in the mortgage-deed now in suit from which it appears that Muhammad Taqi, the mortgagor, now arrayed as defendant-respondent, borrowed the money in order to pay off a promissory-note, which had been executed jointly by himself and Brij Mohan Dayal. The witness has further stated that Muhammad Taqi has been on intimate terms with him all his life, and that it was at his request that Kuar Gir-dhari Singh lent the money to the defendant. While these were his relations with the defendant, Brij Mohan Dayal was also manager of the estate on behalf of the plaintiff. But relations had been strained between Babu Brij Mohan Dayal and the plaintiff, and ultimately he resigned the managership, apparently towards the end of 1920, after holding office for about one year. The plaintiff is the junior of the two widows, and, under the Hindu Law, she would not be entitled to the property. She claims as legatee under a Will dated 11th October 1916. That Will was accepted as proved by a Bench of this Court on 22nd April 1920. In that Will the testator had named as his executor the Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow, and, in the event of his refusal, the President of the British India Association. Both these gentlemen, however, refused to accept office, and, at the time when Ex. A-4 was written, it was believed by all parties that Probate would be granted to the plaintiff. As a matter of fact, this Court requested the Deputy Commissioner to withdraw his objections and Probate was refused to the plaintiff.

The questions of fact which have to be decided are these :—

1. Whether the alleged payment of Rs. 6,000 was made by Muhammad Taqi to Brij Mohan Dayal?

2. Whether Brij Mohan Dayal had the authority of the plaintiff to accept payment of Rs. 6,000 in full discharge of the debt, remitting the interest which was then due?

The two questions must be considered together. It is immaterial to the plaintiff-appellant's case whether no payment was made at all, but a fictitious receipt was given, or whether Muhammad Taqi did pay Rs. 6,000 to Brij Mohan Dayal, but Brij Mohan Dayal had no authority to accept payment much less to remit a large sum which was due as interest. Brij Mohan Dayal did not actually write the accounts of the estate. That was done by Parbhu Dayal, Diwan, but the account book bears the signature of Brij Mohan Dayal on every date. Brij Mohan Dayal has said that this sum of Rs. 6,000, which he received, was all spent on various items of expenditure which are contained in the account book. The reasons for the omission of this item according to Brij Mohan Dayal were two.

A. Because the Deputy Commissioner was going to be appointed executor, Brij Mohan Dayal thought that it would not be prudent to show this amount, as the Deputy Commissioner might object that he had no business to realise debts.

B. If every expenditure incurred in litigation was shown to have been made from the income of the estate there would be no surplus out of which the daughters of the deceased might claim a share.

At first sight, the first explanation seems open to the objection that at the time the payment was made all parties believed that the plaintiff would succeed in obtaining Probate of the Will, and the second explanation is open to the objection, that if all the expenditure was certainly shown, while an item of Rs. 6,000 was left out of the income the result could hardly be to increase the surplus shown in the account. But both these difficulties disappear if the true nature of Ex. 14, the account book, is understood. It is not a regular account kept from day to day like the cash book of a Bank. It was not prepared at all until the decision of the case relating to the Letters of Administration. It is essentially a cooked account. For example, funeral expenses amounting to Rs. 1,266 are shown as incurred on the 29th of September 1920, but the Raja's death took place on the 6th August 1919. These expenses must have been incurred quite a year before this entry. On the same date, there is an item of Rs. 3,305-15 for various expenses connected with the mutation and the application for Probate. Now mutation itself took place on 8th March 1920, and the application for Probate was put in on 5th November 1919, and was decided on 22nd April 1920, so these large sums are clearly post-dated. According to respondent's Counsel, what Brij Mohan Dayal was doing was this. He was incurring expenses which exceeded the income. If he had shown a true account from day to day there would have been a deficit. He wished to represent that these expenses were being made out of the income, so he did not enter them until there was sufficient income, on the income side of the account, to meet it. Actually they were met out of this sum of Rs. 6,000, which he received from Muhammad Taqi, together, of course, with the income of the estate and the funds which were found in the house of the Raja. This explanation also serves to meet the third objection that there could be no shortage of money at the time because the account itself shows a considerable sum left in cash by the Raja, considerable sums realized from the estate and no large items of expenditure up to the 4th of November. The fact is that we do not know what expenditure had been incurred up to that date. Exhibit 14 is no safe guide in the matter. Brij Mohan Dayal's ideas of keeping accounts are certainly not to be commended.

Devices of the kind described open a door to speculation. But these are not questions which have to be decided in the present appeal. The question is whether the account of the matter given by Brij Mohan Dayal can be accepted as true, and here I find myself in agreement with the Court of Trial. Brij Mohan Dayal is a man of position. He bears a good reputation. He was believed by the Court that heard him. His statement appears to be a candid statement. It contains admissions damaging to himself, such as the admission that there is still in his hands Rs. 6,000, which is not his own, and that this transaction was deliberately concealed from the Deputy Commissioner. I think his deposition is entitled to credit. And this is sufficient to decide the second question for he has stated very clearly that he had an interview with the plaintiff in which she gave him express authority to remit the interest and to accept the payment. His cross-examination was finished on the 25th January 1924 and this closed the defendant's evidence. On the following day plaintiff's Counsel said that he would examine only one witness, that is to say that he did not propose to have the plaintiff examined either in Court or on commission to repudiate the evidence of Babu Brij Mohan Dayal.

The result is that both on points of law and points of fact the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

the Respondents.JUDGMENT.

Walmsley, J.—This appeal is preferred by the plaintiff. He brought a cargo of oranges to the Madaripore Bazar where there was a quarrel between him and the ijaradar of the market about the payment of tolls. In consequence, the ijaradar informed the Police and the result was that the boat of oranges was detained at the thana for some days and, while so detained, the oranges deteriorated. The plaintiff brought the suit for compensation on account of the oranges so damaged. The learned Munsif found that the plaintiff was entitled to a sum of Rs. 143 odd and gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 68-13-6 against certain of the defendants who had not compromised the case with the plaintiff as the defendant No. 2 had done. These defendants then preferred an appeal to the District Court and the learned Judge of the Court of Appeal below held that the suit was barred by limitation. The suit was brought exactly three years after the date on which the boat was taken to the thana and the learned Subordinate Judge's view was that the appropriate Article of the Limitation Act applicable to the case was Art. 36 and not Art. 49 as held by the First Court. If the learned Judge was right in this view, then undoubtedly the suit was barred by limitation. On behalf of the plaintiff-appellant, it is urged that Art. 49 is really the Article applicable to the present case, and, in this connection, our attention has been drawn to the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Mangun Jha v. Dolhin Golab Koer (1). It appears to me that the case does not really assist us much here. In the present instance, I think, we must go by the words of the Articles and consider which of those Articles does apply to the facts of the case. Clearly, the plaintiff did not bring the suit to recover any specific moveable property. He did not claim compensation against the defendants for having wrongfully taken any moveable property because the finding is that it was the Police who took the cargo of oranges to the thana. It was not a case for compensation for injuring the oranges or for compensation for wrongfully detaining the oranges because here again the finding is that it was the Police who kept the boat at the thana. It appears to me, therefore, that the substance of the claim cannot be brought within the purview of the words of Art. 49. In my judgment, Art. 36 is the appropriate Article applicable to the case. That being so, it must be held that the suit is barred by limitation. The result, therefore, is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

When a decree of the Madras Small Cause Court is transferred to a mofussil District Munsif's Court for execution, not on its small cause side, but on its original side, against the immoveable property of the judgment-debtor, an order made by the latter Court in execution is appealable under s. 47 of the C. A District Munsif's Court in executing a decree of the Madras Small Cause Court in respect of immoveable property exercises its powers not as a Small Cause Court, but as a Court of original jurisdiction, and the rules applicable to proceedings in execution of an original decree are applicable to the execution proceedings of the small cause decree so transferred to the original side of the Court. JUDGMENT.—The Madras Court of Small Causes passed a decree in plaintiffs' favour for Rs. 1,386-10-9 and costs and Vakil's fee Rs. 60 against the assets of the deceased Angusamy, if any, in the hands of the defendants. This decree was transferred to the District Munsif's Court at Tiruvallur. The plaintiffs attached some property as the assets of Angusamy in the hands of the defendants. The defendants Nos. 1 to 8 applied to the District Munsif of Tiruvallur for releasing the property from attachment on the ground that the properties were the joint family properties of the defendants Nos. 1 to 8 and Angusamy and that they were entitled to them by right of survivorship after the death of Angusamy. The District Munsif allowed the petition, and on appeal by the decree-holders, the District Judge set aside the order of the District Munsif and upheld the attachment so far as the share of Angusamy was concerned. Against this order the present appeal is filed by defendants Nos. 1 to 9. The first contention on behalf of the appellants is that no appeal lay to the District Court against the order of the District Munsif. The argument is that the District Munsif's Court is governed by the rules framed by the High Court under the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act XV of 1882, and under the rules no appeal is provided for against an order in execution. The decree of the Madras Small Cause Court was transferred to the Tiruvallur Court to be executed not in its Small Cause side but on its regular side. Under the rules the Madras Small Cause Court has no power to execute its decrees against immoveable properties. Under s. 31 of the Act, the Madras Small Cause Court may on the application of the decree-holder send the decree for execution

(a) in the case of the execution against immoveable property situate within such local limit to the Madras City Civil Court or the High Court of Judicature at Fort William or Bombay as the case may be;

(b) in all other cases to any Civil Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such judgment-debtor, or any moveable or immoveable property of such judgment-debtor may be found.

The procedure prescribed by the C.P.C. for the execution of decrees by Courts other than those which made them shall be the procedure followed in such cases. Section 8 of the C. P. C. makes only certain sections of the C. P. C. applicable to the Courts of Small Causes established in the Towns of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay. No doubt ss. 38, 39, 40 and 41 are not among the sections applicable to the proceedings in the Madras Small Cause Court, but the question is not what is the procedure governing the execution in the Madras Small Cause Court, but what is the procedure governing executions in the District Munsif's Court to which the decree of the Small Cause Court is transferred for execution. It is conceded that the District Munsif's

Court in executing a decree of the Madras Small Cause Court exercises its powers not as a Small Cause Court, but as a Court of original jurisdiction, for, in execution of the decree immovable property could be attached. If immovable property is attached the provisions which relate to claim petitions and other provisions of O. XXI of the C. P. C. would apply to attachment and sale of immovable property. The contention for the appellants is that the small cause decree which has been transferred to the Tiruvallur Court retains its character of a small cause decree and the rules governing its execution in the Madras Small Cause Court are applicable to the proceedings in the Tiruvallur Munsif's Court. Some provisions of the C. P. C. are made applicable to the Madras Small Cause Court by the notification of 17th May 1916 and s. 42 of the Code in its amended form is one of them and it is in these terms: "The Court executing a decree sent to it shall have the same powers in executing such a decree as if it had been passed by itself.....And its order in executing such decree shall be subject to the same rules in respect of application under s. 38 of Act XV of 1882 as if the decree has been passed by itself." It does not either expressly or impliedly apply to the proceedings in the Court to which a decree of the Madras Small Cause Court has been transferred. The amended section is only applicable to the Madras Court of Small Causes. There is no substance in the contention that the High Court intended that this section should apply to the District Munsif's Court or to any other Court in the moffussil to which the decree of the Madras Small Cause Court is sent for execution. The latter portion of this rule makes it abundantly clear that it could not have been the intention of the High Court, to make it applicable to any Court other than the Madras Court of Small Causes. The latter portion of the rule makes s. 38 of the Madras Small Cause Court Act apply to execution proceedings. Under s. 38 a defeated party may apply for a new trial or may apply to alter or set aside an order passed by the Court. Applications for a fresh trial are made before the Full Bench consisting of two or more Judges which either confirms or alters the order or decree passed by a single Judge. To say that s. 38 is applicable to execution proceedings in the Munsif's Court is to make the proceedings there a farce, for, a party against whom the District Munsif passes an order could apply for a new trial within 8 days. Is the same Judge to be asked to try a matter which he has heard and disposed of or is he to be asked to alter or set aside or reverse any order passed by him if the party against whom the order is made chooses to apply within 8 days for the reversal of that order? It cannot, therefore, be reasonably contended that s. 42 is applicable to proceedings in execution of a decree of the Madras Small Cause Court transferred to a Court in moffussil. Apart from that it is difficult to contend how the High Court by framing certain rules under the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act can abrogate or nullify the C. P. C., and the rules thereunder which govern the proceedings in the Courts in the moffussil. Section 42 only applies to execution proceedings in the Madras Small Cause Court, whether the decree sought to be executed was passed by the Madras Small Cause Court or transferred to that Court from a Court in the moffussil.

It is next contended that the right of appeal can only be given by a Statute, and the rules of procedure cannot give a right of appeal when it is not given by a Statute. It is well settled that when a small cause decree of the Sub-Court or of a District Munsif's Court is transferred to the original side of the Sub-Court or of the Munsif's Court for execution against the immovable property of the judgment-debtor there is a right of appeal under s. 47 of the C. P. C., and the rules applicable to the proceedings in execution of the original decree are applicable to the execution proceedings of the small cause decree transferred to the original side of a Court. The decree of the Madras Small Cause Court having been transferred to the original jurisdiction of the District Munsif's Court, it is difficult to see how it can be said that the C. P. C. is not applicable to such proceedings. If the C. P. C. is applicable the right given under the Code is also available to the parties to the execution proceedings. The moment the C. P. C. is made applicable to the proceedings in a Court, unless some portions of it are exempted by a special rule or enactment from being applicable to the proceedings of such Court the whole Code is applicable and a party has the right of appeal which that Code gives. There is, therefore, no substance in the contention that the appeal by the decree-holders was incompetent. The District Judge had jurisdiction to hear an appeal from the decision of the District Munsif and his order is not without jurisdiction.

The next contention is that the learned District Judge was wrong in holding that the judgment-debtors were estopped from setting up the plea that they and Angusamy were members of a joint Hindu family. When the case came on for trial in the Madras Court of Small Causes, the defendant distinctly raised the following pleas amongst others:

(1) "Deceased Angusamy and defendants Nos. 1 to 8 are not members of an undivided family"

(2) Angusamy did not carry on any business for the benefit of defendants Nos. 1 to 8;

(3) defendants Nos. 1 to 8 have no concern in the plaint transaction and are not liable."

The learned Judge who heard the case gave a decree against the assets of Angusamy in the hands of the defendants. They distinctly put forward the contention that Angusamy was divided from them, and on that plea the Small Cause Court gave a decree against his assets in their hands. In the face of that plea and the judgment it is not open to the defendants now to contend that they and Angusamy were undivided in interest and that they succeeded to his property by survivorship. The District Judge was right in holding that it was not open to the defendants to raise the contention they did.

In the result the C. M. S. A. is dismissed with costs.

The connected C. M. P. is also dismissed.

Where an objection is taken by the defendant to the award submitted by the arbitrators in a suit, and on the date of hearing an application by him for time to summon his witnesses is refused, and the Court pronounces a decree in accordance with the award, the decree passed is not ex parte, where there is nothing on the record to show that the Pleader for the defendant, who applied for time, had no further instructions to appear. Dr. Naresh Chandra Sen Gupta, Babu Bimala Charan Das and Surendra Lal Mukherjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 6th February 1925, by which the learned Subordinate Judge held that the application by the petitioners under O. IX, r. 13, C. P. C., could not be maintained. The facts are that a suit for accounts and declaration of title was instituted and subsequently referred to the arbitration of three arbitrators. The arbitrators submitted their award to which the defendants took several objections. On the date of hearing the petitioners applied for time for summoning their witnesses which was refused. Thereafter the Court pronounced judgment in accordance with the award. Subsequently the petitioners filed an application under O. IX, r. 13 which has been rejected on the ground that it is not maintainable. Two objections have been taken against this order. In the first place it is argued that the order of the Court below is wrong inasmuch as the order decreeing the suit was an order passed under O. XVII, r. 2 and, therefore, an application under O. IX, r. 13 would lie. With reference to this objection it appears from an examination of the record that an application was made on behalf of the petitioners for summoning his witnesses. The learned Subordinate Judge passed the following order:—"The defendant No. 1 has filed a petition for summons to his witnesses. Heard Pleader for defendant No. 1. petition will be considered in judgment." In the judgment that was passed, the learned Judge stated as follows:—"The objections were filed by the defendant on 28th February 1924 in Suit No. 274 of 1922. Since then he has been allowed sufficient time to bring his witnesses and adduce evidence. On a perusal of his objections I find that they are very vague. At this stage the defendants filed a petition for time to bring witnesses. I reject this application on the ground that it is made to harass the opposite party. I, therefore, affirm the award in both cases." The decree that was drawn up in pursuance of the judgment mentioned the names of the several Pleaders for the defendant in whose presence it was passed. There is nothing in the record to show that the Pleader who applied for time had no further instructions to appear and so the decree was passed ex parte. A decree on the face of it inter parties cannot be treated as ex parte. The decree does not purport to be ex parte; the present application does not accordingly lie.

Besides it cannot be said that it is an order passed under O. XVII, r. 3. That rule provides that if a party is allowed time to produce his witnesses and fails to do so, the Court will proceed to decide the suit forthwith. It is argued that this rule applies only to cases where there are materials before the Court upon which to decide the suit. In this case it cannot be said that there were no materials before the Court as the award was before the Court and on it a decision could be passed. Moreover, the rule says that if the party does not appear the Court will proceed to decide the suit. It is open to question if it refers to interlocutory proceedings such as one under O. IX, r. 13. In this view we think that the order of the Court below is correct.

The second objection taken is that on the application under O. IX, r. 13 the Court passed the order that it should be considered after taking the evidence of the parties. It is contended that the successor of the Judge who passed the order was not entitled to override the order of his predecessor. It appears that the application under O. IX, r. 13 was made before Mr. Biswas. The only objection taken at that stage was that it did not disclose sufficient grounds under O. IX, r. 13. A supplementary affidavit was filed by the petitioner and the Judge accepted it as curing the defect but it is not decided by that order whether O. IX, r. 13 applies to the case at all. We, therefore, think that this successor was not precluded from going into the property of the application.

In this view the Rule is discharged with costs three gold mohurs.

Bengal Ghatwali Lands Act (V of 1859) applies only to ghatwalis within the meaning of Bengal Ghatwali Lands Regulation XXIX of 1814 and even with regard to them it does not confer the mineral rights but merely proceeds on the assumption (which may be erroneous) that they have these rights. [p. 519, col. 2.]

The distinction between a ghatwali within the meaning of Bengal Ghatwali Lands Regulation XXIX of 1814 and a ghatwali which is outside the Regulation is that in the former case there is no tenure between the zemindar and the ghatwal who holds direct from the Government, while in the latter such a tenure exists.
In the former case while the lands of the ghatwali are still deemed to be within the zemindari, the zemin- dar no longer pays the Government revenue for them and has, therefore, no claim to the underground rights; his only right connected with these lands is to receive the difference between the rent paid by the ghatwal and the amount of the Government revenue which was assessed on that part of the zemindari. If the Government does not claim the mineral rights, there is no one to whom they can belong but the ghatwal.
In the latter case, however, the zemindar still pays the Government revenue on the lands and if the ghatwal claims the minerals he must show some transaction which grants the minerals either expressly or by necessary implication. [ibid.]

The zemindar is not divested of the mineral rights by a lease of the land unless the minerals are expressly granted [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—The plaintiffs are the owners of 12 annas 7 gandas share in four taluks Jamjuri, Nagori, Chhota Ashna and Bara Ashna in Pergannah Kundahit Kareya in the Santhal Parganas. They allege that the principal defendants took the settlement of these taluks from their predecessors at an annual rental of Rs. 706 (sikka). They themselves, being the zemindars, have all the sub-soil rights in the said taluks and the defendants have no right to the sub-soil or to the minerals. In 1912 the plaintiffs brought a suit for a declaration of their title to the minerals, but this suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge and, on appeal, by the High Court on the ground that the Specific Relief Act did not extend to the Santhal Pargannas, and on the ground that as no overt act was alleged against the defendants the plaintiffs were entitled to no relief. Thereafter in June 1917, the defendants prevented the plaintiffs' agent from boring for minerals. They, therefore, claim a declaration of their right to the sub-soil and pray for a permanent injunction and damages.

The defence was that there had been a proceeding under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. regarding the right to the sub-soil of the disputed taluks which was decided against the plaintiffs and, as the present suit was not brought within three years of the decision in that case, it was barred by limitation. The defendants claimed that the mineral rights belonged to them. They alleged that Nagori and Jamjuri consisting of 60 mouzas formed ghatwali tenures belonging to the predecessors of their ancestor Mahadeo Sadhu, and that Chhota Ashna and Bara Ashna consisting of 35 mouzas formed ghatwali mouzas belonging to Ratan Singh and Gobinda Singh who, however, abandoned them whereupon they were settled with Mahadeo Sadhu by Raja

Bahadur Uz-Zaman Khan on the 15th of Baisakh 1189 at a rental of Rs. 706 (sikka) by a sanad. They claimed that under this sanad as well as under the legal incidents of Birbhum ghatwali tenures, Mahadeo Sadhu had acquired a mokarrari mourashi istemrari and transferable interest in the said tenures with full rights in the surface and the sub-soil. They further pleaded that Raja Ram Ranjan Chakraborty and Rani Padma Sundari Debi predecessors of the plaintiffs brought a Suit No. 60 of 1892 for enhancement of the rent of the disputed taluks against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the father of defendant No. 3, and that this suit was compromised in terms which admitted the said defendants to be entitled to all sorts of rights in mokarrari right in respect of the disputed mouzas.

Sixteen issues were framed and the Subordinate Judge recorded evidence on all the issues. But he decided only the twelfth issue "Was there any decision under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. of the disputed mouza and is the suit barred by limitation?" He held that the suit was barred and, therefore, dismissed it. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court which, without deciding the issue of limitation, remanded the case for a decision of the other issues. The remaining issues have now been decided in favour of the plaintiffs; except the issue on damages but, as they failed on the issue of limitation, their suit was dismissed and they have appealed.

I shall deal first with the issue of limitation. Exhibit E is a copy of the order-sheet in Civil Case No. 145 of 1909, in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Jamtara, Babu Hiralal Banerji. On the 1st of May 1909 the Sub Divisional Officer directed both parties, that is, Kumar Satya Niranjana Chakraborty and others of Hetampur and Dwarka Nath Sadhu and others of Jamjuri, to appear with their documents and evidence on the 9th to enable him to judge whether a case under s. 145, Cr. P. C., should be instituted or not. He at the same time ordered the Amin to make an enquiry. On the 9th an order was recorded that the Amin's report had been read and that the second party undertook to remove earth thrown on a small portion of adjoining lands belonging to the first party. The Amin's report showed that somebody, possibly the second party, dug out earth from a place in Mouza Tarabad belonging to first party. The second party denied that they did so if any evidence was forthcoming on this point the first party might claim damages. Put up on 20th instant. In the meantime the earth must be removed by the second party and a report to this effect submitted through the Sardar. Exhibit F is the notice issued on the 2nd of May on the second party. It is in the following terms: "Whereas coal has been found within the limits of Mouza Tarabad appertaining to taluq Chaukhunda as well as within the limits of Mouza Khairbandi appertaining to (talug) Jamjuri, it is necessary to determine the right regarding the said coal mines. You shall, therefore, appear before me with your documents and witnesses at Camp Dhasulia on the 9th May". Exhibit J is the judgment which is produced by the defendants and alleged to have been delivered in this case. It is an uncertified copy which is said to have been taken from a certified copy. It bears no date and is very brief and declares the possession of the second party. The question is whether this is a genuine document or not. The Sub-Divisional Officer Babu Hiralal Banerji was examined. He said that he could not recollect any such order as having been passed in the case and that, while he could not be sure, it struck him that he could not pass such an order. He considered that the judgment was incongruous with the order-sheet, and said that as long as he was at Jamtara, he very rarely tried regularly any case under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C., but tried and almost always succeeded in getting the parties to compromise their disputes. Exhibit D is the letter to Dwarkanath Sadhu from Kanailal Sarkar, a mukhtar, dated the 3rd of May 1909. He says that the Magistrate remarked that s. 145 could not apply and that he appointed an amin and would make final order on the 9th of May. Exhibit H is a letter from Madanmohan Das, a mukhtar of Dwarkanath Sadhu, dated the 2nd of May. He refers to the case and to his argument that a proceeding under s. 145 could not go on and says that the Magistrate ordered that the s. 145 proceeding would not proceed. He further refers to the argument on behalf of the opposite party showing that the dispute was about the jore forming the boundary of Mouza Tarabad and says that it was ordered that the s. 145 proceeding could not be maintained and that he had won the case. Then comes a letter Exs. B and C from Kanailal Sarkar, the mukhtar of Dwarkanath Sadhu, dated the 13th of May 1909 which says definitely that the s. 145 proceeding had been dismissed. He says that earth will have to be removed by the 20th of May as appears from the order-sheet itself and that he had undertaken to have this done and that his proposal was accepted. The whole tone of the letter indicates that the matter was at an end. The natural inference to be drawn from these letters is that there were no proceedings under s. 145 and that the matter was virtually at an end on the 9th of May, all that remained to be done being that the report should be submitted through the Sardar on the 20th that the earth had been removed. In the plaint of the suit of 1912 (Ex. T) the cause of action is said to have arisen in Jeth 1317, that is, May 1910, when the defendants asserted that they were entitled to the sub-soil of the taluks. If there had been an adverse order under s. 145, this must have been made the cause of action. Similarly in the written statement in that suit (Ex. 25) the defendants in para. 7 stated that the decision of the Sub-Divisional Officer in the case under s. 145 was on the 9th of May 1909. The oral evidence on the defendants' side is unconvincing. Defendants' witness No. 1 Jagabandhu Mitra, the am-mukhtar of one of the defendants is the scribe of Ex. J. He says that it was written out from a copy of an order in a case under s. 145. Defence witness No. 3, Madanmohan Das, the mukhtar, said in his examination-in-chief that he took a certified copy of the order and requested Jagabandhu to make a copy from the certified copy which was written in his presence and compared by him. This statement was made on the 17th of February 1919. After other witnesses had been examined this witness was re-called on the 24th of February when he made the additional statement that he compared Ex. J with the judgment itself. This was evidently an afterthought induced by the consideration that a copy of a copy could not be evidence and the witness, therefore, was made to say that he had compared the copy with the original. This statement must be rejected as untrue. The amin Pulinbehari Das was examined as a witness for the defendants and he said that the dispute was about the jore in village Tarabad and that he remembers that the case was dismissed. Defence witness No. 4 Rameshwar Jha is an am-mukhtar of one of the defendants. He says that the certified copy of the judgment was burnt in 1319 Assin or Kartick, that is, September 1912; but in the list of documents filed by the defendants in the suit of 1912 on the 14th of January 1913 is given a certified copy of judgment in a proceeding under s. 145. If the certified copy was burnt in 1912, it is difficult to understand how it could have been filed in 1913. The document in any case could not be a true and complete copy of a judgment because it contains no date. It appears from the notice Ex. F and from the other evidence in this part of the case that the dispute then was about the boundary of Mouza Tarabad and Mouza Khairbani. The judgment (Ex. J) begins by reciting that the petition of the first party had alleged that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace on the part of the second party in respect of the sub-soil mineral rights of taluks Nagori, Jamjuri, Chota Ashna and Bara Ashna comprising 95 mouzas. How a judgment dealing with rights of this extent could have arisen out of this petty proceeding about the disputed jore it is impossible to understand. The judgment is no judgment at all and I cannot believe that an officer in the responsible position of Magistrate of Jamtara could have disposed of a matter of this importance in a perfunctory order of this kind. The defendants relied on a petition (Ex. W-12) filed in the suit of 1912 by the plaintiffs in which they said that they had been compelled to bring this suit, otherwise their rights were likely to be barred by the Law of Limitation, and contended that this is by implication an admission that there had been an adverse order under s. 145. In my opinion no such inference can be drawn. The suggestion that the report which was to be submitted on the 20th of May gave rise to this extended proceeding dealing with the mineral rights of the four taluks which ended in the judgment Ex. J cannot be entertained in view of the written statement (Ex. 25) which not only does not refer to any such judgment but expressly states that the decision of the case was on the 9th of May. Even if there had been a judgment of this kind it could have no effect in barring the present suit because the first party to the proceedings was the present plaintiff who at that time had neither title nor possession because his father was alive and was the owner and possessor of the estate: Patel Rao Gambhir Singh v. Laxman Das Guru Raghunath Das (1) and Polai Chand Ghosal v. Samiruddin Mondal (2). I am unable to believe that Ex. J is a genuine document or that there was a proceeding or a decision under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. I, therefore, hold that the suit is not barred by limitation on this ground.

It was further contended, however, that the suit is barred by six years' limitation because the cause of action for a declaratory decree was alleged in the suit of 1912 to have arisen in 1317, that is, 1912, whereas the present suit was not brought until the 3rd of December 1917. Similarly it is argued that the limitation for an injunction is six years and that this relief is also barred. But the suit of 1912 was dismissed on the ground that there was no overt act on the part of the defendants and, therefore, no cause of action. The present suit is for an injunction on a declaration of the plaintiff's title and the overt act which was alleged took place within six months of the filing of the suit. The suit is, therefore, not barred by limitation on this ground. The appeal of the plaintiffs must, therefore, succeed unless the objections by the defendants result in the dismissal of the suit on the merits.

I shall now deal with these objections.

As already stated, the first title which the defendants set up is the title by the sanad granted by Raja Bahadur Uz-Zaman Khan (Ex. 1). This is a short document which purports to settle with Ruplal Sadhu son of Mahadeo Sadhu, as an ancient, ghatwali mokarrari taluks Jamjuri, Nagori Ashna Chota and Bara within Tappa Kundahit Kareya, the jama of the 95 mouzas being Rs. 706 (sikka) annually. It declares that the grantee and his heirs have every right to remain in possession of the said taluks and mouzas including hills and mountains, jungles and pits, cultivated and waste lands of the entire mouzas above and below (zer-oo-bala) the taluks with all rights. The document is dated the 15th of Baisakh 1189 and is in the Persian language. The signature is illegible but it bears a seal with the name of Bahadur Uz Zaman Khan. The learned Advocate for the defendants relies on this document. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs contends that the document is a forgery, both on the internal evidence and on the fact that in a long course of litigation the document was never produced when its production was to have been expected. The direct evidence relating to this document consists of the deposition of one of the pro forma defendants Chain Kumari Dasee the widow of Mahananda Sadhu. Her evidence has only to be read to be discarded as valueless. She is illiterate but professes to recognise the document. She says that it was put in a box and that when Dwarkanath Sadhu and others asked for the box containing the documents she brought it out and they said that they had got from the box the original deed of the Muhammadan Raja of Nagore. This evidence is clearly worthless. The argument against the genuineness of the document based on the internal evidence, apart from the question of the name of the seal, as to which opinions may differ, is that the word 95 is given in Urdu "Panchanabbai" while the word 706 is correctly given in Persian and it is argued that while the Persian numerals up to 10 are easy and fairly well known, the higher numerals are difficult and little known; but it is unlikely that in the Court of a Muhammadan nobleman in 1782, when the Persian language was in current use, the writer of the document would have been ignorant of the Persian word for "95". The same argument is applied to the mistakes in the spelling of the words "mckarrari" and "haq haquk" which are written with a kaf instead of quaf. This argument, however, appears to me to be unconvincing and speculative; and I am not prepared to draw any inference against the genuineness of the document from an inspection of the document itself. So far as appearance goes, it may, in my opinion, be genuine or it may not.

But what to my mind is conclusive against the genuineness of the document is that in a long course of litigation extending from 1804 to 1892 this document was never produced. The first litigation began in 1804 and was concluded by the judgment of the Sadar Dewani Adalat in 1808 (Ex. L). That was a suit relating to the tenure under which the Sadhus held these taluks and the rent which was payable for them. It was certainly a case in which the document if it had existed ought to have been produced. The learned Advocate for the defendants excuses its non-production on the ground that the defendants were then setting up a lower rate of rent than the document itself showed and consequently the document would have gone against them. This is not an argument which can be entertained. A further point that appears from this judgment is that the actual settlement which is alleged to have been made by Raja Bahadur Uz-Zaman Khan was entirely different from that which the document itself shows. What was alleged was that from the time of their ancestors they had held the taluks Nagori and Jamjuri at a rental of Rs. 147-4-0 while Chhota Ashna and Bara Ashna had been ghatwali mahals in the names of Ratn Singh and Gobind Singh who absconded in the year 1188 when the Raja gave a sanad in respect of that mahal at a mokarrari jama of Rs. 76. This is entirely inconsistent with the sanad itself.

The next litigation lasted from 1827 to 1840. That was a suit by the predecessors of the present plaintiffs for recovery of possession of the four taluks or, in the alternative, for assessing the full rental (kamil jama) at the rate of Rs. 7,001. The First Court decreed the kamil jama. The Provincial Court of Murshidabad and the Sadar Dewani Adalat, however, held that the rental was Rs. 706 as determined in the earlier judgment of the latter Court in 1808. This was also a case in which the sanad should have been produced and the learned Advocate for the defendants admitted that he could give no satisfactory explanation of its non-production.

The third litigation was in 1852 when the Mukharjees of Punchra who had purchased shares in this Tappa in 1801 sued for an enhanced rent. In that case also the rent was decreed at Rs. 706 by the principal Sadar Amin in 1854. This was also a case in which the defendants might have been expected to produce their sanad if it had been in existence. There was further litigation in 1855 and 1863 relating to the saleability of the tenure and from 1863 to 1891 there seems to have been no litigation. In 1892 Raja Ramranjan Chakrabarty sued the predecessors of the defendants for rent and claimed assessment of full rent at the rate of Rs. 7,786. This suit was compromised on terms which will be referred to later. But this was also plainly a suit in which the sanad ought to have been produced. The learned Advocate contends that it was sufficient of the defendants in this litigation as well as in the litigation of 1854 to rely on the earlier decrees of the Sadar Dewani Adalat; but the existence of these decrees does not, in my opinion, make it less likely that the sanad would have been produced if it had existed. Again in 1899 in a litigation between Mahananda Sadhu and Dwarkanath Sadhu a petition of compromise (Ex. 7) was filed in which it was expressly stated that there was no ghatwali sanad, and that according to the Record of Rights the properties were determined to be the ancestral istemrari and mokarrari mahals of the parties and that the first party admitted that the mahals were not ghatwali mahals. It is difficult to understand how these terms could have been agreed upon if there had been a ghatwali sanad in the possession of the family. Finally it is to be observed that two settlements had been made in the Santhal Perganas, one by Mr. Wood and another by Mr. Mc Pherson and in neither of these settlement proceedings had the sanad been shown. For all these reasons the conclusion seems to me to be inevitable that this document is not a document upon which any Court can act. I hold, therefore, that the defendants have failed to establish their title to the minerals of the taluks in suit by express grant.

The second title relied upon by the defendants is that the lands in suit are a Birbhum ghatwali. There are numerous references in the judgments in the earlier litigation about this property, which, have been referred to above, to its being a ghatwali. Thus in Ex. L the District Judge held that the mahals were ghatwali mahals. The Provincial Court at Murshidabad held that the lands had not been proved to be ghatwali, but the Sadar Dewani Adalat in view of the respondents' admission of the appellants' right to the possession of the lands the ghatwali taluks in dispute, on condition of payment of the actual jama ordered that the appellants should be put in possession of these lands and should perform the ghatwali duties. So in Ex. M the Provincial Court upheld the decision of the District Judge that the defendants should, on payment of the annual jama, perform the duties of ghatwali. In Ex. N the following passage occurs in the judgment of Robertson, J., which eventually prevailed "Though the disputed mouzas are not the ghatwali mahals settled by the Government under Regulation XXIX of 1814 and it appears that the Settlement of those was not made by the Government servant, it seems that before the Settlement Tappa Khondahit Kareya which includes the disputed mauzas having been sold by auction the Government servant had nothing to do with the question of the ghatwali affairs thereof. But it is evidence from the existing papers especially from the Criminal Court rubakaris and parwanas produced by the appellants that according to the rules and custom the predecessors of the respondents' father and the respondents with their own employees had been supervising the ghatwali duties and performing the Police duties and they are bound to guard the paths and thoroughfares and responsible for occurrences and liable to damages on account of stolen property like the ghatwal of the mahals settled by the Government." Stockwill, J., in his judgment, pointed out that the mahal was not a ghatwali mahal "as described in Regulation XXIX of 1814 and was not settled along with other ghatwali elakas, from the copy of the rubakari of the Judge of Zila Birbhum and the copy of the rubakari of the Collector, dated the 15th August 1834 which are received in this Court on requisition". In Ex. P it was held that these mahals being ghatwali mahals could not be sold in auction. But in a later judgment (Ex. Q) it was decided according to the decision of the High Court that the second class of ghatwalis could be sold in auction. These classes of ghatwalis were defined in that judgment as first, the ghatwali right mentioned in Regulation XXIX of 1814, the rent whereof is paid direct to Government but in spite of the same it is considered to be a part of the zemindari of Birbhum and they pay a portion of their fixed rent to the Raja of Birbhum. The second class of ghatwalis at first belonged to the first class ghatwalis, i.e., those who were in possession in the said manner in that right on condition of service but they instead of paying rent to the Officers of Government pay rent to the zemindar. The third class of ghatwalis are like chakran and chaukidari lands and they hold possession of the same on condition of service". The argument is that although the lands in suit may not be a Birbhum ghatwali within the meaning of Regulation XXIX of 1814 yet that Regulation did not alter the status of the ghatwalis. All these ghatwalis had their origin in the same circumstances and all Birbhum ghatwalis as such had a right to the mine-

als. Alternatively it is argued that if this is not shown yet, the Legislature in Act V of 1859, which was an exposition of the law as it stood, acknowledged that the ghatwalis under Regulation XXIX had the mineral rights and there is no ground for distinction between the first and the second classes. Reliance was also placed on the Record of Rights of Bara Ashna (Ex. 27) Chhota Ashna (Ex. 28) Jamjuri (Ex. 29) and Nagori (Ex. 30) where the names of the Sadhus are shown as maurashi mokarraridars in Part I which deals with proprietary rights and duties. Clause 10 of Part I states that "The proprietor shall enjoy all the rights and shall perform all the duties of a proprietor according to the customary or enacted laws locally in force, except as restricted by the Record of Rights." Section 12 of Regulation III of 1872 gives the Settlement Officer power to enquire into and decide and record the rights of zemindars and other proprietors, and also any other landed rights to which by the law and custom of the country any person may have local or equitable claim. Section 25 makes the record after a period of six months from the date of publication conclusive proof of the rights and customs therein recorded. Mr. McPherson in para. 88 of his Settlement Report expressly refers to mineral rights as being also covered by Part I, s. 10. The learned Subordinate Judge has relied upon the Record of Rights as showing the defendants to be maurashi mokarraridars and has inferred from this that they were not ghatwalis. This argument is unsound, because a person may be a maurashi mokarraridar and also a ghatwal, as for instance in the Handwe case [Keshobati Kumari v. Satya Niranjana Chakrabarty (3) and Kumar Satya Narain Singh v. Raja Satya Niranjana (4)]. But the argument for the respondents that because they are recorded in Part I as mokarraridars and cl. 10 declares that the proprietors shall enjoy all the rights of a proprietor (which by implication include mineral rights) therefore they have the mineral rights appears to me inconclusive. Both the proprietors and the mokarraridars are recorded in this part and there is no reason why the mineral rights would belong to the mokarraridars and not to the proprietors it is not suggested that they belong to both and as they are not expressly recorded as belonging to the mokarraridars, the question as between the proprietors and the mokarraridars must be decided independently of the Record of Rights. I take it then as established that these lands are ghatwalis which are not within Regulation XXIX of 1814 both because no Settlement was made with the ghatwals such as is referred to in the Regulation and because it is admitted that the rent is paid not to the Government but to the zemindar. What then is the position as regards minerals? Act V of 1859 applies only to ghatwalis within the meaning of the Regulation and even with regard to them it does not confer the mineral rights but merely proceeds on the assumption (which may be erroneous) that they have these rights. The distinction between a ghatwali within the Regulation and ghatwali which is outside the Regulation is that in the former case there is no tenure between the zemindar and the ghatwal who holds direct from the Government, while in the latter the tenure exists. In the former case, while the lands of the ghatwali are still deemed to be within the zemindari, the zemindar no longer pays the Government revenue for them and has, therefore, no claim to the underground rights his only right connected with these lands is to receive the difference between the rent paid by the ghatwal and the amount of the Government revenue which was assessed on this part of the zemindari. If the Government does not claim the mineral rights there is no one to whom they can belong but the ghatwal. But in the latter case the zemindar still pays the Government revenue on these lands and if the ghatwal claims the minerals he must show some transaction which grants him the minerals either expressly or by necessary implication. It is not suggested that in the present case there is any such transaction. The ghatwal, whatever the origin of his estate may have been, undoubtedly and admittedly holds, and for more than a century has held, of the zemindar and unless the minerals have been expressly or by necessary implication granted to him (and of this there is no evidence) they must be held to have been reserved. In short, the position of these ghatwals of the second class is indistinguishable from that of the Digwars of Jharia and what Lord Macnaghten said of the Digwars in Durga.

Prashad Singh v. Brojo Nath Bose(5) is exactly applicable to the position of the defendants in the present case: "The two mouzas are within the plaintiff's zemindari. Both the Courts below have so held. The Permanent Settlement was made with the zemindar of Jharia. No separate Settlement was made with the Digwar of Tasra, if there was a Digwar of Tasra at the date of the Permanent Settlement which seems more than doubtful. No attempt was made to prove that the mineral rights now in question were vested in the Digwar before or at the time of the Permanent Settlement if the lands were then held on Digwari tenure. Nor is there the slightest evidence tending to show or to suggest that the zemindar ever parted with his mineral rights to the Digwar. Mineral rights were vested in the ghatwals of perganah Sarhat, in the north-western part of the Birbhum zemindari, but those ghatwals paid their rent direct to the Government, and in other respects they were in a very peculiar position. They were dealt with by Regulation XXIX of 1814. They obtained the right to lease the minerals by the Act No. V of 1859. With every respect to the learned Judges of the High Court no inference can be drawn from the circumstances of their case that the Digwars in Manbhum had similar rights or powers."

The learned Subordinate Judge has laid down five tests of a Birbhum ghatwali tenure and has held that the defendants have failed by all these tests. It is certain that rents are not paid direct to Government and that the property has been partitioned on at least two occasions between members of the family, once in 1834 when Gourhari Sadhu and Ruplal Sadhu, the sons of Mahadeo Sadhu took respectively 6 annas and 10-annas shares in the taluks and again in 1899 in the compromise (Ex. 7) referred to above. I hold, therefore, that as ghatwals the defendants have no right to the minerals.

The learned Advocate for the defendants, however, strongly relied upon the third title the petition of compromise in the suit of 1892 (Ex. J-1) as an acknowledgment by the plaintiffs' predecessor that the defendants had every right and interest in the lands in suit. The learned

Subordinate Judge in his judgment has quoted the material part of this document in the original bengali and has given a translation. The words upon which the defendants rely are the words "the entire property detailed in the said schedule in all respects with all the rights and interests therein" and they contend that these words include the sub-soil rights. Now in order to understand the effect of the compromise it is necessary to read it along with the pleadings in the suit. The plaint (Ex. R) was simply a plaint in a suit for enhancement of rent. In the written statement (Ex. 10) the defendants pleaded that they were tenure-holders at a fixed and permanent rate liable to pay sikka Rs. 501 for Nagori and Jamjuri and sikka Rs. 205 Chhota Ashna and Bara Ashna and that the permanent nature of their tenure had been repeatedly admitted and acknowledged by the plaintiffs and that the plaintiffs' suit for enhancement of rent was not maintainable under s. 11 of Regulation III of 1872. This being the scope of the suit it is difficult to see how any admission with regard to sub-soil rights can be read into the document by which it was compromised. To read the document in this way is to put the plaintiffs in a worse position than they would have been in if their suit for enhancement of rent had been dismissed. No question of sub soil rights was in issue or could have been in the contemplation of the parties. The plaintiffs simply admitted that they could not enhance the rent and the construction which the learned Advocate for the defendants seeks to place upon this document cannot, in my opinion, be supported. The passage on which reliance is placed contains the words "mokarrari satwa" that is "in mokarrari right" and it seems to me that these words govern the whole clause. They lay down the ambit within which the rights are defined and the agreement comes to nothing more than this that the defendants have every possible right that a mokarraridar can have as such. The defendants read the words as admitting that they enjoy every sort of right but only as mokarraridars, that is, on condition of payment of the reserved rent; but to read the words in this way, in my opinion, begs the question as to what is meant by the mokarrari right because it implies that the mokarrari right imports the whole estate subject to the payment of a reserved rent. The argument is sought to be supported on the doctrine in Abdul Aziz Khan v. Appayasami Naicker (6) and Lloyd v. Guibert (7), namely, that "the rights of the parties to a contract are to be judged of by that law which they intended, or rather by which they may justly be presumed to have bound themselves." It is further contended that this is a case of contract and not of grant and that the cases which decide that where there is a mokarrari lease, the minerals remain in the lessor unless granted expressly or by necessary implication do not apply, as the parties must be understood to have contracted understanding that the law was that a mokarraridar had the minerals.

The first case referred to was Sriram Chakravarti v. Hari Narain Singh Deo (8) in which it was decided by the Calcutta High Court that a permanent tenure-holder would possess all under ground rights unless there was something express to the contrary. The learned Judge in deciding that case relied upon a passage in Mitra's Land Law of Bengal to the effect that "a person holding under a permanent lease in which there was no reversion to the landlord, has the right to open mines," and reliance was placed especially upon a passage in the judgment of Pratt, J., where he said: "But in this Province the grantors of such tenures consider that they have parted with all their interests in the soil and are entitled only to the quit-rent reserved." Now it is to be observed that no authority is given for this dictum while the statement in Mitra's Land Law of Bengal is expressly made as the opinion of the learned Author and not as a statement of the Common Law. When this case came before the Judicial Committee: Kumar Hari Narayan Deo Bahadur v. Sriram Chakravarti (9), the decision of the High Court was reversed, and the passage in Mitra's Land Law of Bengal was referred to but preference was given to the statement of the law in Field's Introduction to the Bengal Regulations, page 36, where he says

"The zemindar can grant leases either for a term or in perpetuity. He is entitled to rent for all land lying within the limits of his zemindari and the rights of mining, fishing and other incorporeal rights are included in his proprietorship". Their Lordships observed that: "It would seem, therefore, that Mr. Field did not regard his letting the occupancy right as presumptive evidence of his having parted with his property in the minerals" and they decided that the zemindar must be presumed to be the owner of the under-ground rights in the absence of any evidence that he had ever parted with them. Field's statement of the law was taken to be the correct statement of the Common Law on the subject.

The next case referred to was Megh Lal Pandey v. Raj Kumar Thakur (10) in which it was held by the High Court that the mokarrari lease of a mauza "mai huk hakuk" conveyed minerals which were not expressly reserved. This decision was reversed by the Judicial Committee in Girdhari Singh v. Megh Lal Pandey (11), where it was held that the expression "mai huk hakuk" in a mokarrari lease of land did not add to the true scope of the grant nor cause mineral rights to be included in it. Their Lordships observed that "On the assumption that the expression means 'with all rights' or may be properly amplified as 'with all right, title and interest', such expressions in their Lordships' opinion do not increase the actual corpus of the subject affected by the pattah. They only give expressly what might otherwise quite well be implied, namely, that that corpus being once ascertained there will be carried with it all rights appurtenant thereto, including not only possession of the subject itself, but it may be of rights of passage, water or the like which enure to the subject of the pattah and may even be deriveable from outside properties. It must be borne in mind also that the essential characteristic of a lease is that the subject is one which is occupied and enjoyed and the corpus of which does not in the nature of things and by reason of the user disappear. In order to cause the latter specially to arise, minerals must be expressly denominated, so as thus to permit of the idea of partial consumption of the subject leased. Their Lordships accordingly are of opinion that the words founded on do not add to the true scope of the grant nor cause mineral rights to be included within it". Similarly in Sashi Bushan Misra v. Jyoti Prasad Singh Deo (12), it was held that a talabi brahmottar grant at a fixed rent did not carry with it the minerals rights in the soil and that mineral will not be held to have formed part of the grant in the absence of express evidence to that effect. Finally in Raghunath Roy Marwari v. Durga Prashad Singh (13), it was held that where a zemindar grants a tenure of land within his zemindari and it does not clearly appear by the terms of the grant that the right to the minerals is included, the minerals do not pass to the grantee. The only case which was cited on behalf of the defendants as expressing what they contend to have been the Common Law on the subject was Nawab Sir Ali Quadir Syed Hossein Ally Mirza Bahadur v. Rai Jogendra Narain Roy (14) in which it was held that a patni lease which contained the words "darabust zemindari hakook" conveyed mining rights. That decision stands by itself and it relates to a patni lease which may give rise to different considerations, and moreover, whereas in the document now under consideration the words are "haq hakuk darabust mokarari" the words in the patni lease were darrabust zemindari hakook." Now while it is true that the cases above referred to are cases on the construction of deeds of grant, they lend no support to the contention that the Common Law of the country by which the parties to the present contract may be presumed to have bound themselves was that the minerals passed to the mokarraridar. If such was the Common Law, it should have been proved either by evidence or by numerous decisions which would have shown that this law was so notorious that nothing else could have been contemplated by the parties. The Judicial Committee has consistently held that this is not the law in Bengal and there is nothing in any of the cases to afford any ground for supposing that it was ever believed to be the law. On the contrary it has been held that the law has always been otherwise, namely, that the mineral rights are in the zemindar and he is not divested of them by a lease of the land unless the minerals are expressly granted. Consequently the words in the petition of compromise must be construed in their natural sense, namely, as acknowledging in the defendants all the rights that a mokarraridar as such can have and these rights do not include the right to the minerals. The third title set up by the defendants, therefore, also fails.

There remains only one small point which was urged on behalf of the defendants, that as the plaintiffs are only co-sharers to the extent of 12 annas 7 gandas while one of the defendants Chain Kumari is not only guardian of one of the Sadhus, a minor, but is herself proprietor of a small share, the plaintiffs are not entitled to an injunction. Now the plaintiffs do not claim any injunction against Chain Kumari as proprietor. She is not said by the defendants to have given to them any right to work coal. If she herself is working coal no injunction is sought against her. Injunction is sought against strangers. The defendants do not allege that they have taken any settlement from Chain Kumari and evidently they cannot do so because this would go to the root of their own alleged title. There is no substance in this objection.

The result, therefore, is that the appeal is decreed with costs. The title of the plaintiffs to the sub-soil of the taluks Jamjuri, Nagori, Chhota Ashna and Bara Ashna to the extent of their interest is declared and it is further declared that the defendants have no right to the minerals of these mouzas; and it is ordered that an injunction do issue permanently restraining the defendants from working coal or other minerals lying on or under the said taluks, and from obstructing the plaintiffs in exercising their rights to the sub-soil in the said taluks. As the learned Subordinate Judge found that no damage had been proved, there will be no decree for damages. The plaintiffs are entitled to their costs in both Courts.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—These two appeals are against the judgments and decrees of the District Judge of Murshidabad, modifying those of the Munsif of Jangipur. There were two suits for declaration of title and khats possession of two jamias. The lands originally belonged to Gagan Chandra Majhi and Uday Chandra Majhi and were mortgaged by them to one Keshab Choudhury. Keshab Choudhury died sometime in 1889 and left a widow, a grandson and two grand-daughters by his predeceased son. The widow was named Rukmini. The grandson Ashutosh died in the year 1899 leaving a widow Rajabala. The two grand-daughters of Keshab were named Subashini and Bindubashini. Rukmini, as guardian of Keshab's grandson Ashutosh, enforced the mortgage and purchased the mortgaged property in execution of the mortgage decree on the 16th June 1892. Thereafter, Rajabala brought a suit against her for possession of the properties left by her husband Ashutosh. This suit was compromised by a solenama dated the 22nd January 1902. Under that solenama it was stipulated that certain properties, including the properties in suit, would be possessed by Rukmini during her lifetime and after her death her grand-daughters Subashini and Bindubashini would get them and they being entitled to them would possess them (Satrabati and Dakhalkarini). Then in 1914 and 1915 two rent suits were brought by the landlord against Rukmini with regard to the lands in dispute. Rukmini died on the 14th January 1915 and decrees in the rent suits were passed after her death without bringing on the record the legal representatives of Rukmini. The rent-decrees were then put into execution and then the defendant purchased the properties and took possession through Court in August 1917. Bindubashini died sometime in 1920. The present suits were brought by Subashini alone for possession of the entire lands in dispute. The Munsif passed a decree in favour of Subashini with regard to 8-annas share on the ground that the rent-decrees in execution of which the defendant No. 1 had purchased the property were void and infructuous as having been passed against a dead person. After the death of Rukmini, Subashini and Bindubashini were entitled to 8-annas share each of the properties in dispute and as the heirs of Bindubashini did not bring any suit, plaintiff was only entitled to a decree for joint possession of 8-annas share of the lands in each of the suits. There were appeals by both parties against the decree of the Munsif. The District Judge held that by the terms of the solenama, the plaintiff lands went to Rukmini and after her death to her two grand-daughters for their lives and he further held that after the death of Rukmini her two grand-daughters Subashini and Bindubashini succeeded to the properties in dispute as joint tenants, and that after the death of Bindubashini, Subashini was entitled to the whole of the lands as the survivor of the two joint tenants. In that view, he passed a decree for the entire lands in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant No. 1 appeals and the ground urged on his behalf is that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that Subashini and Bindubashini took as joint tenants. It ought to have been held that they were tenants-in-common. It was further contended that the two sisters were entitled to absolute interest in the properties and not only for their lives. It is not disputed before us that Subashini is not the legal heir of Bindubashini and the decree of the learned Judge can only be supported if his decision that the two sisters took as joint tenants and not as tenants in common is correct. There is nothing in the solenama which would show that the two ladies were to take as joint tenants. As was observed by the Privy Council in the case of Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (1) "The principle of the joint tenancy appears to be unknown to Hindu Law, except in the case of co-parcenary between the members of an undivided family." The District Judge, therefore, was in error holding that the two sisters took as joint tenants. The contention on behalf of the appellant that the ladies took an absolute interest was not persisted in, but it was argued that even if they took as life tenants the share which belonged to Bindubashini would revert to the true owner, and in this case it would be Rajabala. The mere fact that Rajabala's representatives do not dispute the interpretation of the solenama could not confer any right on the plaintiff to eject the defendant from the entire land. The defendant is entitled in a suit for ejectment to plead the title of a third party and to show that the plaintiff is not entitled to the whole of the interest she claims. The plaintiff's share is only 8 annas.

It must, therefore, be held that the plaintiff is entitled to recover possession of 8 annas share only in the lands in dispute. The judgment and decree of the District Judge must, therefore, be set aside and those of the Munsif restored with costs in both appeals in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

Greaves, J.—I agree.

Crown-debt—Competition between Crown and other creditor—Moveables—Priority.

Where there is competition between the claims of the Crown and that of another creditor as regards the moveables of the debtor the Crown has priority. [p. 525, col. 1.]

First appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 31st January 1924.

Rai N. N. Goshal Bahadur, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mukund Behari Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It is conceded in this Court that under the terms entered into between the Secretary of State in Council through the nazul department and the defendant No. 2 Mr. Dixon, the nazul department cannot take possession of moveable property lying on leased land. The point urged by the learned Government Pleader was that a Crown-debt has a priority over the debts of the subject.

A certain plot of land was leased by the local nazul department to Mr. Dixon under certain condition of re-entry on non payment of the rent. No rent was paid and re-entry was made on 11th October 1922. Prior to such re-entry, so far as can be gathered from the record, defendant No. 1 Bishun Narain Bhargava attached moveable property lying on the leased land. The case for the Secretary of State is that he has a priority for his Crown-debt of Rs. 9,350 which was due from Mr. Dixon on 11th October 1922. No Crown-debt is proved, in my opinion, except with regard to a small item of Rs. 468-3-5. The nazul has obtained a decree for that amount and that is a Crown-debt in competition with the decree obtained by the defendant Bishan Narain Bhargava. As regards the rest it is not proved that any Crown-debt exists.

The learned Government Pleader argued that the lower Court has held it established that Rs. 9,350 was due as rent to the nazul department on 11th October 1922. The finding, however, is this:—"From the evidence of P. W. No. 1 supported by Ex. 5 it is clearly established that Rs. 9,350 rent was due from the defendant No. 2 when the right of re-entry was exercised by the nazul." This does not establish that after the nazul entered into possession so much money was due to it. We have no evidence as to whether any building stood at the land at the time or not, whether the nazul took possession of such building or not and what the value, if any, was of such a building. It was incumbent on the nazul to obtain a decree of Court to establish the Crown-debt which it claims, if its claim was not satisfied by taking possession of the building, if any, under the terms of the contract. I hold that except the decree for Rs. 468 odd there is no Crown debt to come in competition with the decree of Bishan Narain Bhargawa.

There can be no doubt that in competing claims against moveables the Crown has a priority. This has been well-established by rulings of various Courts:—Bank of Upper India v. Administrator-General of Bengal (1), Bell v. Municipal Commissioners for the City of Madras (2), Pichu Vadhiar v. Secretary of State for India (3) and Dost Muhammad Khan v. Mani Ram (4).

The learned Counsel for the contesting defendant No. 1 conceded that the Crown had priority, but argued that the suit for a declaration with respect to the amount decreed to the Crown was premature. I do not agree. A decree does exist and the Secretary of State has failed in the execution department to obtain a priority for it when the defendant No. 1 put his own decree into execution. Under the circumstances the plaintiff has got a right for a declaration.

In the result I grant to the plaintiff a declaration that on his taking action in execution of his decree for Rs. 468-3-5, or whatever the present amount may be, he shall have priority of execution over the decree obtained by Bishan Narain Bhargawa. This means that the Crown has a right to have its own decree satisfied first. Time of two months from to-day shall be granted to the plaintiff to take necessary action in execution of his decree and execution of the contesting defendant's decree shall stay for that period. After that period execution shall take place in accordance with the declaration granted by this Court.

As to costs I think it will be equitable if in both Courts the plaintiff is made to pay half the costs of the contesting defendant. I order accordingly. The defendant No. 2 Mr. Dixon was not served. He is, however, not interested in the appeal Appeal, second—Custom, whether question of law or fact—Finding, whether can be questioned—Wajib-ul-arz, erroneous rejection of—Entry in wajib-ul-arz, value of—Burden of proof.

A question as to the existence of a custom is one of mixed fact and law. The question whether the facts found in any given instance prove the existence of the essential attribute of a custom or usage is a question of law and in second appeal an enquiry is permitted to be made whether all the attributes of a legal custom have been established or not by the evidence which is accepted by the lower Appellate Court. [p. 526, col. 1.]

Where a lower Appellate Court in deciding whether a custom does or does not exist has rejected a wajib-ul-arz on an erroneous view of the law, it is open to the High Court to interfere with the finding of the lower Appellate Court in second appeal. [p. 526, col. 2.]

A wajib-ul-arz unsupported by other evidence may be sufficient to establish a family custom. [ibid.]

Where a wajib-ul-arz is unambiguous and records a custom in clear terms, the burden is shifted on to the party which alleges a custom contrary to the terms of the wajib-ul-arz, to prove by oral and documentary evidence either that no such custom as recorded in the wajib-ul-arz exists or that it has fallen into desuetude. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 25th April 1924, modifying that of the Munsif, Tarabgunj, dated the 6th October 1922.

Mr. H. Husain, for the Appellants.

Mr. Aditya Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute here is between sisters and brothers of a Muhammadan family. Two of the sisters claimed their share of the property of their father Tajuddin Husain. Their mother Musammam Zainab Bibi was made a party to the suit and is here a party respondent. The plaintiffs sisters succeeded in both the Subordinate Courts and the brothers have appealed. Service was not made on Musammam Zainab Bibi. She is, however, not a necessary party as the question at issue is not of her legal share in the property. I direct that her name shall be removed from the list of the respondents.

The defendants pleaded a custom in bar of the daughters' right of succession. A copy of a wajib-ul arz prepared at the time of the Settlement in 1873 was filed and evidence was led to prove the exclusion of daughters in seven cases. There was no evidence in rebuttal and there was only a denial of the custom. Both the Subordinate Courts have considered the evidence produced by the defendants insufficient to support the custom and decreed the plaintiffs' suit. The question of importance here is whether I can inquire into the evidence in second appeal because on the evidence on the record there cannot be the slightest doubt that the custom is abundantly proved.

This was the point mainly argued by the respondents' learned Counsel. The position he took up was that all the evidence was admitted by the Trial Court and that evidence was considered insufficient both by that Court and by the Appellate Court. The contention was that no point of law arose. There are cases in which it is very difficult to disentangle law from facts. In Munna Lal v. Jai Indar Bahadur Singh (1). I recorded my opinion that the question of custom was one of mixed fact and law and the point whether the facts found in any given instance proved the existence of the essential attribute of a custom or usage is a question of law and in second appeal an inquiry was permitted to be made whether all the attributes of a local custom had been established or not by evidence which is accepted by the lower Court. The learned Counsel for the respondent distinguished this opinion from the present case on the ground that here the evidence was considered insufficient so no occasion arose for this Court sitting in second appeal to inquire whether all the attributes of a local custom had been established or not. According to him interference would be possible where a custom has been held to be proved but barred where such a custom has been declared not to have been proved. There appears to be too much refinement in this argument. If this Court is entitled to inquire whether evidence produced in the lower Court established the attributes of a local custom or not then no difference should arise between cases where custom is accepted and those in which the existence of the custom is not accepted. The present case is one where the Subordinate Courts have rejected a wajib-ul arz on an erroneous view of the law. In such a case Mr. Daniels (now Mr. Justice Daniels) held that it was open to this Court to interfere in second appeal: Bodhi Ram v. Menda (2).

The contention of the appellants here is that the Subordinate Courts did not draw a proper inference from the wajib-ul-arz and that they were wrong in holding that a previous decision of this Court had distrusted that wajib-ul-arz. The point of view taken by Mr. Justice Daniels in Bodhi Ram v. Menda (2) and subsequently in another case by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balgobind v. Badri Prasad (3) was not present to the minds of the Subordinate Courts that a wajib-ul-arz unsupported by other evidence may be sufficient to establish a family custom. In the Privy Council ruling great weight was attached to only one wajib-ul-arz. The Trial Court had held a custom proved on the basis of this one wajib-ul-arz. A Bench of this Court had set aside the decision of the Trial Court. In appeal the Privy Council restored the decision of the Trial Court on the ground that this one wajib-ul arz which was unambiguous was sufficient evidence to prove the custom. The view of law accepted by their Lordships, therefore, was that when a wajib-ul-arz was unambiguous and recorded a custom in clear terms the burden shifted on the opposite party to prove by oral and documentary evidence either that no such custom existed or that it had fallen in desuetude. The learned Counsel for the respondents drew the Court's attention to the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Thakur

Anant Singh v. Thakur Durga Singh (4), that the value to be attached to a wajib ul-arz was of a fluctuating character. Those observations, however, will not apply to a wajib ul-arz like the one produced in this case which is unambiguous and about which there was no reason to believe that it contained the opinion of one or two persons and not the record of a custom. Seeing this difficulty, the respondents' learned Counsel attempted to make out that the wajib-ul-arz in this case really contained the personal opinion of Tajuddin's brother Khadim Husain. This was not the reason given by the Subordinate Courts for discarding the wajib-ul-arz as valueless. Moreover Tajuddin being a young man at the time had not signed the wajib-ul-arz. There is a subsequent deposition of his on the file Ex. A-7 in support of the custom.

Reference was made by the respondents' learned Counsel to rulings reported as Tilak Ram v. Sita Ram (5), Lalman v. Nand Lal (6) and Hamid Fatima v. Bhola (7), where it was stated that the sufficiency of evidence was a question of fact. In all those cases, however, the evidence was examined by the learned Judges of this Court and when the inference to be drawn from such evidence was on the border line it was held that the opinion of the lower Appellate Court should prevail. It has nowhere been definitely laid down that the question regarding custom was purely one of fact. If that had been the case, no inquiry as to the basis of the judgment of the Subordinate Courts would have been necessary. In the case of Lalman v. Nand Lal (6), the learned Judicial Commissioner did allow that the question whether in any given instance the evidence led to prove the existence of the attributes essential for a valid custom is adequate proof of what the law requires is a question of law which can be discussed in second appeal. I cannot agree with the contention of the respondents' learned Counsel that the question would not arise in second appeal where the question is whether in any given instance the lower Court had wrongly considered the evidence to be inadequate.

When the wajib ul arz was not relied upon by this Court in the previous decision, the inheritance in dispute was one from a female and not from a male as in the present case. That decision did not throw doubts on the value or adequacy of the wajib-ul-arz to prove a valid custom of exclusion of daughters from inheritance to the father's property.

I am of opinion that this is a case where the Court may interfere in second appeal. The evidence produced on behalf of the defendants was sufficient to prove the custom and there was an entire absence of evidence on the side of the plaintiffs.

I set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit. Musammam Zainab Bibi's name shall not be entered in the decree. As the parties are relations and the finding on the question of custom is opposed to law, I direct that the parties shall bear their own costs of all the Courts.

Rule against an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Nadia, in Money Execution Case No. 92 of 1924.

Babus Probodh Kumar Dass and Pankaj Kamar Dutt, for the Petitioner.

Babus Satindra Nath Mookerjee, Hira Lal Ganguli and Bhupendra Kumar Ghose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule issued against an order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Nadia rejecting an application by the petitioner for rateable distribution of certain assets which were held by that Court. The learned Subordinate Judge rejected the application on the ground that it was not made before the receipt of the assets by the Court. The facts appear to be these—the present petitioner obtained a decree on the 28th May 1924 on the Original Side of this Court and he applied on the 3rd June for the issue of a precept to the Court of the Subordinate Judge to attach any property which belonged to the judgment-debtor meanwhile this property was sold in execution of some other decree by the Court of the Subordinate Judge on the 26th of June 1924. The present petitioner applied for execution of his decree in the Court of the Subordinate Judge on the 16th July 1924. It will appear that some time before, the date of which the petitioner is unable to give us, he had applied to the Original Side of the High Court for the transmission of his decree for execution to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Nadia. The order of transmission was made on the 7th July 1924. The date of this application has not been given to us and, therefore, it does not appear whether or not it was made before the 26th of June the date of the sale. It is quite clear that the application to the Court to share in the rateable distribution of the assets was made after the receipt of the assets being received on the 26th of June and the application for execution being made on the 16th July.

The learned Vakil for the petitioner argues that the attachment which he applied for on the 3rd of June was sufficient to allow him to share in the rateable distribution of the assets. But a mere application for an attachment of the property would not be sufficient to entitle the petitioner to share in the rateable distribution of the assets. In order to entitle him to a share in the rateable distribution of the assets it was necessary that he should make an application in execution to the Court before the assets were actually received and an application for an attachment under s. 46 cannot be regarded as an application for execution.

A somewhat similar case is the case of Pallonji Shapurji Mistry v. Edward Vaughan Jordan (1). Though the facts of that case are in some way dissimilar, the principle to be applied is the same. In that case there had been an attachment before judgment and no further steps in execution were taken by the decree-holder. The learned Judges held that even though the attachment before judgment continued after the decree had been made it was still necessary to formally apply for execution of the decree in order to entitle the decree-holder to a rateable share in any assets which might come into the possession of the Court. Applying this principle to the present case it seems to me that a mere attachment of the property after judgment is not sufficient to entitle the decree-holder to a rateable distribution of the assets. It is necessary that he should make a formal application for execution. This admittedly was not done before the assets came into the possession of the Court. The order of the learned Subordinate Judge is, therefore, right. The Rule is discharged with costs. Hearing fee two gold mohurs. There will be one set of costs to be divided equally between the different sets of contesting opposite party.

Messrs. N. K. Bose, Probodh Kumar Das and Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Paresh Chandra Sen, for the Opposite Party.

Mr. Khundkar, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is a Rule obtained on behalf of Chandra Kumar Sen on the 23rd of April 1925, calling upon the District Magistrate and the opposite party to show cause why the order complained of should not be set aside or such other order passed in the matter as to this Court might seem fit and proper.

The order complained of was made by the learned District Judge of Chittagong on the 31st of January 1925, whereby the learned Judge directed that criminal proceedings should be instituted against Chandra Kumar Sen and Bijoy Singh Hazari, for offences under ss. 209 and 466 of the Indian Penal Code and for abetment of these offences.

This Rule deals with the case of Chandra Kumar Sen only.

I think it is necessary to mention certain dates. It appears that an application was made to the learned Subordinate Judge for filing a complaint against the petitioner Chandra Kumar Sen. That application was disposed of on the 1st of October 1923. By that time the amendment of the Cr. P. C., created by the Act of 1923 had come into force and the learned Subordinate Judge declined to make a complaint under s. 476 of the Cr. P. C. as amended.

There was an appeal to the District Judge by the complainant. That was filed on the 7th of August 1924. It was not disposed of until the 31st of January 1925 by the learned District Judge, when, as I have already stated, the appeal was allowed, and the learned Judge decided that criminal proceedings should be instituted against Chandra Kumar Sen for the offences which I have already mentioned.

The point upon which the learned Advocate, who appeared for the petitioner, relied was that the appeal to the learned Judge was out of time and the learned Judge has no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal and to make the order. This point was taken before the learned Judge apparently, for he said as follows:—"It is urged in his case" (that is, the case of Chandra Kumar Sen) "that the appeal is barred by time as the Subordinate Judge passed orders on the 1st of October 1923 that he would not proceed against respondents Nos. 2 and 3. I do not think that I am bound by any rule of limitation in a case of this kind. When an offence in connection with the administration of civil justice comes to the notice of the District Judge it is open to him to lodge a complaint in the Criminal Courts although a subordinate Civil Court may not have thought it necessary to take action." The learned Judge then proceeded to say that the case was of such gravity that he would be failing in his duty if he did not institute a complaint.

With much respect to the learned Judge I am of opinion that the provisions of the material sections do not support the conclusion at which he arrived.

Section 476 of the Cr. P. C. deals with the procedure, which is to be adopted in cases referred to in s. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b) or cl. (c), by a Court, with regard to offences which appear to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court; and s. 476A confers certain powers upon a superior Court where the subordinate Court has omitted to take action. It is desirable to refer to the terms of the section, which are as follows :

476A. "The power conferred on Civil, Revenue and Criminal Courts by s. 476, sub-s. (1), may be exercised in respect of any offence referred to therein and alleged to have been committed in or in relation to any proceeding in any such Court, by the Court to which such former Court is subordinate within the meaning of s. 195, sub-s. (3), in any case in which such former Court has neither made a complaint under s. 476 in respect of such offence nor rejected an application for the making of such complaint, and, where the superior Court makes such complaint, the provision of s. 476 shall apply accordingly."

In my judgment that section does not apply to this case, because there was an application made to the learned Subordinate Judge, and the learned Subordinate Judge rejected the application for the making of the complaint.

The next s. 476B gives certain rights of appeal not only to the person against whom a complaint has been directed but also to the person whose application for a complaint has been rejected. The words of the section are as follows :—

476B. "Any person on whose application any Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court has refused to make a complaint under s. 476 or s. 476A or against whom such a complaint has been made, may appeal to the Court to which such former Court is subordinate within the meaning of s. 195, sub-s. (3) and the superior Court may thereupon, after notice to the parties concerned, direct the withdrawal, of the complaint, or as the case may be, itself make the complaint which the subordinate Court might have made under s. 476, and if it makes such complaint the provisions of that section shall apply accordingly."

Therefore, it appears to me that the scheme of the sections is that, if the subordinate Court has neither made a complaint under s. 476 nor rejected an application for the making of a complaint, then the superior Court may take action and make a complaint. But where, as in this case, the subordinate Court has rejected the application for the making of such complaint, then the procedure, which is contemplated by the Code, is by way of an appeal to the superior Court.

This matter came before the learned District Judge by way of appeal, and in view of the above-mentioned sections, the learned

District Judge, in my judgment, should have considered whether the appeal was filed within the time specified.

The Article in the Limitation Act which applies to this matter is Art. 154, and the material section of the Act is s. 3 which provides that "subject to the provisions contained in ss. 4 to 25 (inclusive), every suit instituted, appeal preferred, and application made after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the First Schedule shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence."

Under Art. 154, the period of limitation for an appeal "under the Cr. P. C., 1898, to any Court other than a High Court," is "30 days" and the time from which the period begins to run is "the date of the sentence or order appealed from."

It is, therefore, clear that, as the order appealed from was made on the 1st of October 1923 and the appeal was not filed till the 7th of August 1924, the appeal was out of time.

This Rule, therefore, must be made absolute, and the order of the learned District Judge of the 31st January 1925, directing criminal proceedings to be instituted against Chandra Kumar Sen must be set aside.

No order need be made as regards the Appeal (No. 210 of 1925) in connection with the same matter.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 241 of 1924.
CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 202
OF 1924.

AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 209, 210—Case triable by Sessions Court—Enquiring Magistrate, duty of—Discharge, order of, when can be passed.

In cases triable by the Court of Session only one trial is contemplated and the enquiry before the Magistrate is only in the nature of a preliminary enquiry. [p. 532, col. I.]

Sections 209 and 210 of the Cr. P. C. speak only of there being or not being sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial. When the Legislature speaks of sufficient grounds for committing for trial, it should not be supposed to have spoken of sufficient grounds for conviction and, similarly, when the Legislature speaks of there not being sufficient grounds for committing for trial, it should not be supposed to have spoken of there not being sufficient grounds for conviction. [p. 532, cols. 1 & 2.]

The intention of the Legislature is to make a distinction between grounds for conviction and grounds for committing for trial. Satisfactory proof of the guilt of the accused is the ground for conviction and satisfactory evidence to go to trial must be regarded as the ground for committing for trial. [p. 532, col. 2.]

If the enquiring Magistrate on the evidence before him comes to the conclusion that the charge is groundless, then he should discharge and not commit for trial. For a charge being groundless, it is not necessary that there should be no evidence at all of the charge. That will be a case of there being no evidence of the charge at all and not a case of the charge being groundless. [ibid.]

A charge may be said to be groundless when the evidence adduced at the enquiry is such that no Tribunal, Judge or Jury would ever on that evidence convict the accused. If no reasonable man taking into consideration the evidence adduced in the case could possibly on such evidence conclude that the accused was guilty, then it must be taken that the charge is groundless, and in such a case the duty of the enquiring Magistrate is clear to discharge the accused. [ibid.]

What the enquiring Magistrate has got to try and determine is not whether the case has been made out but only whether there is a case for trial. There is always a case for trial when the evidence is of such a nature that the guilt of the accused can be held to be proved or disproved only as the result of valuing and weighing of the evidence. [p. 533, col. 2.]

Petition, under ss. 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. C., 1898, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the District Magistrate, Trichinopoly, dated the 29th January 1924, in Criminal Revision Case No. 28 of 1923, preferred against the order of the Court of the First Class Magistrate, Udayarpalayam, dated the 5th November 1923, in P. R. Case No. 1 of 1923.

Messrs. V. L. Ethiraj and K. P. Raman Menon, for the Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—I am asked in this criminal revision case to revise the order of the District Magistrate of Trichinopoly by which under the provisions, as I take it, of s. 437 of the Cr. P. C. (and not 436 as it appears in the papers) he directed, setting aside the order of discharge passed by the First Class Magistrate of Udayarpalayam that all the accused in the case be committed for trial to the Sessions Court of Trichinopoly.

The order of the First Class Magistrate of Udayarpalayam was passed as the result of the enquiry into the case which was triable by a Court of Session and under the provisions of s. 209 cl. (1) of the Cr. P. C. The learned District Magistrate has in his order set out as follows:—"I direct that under s. 436, Cr. P. C., that the accused be committed for trial for the offences for which they have been charged. Warrants will issue for the arrest of the accused and their production before the Court of Session." This order was made by him on a criminal revision petition filed on behalf of the first prosecution witness and the only persons who were made respondents to the petition were accused Nos. 1 to 13 and accused No. 18, and the prayer was that those respondents should be arrested and ordered to be committed for trial before the Sessions Judge of Trichinopoly. The other accused in the case, namely, accused Nos. 14 to 17 and 19 to 23, were not made respondents to that petition, and no notice appears also to have been ordered to or served upon them. In these circumstances, it must be fairly clear that the order of the District Magistrate to the effect that all the accused should be arrested and committed for trial to the Sessions Court without excluding accused Nos. 14 to 17 and 19 to 23 from the scope and operation of the order was due merely to a mistake but nonetheless serious so far as those accused were concerned. As those accused, namely, accused No. 14 to 17 and 19 to 23 were not respondents to the criminal revision case and were not required to be committed for trial under the petition the District Magistrate was considering and as in any case, they have had no opportunity of showing cause why an order of commitment should not be made against them also, the order of the District Magistrate so worded as to include them also is clearly wrong. The order, therefore, will be modified by substituting in the operative portion for the word "accused" the words "accused Nos. 1 to 13 and accused No. 18." The other accused, namely, Nos. 14 to 17 and 19 to 23 if already arrested under the order of the District Magistrate will be forthwith released and set at liberty. The order of commitment so far as the said accused Nos. 14 to 17 and 19 to 23 are concerned is also set aside. As regards the other accused, however, there is no such irregularity in the order of the District Magistrate and they were further parties respondents to the criminal revision case filed before him and it was after hearing them that the learned District

Magistrate has passed the order in question.

The learned Counsel here Mr. Ethiraj has contended before me that the order of the District Magistrate directing their commitment also was wrong and should be set aside. He based his contention on two grounds, firstly that the District Magistrate erred in his view of the law regarding the duty and function of the Committing Magistrate conducting the preliminary enquiry and secondly that in any case it was not on the merits a proper case in which the order of commitment should have been made.

It was thus argued before me on behalf of the petitioners that a Magistrate conducting an enquiry under Ch. XVIII of the Cr. P. C. was bound to commit the accused for trial before the Court of Session only if in his judgment the evidence before him was such that if nothing else or nothing more were proved, the accused should be convicted of the charge, or in other words that the Magistrate was entitled to discharge the accused if in his judgment the evidence produced before him was not conclusive of the guilt of the accused. The result of such a contention would undoubtedly make the enquiry before the Magistrate the first trial and the proceedings before the Sessions Court the second trial of the accused. It was said that such was, however, the intention of the Legislature because there was provision made in the Chapter not only for the examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses, but for their cross-examination and re-examination, for the accused calling any witnesses they might choose for the Court citing any witnesses of its own motion and so forth. This position was also sought to be supported by the learned Counsel for the petitioners by reference to a number of decided cases mostly of this Court.

It is clear from the Procedure Code that only one trial is contemplated and that the enquiry before the Magistrate in cases triable by a Court of Session is only in the nature of a preliminary enquiry. Sections 209 and 210 of the Cr. P. C. speak only of there being or not being sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial. When the Legislature speaks of sufficient grounds for committing for trial, it should not be supposed to have spoken of sufficient grounds for conviction and, similarly, when the Legislature speaks of there not being sufficient grounds for committing for trial, it should not be supposed to have spoken of there not being sufficient grounds for conviction.

It follows from this that the intention of the Legislature clearly is to make a distinction between grounds for conviction and grounds for committing for trial. Satisfactory proof of the guilt of the accused is the ground for conviction. What then is the ground for committing for trial satisfactory evidence to go to trial must be regarded as the ground for committing for trial. In fact, the expression in cl. 2 of s. 209 "considers the charge to be groundless" furnishes us with a clue as to the true meaning of the Legislature. If the enquiring Magistrate on the evidence before him comes to the conclusion that the charge is groundless, then it is indicated that he should discharge and not commit for trial. For a charge being groundless, it is not necessary that there should be no evidence at all of the charge. That will be a case of there being no evidence of the charge at all and not a case of the charge being groundless. For all practical purposes it may be stated that a charge may be said to be groundless when the evidence adduced at the enquiry is such that no Tribunal, Judge or Jury would ever on that evidence convict the accused. If no reasonable man taking into consideration the evidence adduced in the case could possibly on such evidence conclude that the accused was guilty, then it must be taken that the charge is groundless, and in such a case the duty of the enquiring Magistrate is clear to discharge the accused. From this, therefore, it follows that except in cases where the charge is found to be groundless, that is to say, in other words where the evidence on the record is such that no Tribunal Judge or Jury would ever convict the accused on that evidence, the enquiring Magistrate is bound to commit for trial. I do not really understand that in any of the decided cases which were referred to before me in argument a substantially different view was really taken by any learned Judge. In the case of In re Damappa Pillai (1) Justice Sadasiva Aiyar, says that "where most of the important witnesses are totally unworthy of credit according to the Magistrate and where the case itself bristles with improbabilities, the Magistrate would be right in discharging the accused." And later on in the same judgment the learned Judge refers to the Sessions trial in such cases being practically foredoomed to failure. I take it that the learned Judge was merely referring in other words to a case in which no Tribunal would convict the accused on the evidence.

Again in the case of Narasappayya v. Narasayya Shanbhogue (2), Justice Tyabji states that what the Magistrate has to see is whether the prosecution has adduced such evidence as is not on the fact of it absolutely incredible in regard to every ingredient of the evidence that is charged. This differs if at all only in form from what I have said.

The case of Karuppa Chakkili v. Palani-swami Goundan (3) does not relate to a case triable by a Court of Session and has, therefore, no bearing on the present question.

In the case of In re Ponniah Tirumali Vandaya Thevar (4), Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastriar speaks of there being a prima facie case and the discretion of the Magistrate and his power to weigh the evidence. I cannot agree that the learned Judge intended to lay down anything more than that the enquiring Magistrate may discharge if he is of the opinion that the evidence relating to the guilt of the accused is most untrustworthy. It is significant that that learned Judge while speaking of a prima facie case also adds that it is not the business of the Committing Magistrate to usurp the function of the Sessions Judge or the Jury and in that respect the learned Judge speaks as in agreement with the observations of Justice Bakewell in the case of National Bank of India, Ltd., v. Kothandarama Chetti (5).

On the one side there is of course the extreme suggestion that the Committing Magistrate is bound to commit if there should be any evidence whatsoever in support of the charge whatever the quantity or quality of such evidence may be. Equally there is the contention on the other extreme that the Committing Magistrate is not bound to commit unless a prima facie case is made out. On the authorities and on the reason of the thing, I have no hesitation in stating that both these extreme contentions are untenable. If it should be conceded that the Committing Magistrate has no right to usurp the function of the Judge or Jury, that is, the function of trying the case itself and deciding whether or not the accused is guilty, it follows that what the enquiring Magistrate has got to try and determine is not whether the case has been made out but only whether there is a case for trial. It must be held that there is always a case for trial when the evidence is of such a nature that the guilt of the accused can be held to be proved or disproved only as the result of the valuing and the weighing of the evidence. But, on the other hand, if the evidence be of such a nature that no reasonable person and no Tribunal Judge or Jury would ever on that evidence hold the accused guilty, it follows that there is no case for trial and it is then a case for the enquiring Magistrate to discharge.

Now in the case before me the enquiring Magistrate has no doubt written a long and considered judgment, but at the same time it is abundantly clear that he has really mistaken his function. If he had said that the evidence was of such a nature that no Court could possibly on that evidence regard the accused as guilty, I should not have hesitated to give effect to that opinion more especially having regard to the fact that the Magistrate saw the witnesses and had an opportunity of judging of their credibility. But what he set himself to decide was not whether there was a case for trial or in other words whether there was any reasonable ground for the charge but whether the prosecution had made out the case set up. In para. 24 of his order he states thus: "Some of the evidence on the side of the defence appears to be more probable. In the end I consider that the case against the accused has not been made out and accordingly discharge them under s. 209, cl. (1) of the Cr. P. C." It was not his province to decide whether the case had been made out by the evidence or not. All that he had to do was to find if the charge was groundless and if it was not, to commit the accused for trial. It is not merely a case in which the learned Enquiring Magistrate has failed to appreciate his proper function in the case but the whole of his judgment and order would seem to be vitiated by a belief that he was there and then to decide having regard to the credibility of the witnesses, their statements etc., whether the case laid had been made out. I cannot consider that this was a proper course for him to take.

The order of discharge, therefore, being improper it follows that the District Magistrate was justified in interfering in revision. If I should at the present stage seek to go into the merits and express my opinion on the evidence, it may operate to the prejudice of the accused. If the order of discharge was wrong as having been the result of proceeding on a wrong principle, it follows that the District Magistrate was not only competent but justified in interfering and all that I am now concerned is to see whether the order of the District Magistrate is so clearly wrong as to call for my intervention. So far as the order of commitment made by the District Magistrate related to accused Nos. 14 to 17 and 19 to 23 I have already decided that the order was wrong and should, therefore, be set aside. As regards the other accused Nos. 1 to 13 and 18, not being satisfied that the order of the District Magistrate was clearly wrong, I do not feel called upon to interfere and with regard to these accused, therefore, the petition is rejected.

The accused Nos. 1 to 13 and 18 who have been committed for trial will be released on bail on their furnishing security to the satisfaction of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Udayarpalayam each in his own bond for Rs. 500 with two sureties of Rs. 250 each.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 463, 467—“Intent to defraud,” meaning of—Signature, forgery of, as attesting witness—Valuable security, forgery of.

The expression “intent to defraud” as it occurs in s. 463, Penal Code, implies conduct coupled with intention to deceive and thereby to injure; in other words “defraud” involves two conceptions, namely, deceit and injury to the person deceived, that is, infringement of some legal right possessed by him but not necessarily deprivation of property. [p. 535, col. 2.]

Emperor v. Surendra Nath Ghosh, 7 Ind. Cas. 629; 14 C. W. N. 1076 at p. 1085; 12 C. L. J. 277; 11 Cr. L. J. 505; 38 C. 75, followed.

The signature of an attesting witness does not fix that witness with knowledge of the contents of the document or with any liability under its terms. Therefore, a forgery of the signature of the owner of a property as an attesting witness on an instrument granting a sub-lease of that property, purporting to be executed by the forger as the owner's lessee, does not fall under the definition of the offence under s. 467, Penal Code. [p. 535, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Noakhali, dated the 13th January 1925.

Babu Santosh Kumar Bose, for the Appellants.

Babu Probodh Chandra Kar, for the Complainant.

Mr. Khundkar (Deputy Legal Remembrancer), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The present appellants have been convicted on the unanimous verdict of the Jury—the appellant No. 1 Ahmed Ali under ss. 193 and 467/109, Indian Penal Code—appellant No. 2 Sayadutulla Khan under s. 193 read with s. 109 and under s. 467, Indian Penal Code, and appellant No. 3 Yusuf under s. 193 read with s. 109 and s. 467 read with s. 109. They have been sentenced under the earlier of these sections to rigorous imprisonment for three years and under the latter section to rigorous imprisonment for five years, the sentences running concurrently. I may observe that the Jury returned also an alternative verdict of guilty under s. 465/109, 465, 465/109 respectively against these appellants. The case against them was that they were concerned in the preparation of a certain borga kabuliyat which recites that the appellant Ahmed took a sub-lease from the appellant Yusuf of certain land which Yusuf, according to the recital, held under the landlord Joy Gobind Chowdhury. This document was presented for registration with the signature as an attesting witness of one Chittaranjan Chowdhury. The case for the prosecution was that none of the appellants had any title to the land and that the signature of Chittaranjan Chowdhury was a forgery.

Three main points have been urged against the charge delivered by the learned Judge to the Jury. The first is that he has wrongly explained to the Jury the law in respect to all the offences charged. In the second place, it is said that he has not sufficiently directed them as to the defence set up by the appellants; and in the third place, it is said that he has adopted a wrong method in placing long extracts from the depositions of the witnesses before the Jury.

Now as regards the second of these points, we do not consider that it is of very great importance having regard to the view which we take as to the convictions under Ch. XVIII of the Indian Penal Code. As regards the third point, I may say that the learned Judge might have adopted a better method of putting new evidence before the Jury, and he might have arranged the matter with greater skill; but at the sametime it is impossible to say that because he adopted the method which he did adopt, the Jury was in any manner misled in consequence.

The real objection to the learned Judge's charge is the first to which I have referred, namely, the mis-direction which is said to have been given to the Jury on the subject of the law applicable to the particular charges.

As regards the charge under s. 193, Indian Penal Code, it is urged that the material is insufficient to justify a finding that this document was prepared for the purpose of being used in any stage of a judicial proceeding. The purpose with which the document might have been prepared is a matter of inference and in dealing with this part of the case the learned Judge told the Jury that they would have to consider Ahmed Ali's intention in making in the kabuliyat this false statement viz, "that you are the owner in possession," and he went on to say "you will ask yourself what is the natural intention of the offender who manufactures a false document with regard to land"; and he finally leaves it to the Jury to decide what that intention was. It seems to us that the inference that the intention was that the document in question should be used in a judicial proceeding even though such a proceeding had not in fact been instituted is a reasonable one; and that the verdict arrived at by the Jury in this respect is justifiable.

It is in respect to the direction given by the learned Judge as to the offences under Ch. XVIII, Indian Penal Code, that, in our opinion, the learned Judge has fallen into error. But it is not necessary in view of our opinion as to the conviction under s. 193 and our view as to the punishment inflicted, that I should do more than very shortly advert to the learned Judge's charge in this respect. It seems to us that on the two subjects the learned Judge has gravely mis-directed the Jury. In explaining s. 467, Indian Penal Code he said: "Here the injury would be the deprivation of Chittaranjan of the right in land to which prosecution asserts he is entitled." Then again when he was discussing the meaning of the expression valuable security he says in respect to the signature of Chittaranjan that it "purports to be an acknowledgment that he accepts the kabuliyat and the proposals made therein. His signature when joined to the forged kubuliyat purports to be an acknowledgment that he has no certain legal rights." That is distinctly wrong because the signature of an attesting witness does not fix that witness with knowledge of the contents of the document or with any liability under its terms. The learned Judge has fallen into a second error in discussing s. 463 Indian Penal Code. He says "But the forging of the signature may be regarded as fraudulent, i. e., with intent to deceive since if the forged signature ever appeared before a Court it would deceive the Court and lead it to believe that the title of Ahmed or Yusuf was acknowledged by the over-landlord Chittaranjan which was not the case". That is not a correct explanation of the words as they occur in s. 463. In this respect it is only necessary to refer to the observation of Mr. Justice Mookerjee in the case of Emperor v. Surendra Nath Ghosh (1) which occurs at page 1085*. The learned Judge there says "The expression 'intent to defraud' (as it occurs in s. 463, Indian Penal Code), implies conduct coupled with intention to deceive and thereby to injure; in other words 'defraud' involves two conceptions, namely, deceit and injury to the person deceived, that is, infringement of some legal right possessed by him but not necessarily deprivation of property." Having regard to this observation it is clear that the learned Sessions Judge did not properly explain to the Jury the bearing of the word "defraud" upon the point at issue. For this reason we think that the conviction of offences under Ch. XVIII of the Indian Penal Code cannot be supported.

It has been argued, however, that the evidence does establish facts which in other respects would justify the conviction under this Chapter of the Indian Penal Code. We do not, however, think it necessary to go into this matter or to express any opinion upon it, because, as I have just now said, the conviction under s. 193, Indian Penal Code, is a good conviction and the punishment inflicted under it is in our judgment adequate. We, therefore, set aside the conviction, under s. 467/109 and confirm those under s. 193 and s. 193 read with 109.

The punishment that has been inflicted under these latter sections is three years' rigorous imprisonment. We have taken into consideration, however, the nature of the document in question. We think that it was not a very dangerous document and that we can safely reduce to two years' rigorous imprisonment which we accordingly do.

ODDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

JURY CASE No. 3 OF 1925.

August 13, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Dalal, J. C.

EMPEROR—COMPLAINANT

versus

MOHAMMAD SHAFI—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 307, 342—Trial by Jury—Disagreement between Judge and Jury—Reference to High Court—Duty of High Court—Verdict manifestly wrong or perverse, finding as to—Examination of accused, nature of.

Where in a case tried by a Jury the Sessions Judge disagreeing with the unanimous verdict of the Jury makes a reference to the High Court under s. 307 of the Cr. P. C., the question to be decided by the High Court is whether the verdict of the Jury is manifestly wrong or perverse. The High Court has not to decide what would appeal to it as true or false, but has to consider whether the view taken by the Jury was such as could not be supported on any consideration of the case whatsoever. [p. 537, col. 1.]

It makes a considerable difference to listeners like a Jury whether the statement of the accused made before the Committing Magistrate is read over by the reader of the Court, or whether the accused person is carefully examined in the presence of the Jury and his answers and demeanour noted by the Jury. In a case tried with a Jury the Judge should examine the accused person with care so that the defence of the accused and its hollowness, where it is untenable, may be fully impressed on the minds of the Jury. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.—This is a Reference made by the Fourth Additional Sessions Judge of Lucknow to this Court on his disagreeing with the unanimous verdict of the Jury. The appellant, Head Mali of the Victoria Park here, Mohammad Shafi by name, was prosecuted on three charges of forgery. He prepared the Muster Roll of the Malis serving under him and in accordance with the Muster Roll an Acquittance Roll was prepared and the Malis were paid. One Mali Ram Ratan was so paid on two occasions June and December 1923. The salary of the Mali Ram Ratan was admittedly taken by Mohammad Shafi who put his own thumb impression. The charge against him was that he forged the Acquittance Roll of the Victoria Park staff for the months of June and December 1923 in that he dishonestly and fraudulently affixed his own thumb impression against the name of Ram Ratan thereby making it to appear that the said Ram Ratan had served on the Staff of the Victoria Park as a Mali during June and December 1923 and that he had authority from Ram Ratan to acknowledge receipt of his pay for the same months whereas he knew that the said Ram Ratan had not so served during those months and, therefore, not being entitled to any pay could not have authorised him and did not authorise him to draw pay from those months on his behalf. The defence was an admission of the thumb impressions being those of Mohammad Shafi and an allegation that according to the procedure obtaining in the office of this garden any substitute may be entertained for Ram Ratan. Ram Ratan's name may be continued in the Acquittance Roll and salary may be drawn on behalf of the substitute by Mohammad Shafi.

The question is whether the unanimous verdict of the Jury is manifestly wrong or perverse. It is obvious what the Jury thought was that 20 Malis were really entertained in the garden, that a substitute did work for Ram Ratan and that what Mohammad Shafi took from the garden authorities for the two months was disbursed in paying a person or several persons working for Ram Ratan in the gardens. On these facts it would be admitted that no charge of forgery could be sustained. The Superintendent of the gardens one Mr. Johnson said that he never knew that less than 20

Mails were working under Mohammad Shafi. The accused's learned Counsel referred to a statement made by this witness before the Magistrate that whenever he paid a surprise visit he found the attendance to be correct. No evidence was produced on behalf of the prosecution to prove that less than 20 Malis worked during the months of June and December 1923. It is quite true that the accused definitely stated that he was unable to produce the substitutes, that he did not know their names nor where they lived. This statement when we consider that Ram Ratan left service in 1921 is highly suspicious. It was at the same time open to the Jury not to consider this circumstance as suspicious. It is possible that they thought that substitutes would be afraid of being dragged into this criminal prosecution and would not depose that they worked in the garden. Such an attitude of mind would be possible among menial Indians of the status of coolies and this consideration may have appealed to the Jury.

As Mr. Bahadurji who appeared on behalf of Mohammad Shafi submitted to the Court it is not for a Judge of this Court to decide what would appeal to his mind as true or false but he has to consider whether the view taken by the Jury was such as could not be supported on any consideration of the case whatsoever. It is also unfortunate that the accused was not carefully examined by the Sessions Judge himself who was satisfied with the examination before the Magistrate. It may be granted that the Magistrate examined the accused with great care but it makes a considerable difference to listeners like the Jury whether a statement is read over by the Reader of the Court or whether an accused person is carefully examined in the presence of the Jury and his answers and demeanour noted by the Jury. My opinion is that Sessions Judges of Oudh will be well-advised when so many offences are now being tried with the aid of a Jury if they examine accused persons in their own Courts with care so that the defence of the accused and its hollowness, where it is untenable may be fully impressed on the mind of the Jury. The angle of vision has to be changed with a change in the method of the trial.

There are some things in the charge to the Jury also which the Jury must have understood were not strictly correct. In one place the learned Judge says about the accused; "Although he knew English but he used to affix his thumb impression against the name of Ram Ratan in the Acquittance Roll when he was drawing Ram Ratan's pay. This may show his bad faith. If he was drawing the pay of Ram Ratan in good faith, as he admits, he could not have affixed his thumb impression to the register, but signed it with a note that he had taken it on his behalf."

This is hardly a fair statement when it is remembered that the Superintendent of the gardens definitely stated that the name of the person who actually took the salary was never recorded. The Superintendent also stated that in a case where the pay was received by a person other than the one named in the Acquittance Roll thumb impression was always received. There may be a reason for this because thumb impression, if properly taken, is more easy to identify than a signature.

Having regard to the manner of the trial and the statement of the garden Superintendent I am not prepared to say that the verdict of the Jury was manifestly wrong or perverse.

The accused shall be acquitted and his bail cancelled.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 288—Evidence not recorded for commitment, whether admissible—Evidence admitted under section, whether substantive evidence—Evidence retracted in Sessions Court—Charge to Jury—Duty of Court.

There is no special procedure laid down in Ch. XVIII of the Cr. P. C. for recording evidence, and any evidence recorded by a Magistrate before commitment, whether recorded with a view to commitment or in the ordinary course of trial, is evidence recorded in the presence of the accused under Ch. XVIII, for the purposes of s. 288, Cr. P. C. [p. 539, col. 1.]

The evidence recorded by the Committing Magistrate, if admitted under s. 288, Cr. P. C., must be treated as evidence for all purposes even as the basis of finding or verdict and on a par with any other evidence, before the Sessions Court or as a substantive evidence on which the verdict of the Jury or judgment of the Judge can be based. [p. 540, col. 2.]

Case-law reviewed.

Witnesses who retract in the Sessions Court their statements made before the Committing Magistrate are lying witnesses, as they must have spoken falsehood either before the Committing Magistrate or in the Sessions Court. In their case the Sessions Judge must tell the Jury in his charge that their evidence should be regarded with great caution. The jurors ordinarily are not men who are used to weighing evidence and it is, therefore, necessary that all help should be given to them in estimating the evidence in the light of the observations made by learned Judges in decided cases. [p. 540, col. 2; p. 541, col. 1.]

Where instead of cautioning the Jury as to placing reliance on the evidence of witnesses who have retracted their statements made before the Committing Magistrate, the Judge expresses his opinion in his charge with a certain degree of assertion in the words: "It seems clear to me that these witnesses have decided to go as far as they possibly can towards altering their evidence in such a way as shall secure the acquittal of the accused", the charge is vitiated, although the Judge also tells the Jury "it is for you to say whether you feel convinced as to the truth of the Magisterial depositions to an extent which would warrant you as prudent men in acting upon them." Criminal appeal against an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 2nd March 1925.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—The appellant Abdul Gani Bhuya has been convicted under s. 324, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment. He was tried with one Abdul Razak for offences under ss. 324, 323 and 325, Indian Penal Code. The Jury unanimously found Abdul Razak not guilty and found the appellant guilty under s. 324, Indian Penal Code.

On behalf of the appellant three points have been taken by the learned Vakil who appears for him relating to non-direction in the learned Judge's charge to the Jury. The first point is with regard to the admissibility of the depositions taken by the Magistrate. What happened in this case is that the case for the prosecution rested on the evidence of two alleged eye-witnesses to the occurrence Nawab-ud-Din and Wasiuddin and of another witness Madhu, a servant of the family, who had lodged the first information on hearing about the occurrence from one of the other witnesses. Before the Committing Magistrate they spoke of having seen the occurrence or part of it but in the Sessions Court they practically denied having seen it. Nawab-ud-Din had said before the Committing Magistrate that there was an exchange of abuse. Gani Mia (accused) then began to cut Abdul Jabbar with his sword and Kalarbap (Abdul Razak) beat Abdul Jabbar on the head. Abdul Jabbar fell down and was beaten further. In the Sessions Court he said that Abdul Gani gave a stab to Abdul Jabbar with a sword but he could not say where it landed, and Abdul Jabbar struck Abdul Gani a blow with a pointed lathi. On being questioned by the learned Judge as to whether he was right as to the statement he was making he answered "I did not see". Wasiuddin had stated before the Committing Magistrate thus: "I heard a cry and went upon the courtyard. I found Abdul Jabbar and Nawabuddin lying on the courtyard in front of Mamudjan's hut. There were many injuries on their persons. Abdul Razak had a lathi, Abdul Gani had a weapon made of iron which is called talwar". In the Sessions Court he said as follows: "I heard a shriek, not the words. I saw Nawabuddin and Jabbar lying in the yard. Razak, Gani and Karim were there. I did not clearly notice what was in their hands but Gani had something in his hand." The servant Madhu had stated before the Magistrate that he saw the accused going out of Mamudjan's hut with a sword and he saw Abdul Jabbar lying unconscious in his hut. He was asked by Mamudjan to go to the thana and to lodge ejahar there and he did according to instruction. In the Sessions Court he had said "I saw nothing in their hands. Then I went in Jabbar Mia's hut and found Jabbar lying. Nawab told me to go to thana. He told me what to say". From the depositions of these witnesses before the Committing Magistrate and in the Sessions Court, it is clear that they were deliberately attempting to retract the evidence given by them before the Committing Magistrate. The learned Sessions Judge admitted their evidence before the Committing Magistrate under s. 288, Cr. P. C., and placed it before the Jury who apparently based their verdict upon it.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the evidence before the Committing Magistrate which was received by the learned Judge under s. 288, Cr. P. C., was not admissible under that section. It is pointed out that the Magistrate originally started the case with a view to try it himself but at a later stage decided to commit it to the Sessions; the evidence in this case was, therefore, not recorded under Ch. XVIII. Section 288 as amended by the Act of 1923 stands thus: "The evidence of a witness, duly recorded in the presence of the accused under Ch. XVIII, may, in the discretion of the presiding Judge, if such witness is produced and examined be treated as evidence in the case, for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872". The words "duly recorded in the presence of the accused under Ch. XVIII" have been substituted by the Act of 1923 for the words "duly taken in the presence of the accused before the Committing Magistrate" and it is argued that the evidence in this case was not recorded by the Magistrate under Ch. XVIII and, therefore, it should not have been admitted by the learned Judge under s. 288, Cr. P. C. This contention has no substance. The amendment of the section by substituting the words "duly recorded in the presence of the accused under Ch. XVIII" for the words "duly taken in the presence of the accused before the Committing Magistrate," is intended to cover cases where evidence may be recorded by the Committing Magistrate but not for the purpose of commitment, as under s. 219, Cr. P. C. Besides, there is no special procedure laid down in Ch. XVIII for recording evidence and any evidence recorded by a Magistrate before commitment whether recorded with a view to commitment or in the ordinary course of trial is evidence recorded in the presence of the accused under Ch. XVIII.

The next ground raised by the appellant requires careful consideration. As I have already observed the conviction of the accused rests upon the evidence of three persons, who spoke of the occurrence before the Committing Magistrate but who in the Sessions Court declared that they knew nothing about it. The basis of the verdict of the Jury, therefore, in this case is the evidence of those witnesses recorded by the Committing Magistrate and admitted by the Judge under s. 288. It is argued that the conviction based solely upon evidence admitted under s. 288 is wrong and that the learned Judge should have directed the Jury that on the evidence as it stood in the trial there could be no conviction at all. It is necessary to note that there has been a substantial alternation in s. 288 by Act XVIII of 1923. The words "for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872" have been added after the words "be treated as evidence in the case". Several decisions have been placed before us in support of the appellant's contention. In the case of Queen Empress v. Amanullah (1) it has been held that a conviction should not be based solely upon evidence admitted under s. 288, Cr. P. C., unless there is sufficient corroboration by other evidence. So far as this Court is concerned this case was followed in the case of Queen Empress v. Jadub Das (2). The case in Queen-Empress v. Amanullah (1) was a case in which the High Court had to confirm the sentence of death passed on the accused and, therefore, it had to go into the evidence to find out if the sentence could be upheld. The case of Queen-Empress v. Jadub Das (2) was a reference under s. 307, Cr. P. C., and the Court had to look to the evidence to find if the verdict of the Jury could be upheld. In the case of Queen-Empress v. Nirmal Das (3) the same view has been expressed. It does not appear that the trial in that case was held with the aid of a Jury. It would seem that the appeal was from the order of the Sessions Judge who acquitted some of the accused and convicted the appellant. These cases and others bearing on the point have been considered in a very recent case decided by the Patna High Court, namely, the case of Jehal Teli v. Emperor (4). Mr. Justice Bucknill in an elaborate judgment in which almost all the cases on this point were reviewed made the following observation on the conclusion reached by him. "I think, therefore, that the principle is quite clearly settled by this line of cases that unless there is clearly present, besides the evidence given before the Magistrate, evidence which will show that the evidence given before the Magistrate should be preferred to and substituted for that given before the Sessions Judge, the evidence given before the Magistrate cannot be effectively utilized in support of a conviction." This case was decided in 1924 and after the amendment of the section by the Act of 1923. I may add that this case was a reference under s. 374 Cr. P. C. The Allahabad High Court in a case decided under the old Code had struck a somewhat dissentient note. In the case of Emperor v. Dwarka Kurmi (5). Mr. Justice Aikman quoted with approval the observation of Plowden, J., in Umar v. Empress (6), which was to the effect that once the evidence is admitted under s. 288 it is on the same footing with all other evidence in the case, that is to say, "it is to be considered by the Jury or by the assessors and the Judge, according to the nature of the trial, as part of the materials upon which the verdict or a finding is to be given.... Whether any portion or the whole of the evidence thus admitted is entitled to credit, and if so, to such a degree that a conviction may be based upon it wholly or in part, are very important questions for the Jury or assessors, or for the Judge, as the case may be, but they are in no way affected by the section." I am of opinion that the view thus expressed is correct. Section 288 at any rate as it stands now, makes the evidence recorded by the Magistrate admissible at the discretion of the Trying Judge and it further enacts that it is to be treated as evidence in the case "for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Indian evidence Act." The only case decided after this amendment is, as I have observed, the case of Jehal Teli v. Emperor (4). But there the learned Judges did not consider the effect of the addition of the words "for all purposes" to the section. They rightly decided the point strenuously pressed on their attention as to the meaning of the words "subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act," holding that such deposition can be used as evidence so long as the evidence is an evidence within the meaning of the Indian Evidence Act; or, in other words, that the evidence may be used for all purposes if it is admissible under the Indian Evidence Act. As to the important question as to how far it is possible to have a conviction upon evidence before a Magistrate when the evidence given at the trial differs from it and is exculpatory of the accused, the learned Judge has considered all the cases which were decided under the section as it stood before the amendment and has endorsed without further consideration the decision in those cases in the words which I have already quoted. That decision, therefore, is of no help to us because the significance of the addition of the words "for all purposes" was not considered in it. The section before the amendment said that "such deposition is to be treated as evidence in the case." The addition of the words "for all purposes" must be with set design and for the purpose of attaining a definite object. It seems to me that these words have been added to remove the limitation to the value of that evidence as fixed by the cases referred to above. Under the present section it must be held that the evidence recorded by the Committing Magistrate if admitted under s. 288 must be treated as evidence for all purposes even as the basis of finding or verdict and on a par with any other evidence before the Sessions Court or as a substantive evidence on which the verdict of the Jury or judgment of the Judge can be based.

The third point taken by the learned Vakil for the appellant is, that in the circumstances of this particular case the Judge should have told the Jury not to take the evidence of witnesses who have retracted their statements before the Committing Magistrate into consideration and that it is not safe to rely upon a portion of their evidence as true and reject another portion as false; and for this view reliance has been placed on the case of Emperor v. Satyendra Kumar Dutt Chowdhury (7). That case was a Jury Reference in which the learned Judges had to consider whether the verdict of the Jury could be supported on such evidence. It is dangerous to lay down as a general rule of law that in this country it is not proper to believe the evidence of a certain witness in part. Be that as it may, in my opinion the learned Judge's charge is not quite free from this blemish. The witnesses who have retracted their statements before the Committing Magistrate are no doubt lying witnesses and they must have spoken falsehood either before the Committing Magistrate or in the Sessions Court. The learned Judge ought to have told the Jury that they should be looked upon as witnesses who are not above suspicion and whose evidence should be regarded with great caution. The Jurors ordinarily are not men who are used to weighing evidence and it is, therefore, necessary that all help should be given to them in estimating the evidence in the light of the observations made by learned Judges in decided cases. Instead of doing that the learned Judge has expressed his opinion with a certain degree of assertion in these words: "It seems clear to me that these persons have decided to go as far as they possibly can towards altering their evidence in such a way as shall secure the acquittal of the two men here on trial." This is a suggestion to the Jury that the witnesses were speaking the truth when they were deposing before the Committing Magistrate but that before him they were attempting to screen the offender. Though the learned Judge has stated in his charge "it is for you to say whether you feel convinced as to the truth of the three Magisterial depositions to an extent which would warrant you as prudent men in acting upon them," I do not think that it can be said that the Jury were left with the option of accepting the evidence given before the Committing Magistrate or that given in the Court of Sessions. In this view I hold that the charge is vitiated by the defect pointed out.

It next remains to consider whether it is a fit case in which we should order a re-trial. The whole of the evidence has been placed before us and we do not think that it is so strong as to lead us to hold that a re-trial would be in the interest of public justice. We accordingly set aside the conviction of and the sentence passed upon the accused and order that he be acquitted and discharged from his bail bond.

Preliminary order not served on certain party—Order, whether binding.

The law does not require a Magistrate to record in his final order in a proceeding under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. an express finding that a breach of the peace is imminent. A finding in respect of the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace is a matter to be considered in relation to the preliminary order and where the preliminary order states that the Magistrate is satisfied on the materials before him that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists as regards the property in dispute, the final order cannot be objected to on the ground that it does not contain a finding as to the apprehension of a breach of the peace. [p. 542, col. 1.]

A party upon whom the preliminary order required by sub-s. (1) of s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. has not been served and who has not been given an opportunity to prove his possession over the subject of the dispute, cannot be subjected to the final order passed in the proceedings. [ibid.]

ORDER.—This is a Reference by the First Additional Sessions Judge of Lucknow, exercising jurisdiction at Bara Banki, for an order by this Court under s. 438 of the Cr. P. C. In proceedings under s. 145, Cr. P. C., the servants of Musammāt Ahmad-un-nisa and Zamin Ali were declared by a First Class Magistrate of Bara Banki under his order dated the 18th March 1925 to be in occupation of a house situate in village Mailaraiganj. It was also declared that they were forcibly evicted therefrom on the 18th November 1924 and the consequential order was that they be restored to the possession of the house. The order further directed that Musammāt Muqim-un-nisa, Abdul Hasan and Muhammad Bukhsh do abstain from interfering with the possession of the other party over the house till that party were evicted in due course of law. The aggrieved party carried the matter in revision to the Court of the First Additional Sessions Judge of Lucknow, who, by his reference under consideration, recommends to this Court that the order of the Magistrate be set aside.

Two grounds are taken in support of the recommendation. The first is that the learned Magistrate does not hold that a breach of the peace was imminent and that the evidence adduced by the party in whose favour the Trial Court passed the order does not go to indicate that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed with respect to the house in question. The second ground is that no preliminary order as required by the provisions of s. 145 of the Cr. P. C., was drawn up as against Muhammad Bakhsh nor was any such order served on him.

As regards the first ground, it is enough to say that the law does not require the Magistrate to record an express finding in his judgment that a breach of the peace was imminent. So far as the final decision is concerned it is required by law to clearly indicate whether any and which of the parties was at the date of the order before mentioned in possession of the subject of the dispute. See sub-s. 4, s. 145, of the Cr. P. C. As to a finding in respect of the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace that is a matter to be considered in relation to the preliminary order and in the present case the preliminary order distinctly says that the Magistrate was satisfied on the materials before him that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed as regards the house in question. See sub-s. (1) of s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. As to the evidence the learned Magistrate found it in the admissions of the parties themselves and in my judgment admission of a dispute by both the parties concerned is certainly evidence of the existence of that dispute. This ground, therefore, fails.

The second ground deals with the case of Muhammad Bakhsh. Muhammad Bakhsh joined the proceedings of his own accord by making an application to the Trial Court. He supported the case of Musammāt Muqīm-un-nisa and finally he was included by the learned Magistrate in the group of the party against whom the order was passed. This could not be done. No preliminary order as required by s. 145, sub-s. (1) of the Cr. P. C. was served on Muhammad Bakhsh nor was he given an opportunity to prove his possession over the subject of the dispute. In the circumstances he could not be subjected to the final order passed by the learned Magistrate in the proceedings under s. 145 of the Code.

I accept the reference of the learned Judge in so far as Muhammad Bakhsh is concerned. His name will be eliminated from the final order of the learned Magistrate and all proceedings taken as against him shall be deemed to have been set aside. The rest of the order is maintained. Let the papers be returned.

Criminal trial—Stolen goods in possession of accused—Presumption—Rebuttal—Jury, charge to—Misdirection.

In a case where the evidence of the guilt of an accused as a thief or dacoit rests upon discovery of stolen property from his possession and which is tried by the Jury, the proper course is to direct that the Jury are entitled to take the explanation offered by the accused of his possession. It is not necessary that such claim by the accused must be proved. There may be a case in which it is impossible for the person who is in possession of the property to prove how he obtained possession of it and if he states the circumstances under which he obtained it the Jury as a Court of fact may accept it; and in that case it will be their duty to acquit the accused. [p. 543, col. 2.]

It is not the law that if the prosecution succeeds in proving possession by the accused of recently stolen goods, it is his duty to prove his innocence, and that the presumption raised of his guilt cannot be rebutted by mere denial. Such a statement of the law laid down by a Judge in his charge to the Jury amounts to a misdirection which vitiates the charge. [ibid.]

Appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Malda, dated the 11th January 1925.

Babu Jatindra Mohan Chowdhury, for the Appellants.

Mr. Khundkar, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is by three appellants who have been convicted under s. 395, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to 7 years' rigorous imprisonment each, with the direction under s. 565, Cr. P. C., to notify the address to the Police in case of accused No. 1. Four jurors found the accused guilty under s. 395 while the 5th juror found them guilty under s. 412, Indian Penal Code. The learned Judge has accepted the verdict of the majority of the Jury and convicted and sentenced the accused as aforesaid. In appeal several grounds have been taken pointing to the misdirections alleged to have vitiated the learned Judge's charge to the Jury. It is enough for our present purpose to refer to only one of them. The evidence, it appears, rested mainly upon the recovery of the stolen articles from the possession of the accused. With regard to the explanation of the law on this head the learned Judge made the following observation: "The law regarding finding of property is this, that if stolen or dacoited property is found in possession of any person soon after the commission of the theft or dacoity, you may presume him to be either the thief or dacoit or a receiver unless he accounts for possession." Then he proceeds to state the three necessary elements which give rise to the presumption under the law, namely, (a) that the property was found in possession of the accused; (b) that the property is stolen property and (c) that it was found soon after the theft or dacoity. Then the learned Judge adds that if these three conditions are satisfied you may presume against the accused until he proves his innocence, otherwise not. As to what is meant by the learned Judge by the word "proved" in a subsequent part of his judgment he says "if you are satisfied that the presumption can be made you will see how far the presumption has been rebutted. As to the claim of the articles, allegation is not the same as proof. But if you make the presumption, it cannot be rebutted by mere denial." Reading these passages together it is evident that what the learned Judge meant to hold and which the Jury understood is that if the articles are stolen properties and were found in possession of the accused it is sufficient to prove that they were thieves or dacoits and the rebuttable presumption that arises in law is that the accused are either thieves or dacoits until they succeed by adducing sufficient proof in establishing their innocence. This direction has been considered to be serious mis-direction in several cases decided by this Court. In Hathim Mondal v. Emperor (1) the learned Chief Justice quoted a portion of the judgment of the learned Chief Justice of England in the case of R. v. Isaac Schama (2) where it is said that in a case like the present the charge to the Jury should be to this effect; "Where the prisoner is charged with having receiving stolen property, when the prosecution has proved the possession by the prisoner, and that the goods had been recently stolen, the Jury may be told that they may, not that they must, in the absence of any reasonable explanation, find the prisoner guilty. But if an explanation is given which may be true, it is for the Jury to say on the whole evidence whether the accused is guilty or not; that is to say, if the Jury think that the explanation may reasonably be true, though they are not convinced that it is true, the prisoner is entitled to an acquittal because the Crown has not discharged the onus of proof imposed upon it of satisfying the Jury beyond reasonable doubt of the prisoner's guilt. That onus never changes; it always rests on the prosecution." In a case where the evidence of the guilt of the accused rests upon discovery of stolen property from his possession and which is tried by the Jury the proper course is to direct that the Jury are entitled to take the explanation offered by the accused of their possession. It is not necessary that such claim by the accused must be proved. There may be a case in which it is impossible for the person who is in possession of the property to prove how he obtained possession of it and if he states the circumstances under which he obtained it the Jury as a Court of fact may accept it; and in that case it will be their duty to acquit the accused. The statement of the law made by the learned Judge in his charge to the Jury leaves no such option to the Jury. He insists that, if the prosecution succeeds in proving possession by the accused of recently stolen goods, it is his duty to prove his innocence and he emphasises it by explaining that mere allegation is not proof and that the presumption raised under the law cannot be rebutted by mere denial. We think that this explanation of the law is not correct and amounts to a misdirection which vitiates the charge. This view is in accord with that taken in Satya Charan Manna v. Emperor (3). Though there is difference in the language of the charge under consideration in that case from that in the present case the law as laid down there is equally applicable to the present case. We are accordingly of opinion that this charge is vitiated by the mis-direction referred to and that the trial must be held

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 345—Compoundable offence, trial of—Arbitration agreement filed in Court—Adjournment requested—Case, whether compounded.

The complainant and the accused in a compoundable case filed a petition of compromise agreeing to be bound by the decision of certain arbitrators and asking the Court to grant an adjournment for settlement of the dispute. The award was subsequently not accepted by the complainant, and he wanted the Court to proceed with the trial:

Held, that the petition of compromise had not the effect of compounding the case within the meaning of s. 345 of the Cr. P. C., as the fact that the parties asked for an adjournment of the case showed that what the parties contemplated was that the arbitrators should go into the matter, and that, after effect was given to their decision by mutual agreement, the case would be compromised.

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 5th December 1924, confirming that of the Deputy Magistrate, Berhampur, dated the 5th September 1924.

Mr. Narendra Kumar Bose and Babu Kanaidhan Dutt (for Babu Nirode Baran Banerjee), for the Petitioners.

Babu Satindra Nath Mukherjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—A case was pending against the petitioners in which they were charged with an offence punishable under s. 427, Indian Penal Code, the opposite party being the complainant in that case.

The offence is one which is compoundable under s. 345, Cr. P. C., without the leave of the Court. On the 21st June 1924 both parties filed a petition of compromise agreeing to be bound by the decision of five gentlemen named therein and asking the Court to grant an adjournment for settlement of their dispute. On the 9th July another joint petition was filed reducing the number of arbitrators to three. The three arbitrators visited the locality, but while they were making their enquiry some unpleasantness occurred and one of the arbitrators ceased to take any further part in the deliberation. The two remaining arbitrators made an award which was not accepted by the opposite party. An application being made by the petitioners to the Trying Magistrate to record an order of acquittal under s. 345, he held that the case had not been compounded and that the trial should proceed.

The only question that arises in this Rule is whether these petitions filed on the 21st June and the 9th July 1924 had the effect of compounding the case within the meaning of s. 345 of the Code. We think the Magistrate is right in holding that it cannot be said that the agreement to refer the case to arbitration was a final settlement of the dispute which the Court was bound to accept. The fact that when agreeing to be bound by the decision of the arbitrators the parties asked for adjournment of the case shows that it was not their intention to treat the reference to arbitration as taking the case out of the jurisdiction of the Criminal Court. The decision of the arbitrators whatever it was could not have been enforced by the Criminal Court, and it is unlikely, therefore, that the parties would have considered that the reference to arbitration was the final ending of the dispute. What was probably contemplated was that the arbitrators should go into the matter and in accordance with their decision the parties would act and after effect had been given to their decision by mutual agreement the case should then be compromised, but that it should be kept pending until it was finally settled.

We accordingly discharge this Rule.

DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 TO 6—

RESPONDENTS.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 69—“Bound by law to pay,” meaning of—Failure of defendant to make payment under contract—Decree obtained by creditor—Properties belonging to plaintiff and defendant put up to sale—Payment by plaintiff—Suit to recover amount of payment from defendant, maintainability of.

The expression “bound by law to pay” in s. 69 of the Contract Act does not mean bound by law to the plaintiff, but that the defendant at the suit of any person might be compelled to pay. [p. 546, col. 2.]

Plaintiff purchased certain properties free of encumbrances. The plaintiff's vendor subsequently sold some other properties to the defendant, a portion of the consideration being left with the defendant to pay off a decree obtained against the vendor by one R. Defendant did not pay off this amount with the result that the properties sold to the plaintiff together with those sold to the defendant were sold by R in execution of his decree. In order to prevent the sale being confirmed plaintiff paid the decretal amount and then brought a suit to recover that sum from the defendant.

Held, that the suit fell within the purview of s. 69 of the Contract Act and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. [ibid.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Salem, in A. S. No. 186 of 1920, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Namakal, in Original Suit No. 440 of 1917.

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer and V. N. Venkatavaradachari, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. S. Viraraghava Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I think it is necessary in this case to set out the facts, for although the District Judge says in his judgment that the facts of this case are not in dispute, he has come to one conclusion of fact which has been questioned here. In 1905 the 3rd defendant sold certain properties to the plaintiff for Rs. 2,800 and in 1909 he sold certain other properties to the 1st defendant for Rs. 16,150. The sale to plaintiff was said to be free from encumbrances, whereas the sale to the 1st defendant recited various encumbrances on the property, which the 1st defendant was to discharge as a part of the sale price. In particular, he had to pay off a decree debt of Rs. 2,000 obtained by one Rangaswami. Admittedly, the 1st defendant did not pay off this amount and subsequently the plaintiff's properties which together with those sold to the 1st defendant had been attached by Rangaswami before judgment, were sold. In order to prevent the sale being confirmed, the plaintiff paid the decree amount and now sues to recover that sum from defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and their families, the 2nd defendant being an alienee from the 1st defendant. The District Judge has found that neither s. 69 nor s. 70 of the Indian Contract Act supports the plaintiff, for he finds “the 1st defendant was under no legal obligation to clear the plaintiff's property from the attachment, nor can I find that he was under any contractual obligations which could have been enforced by law. Nor can I find he was under any legal obligation to contribute to re-imburse the plaintiff.” This finding appears to be based to a considerable extent on the finding of fact to which I have alluded above and which is now in dispute. Under his sale-deed, the 1st defendant undertook to pay Rangaswami's decree debt. But he did not do so although it appears that he did pay full consideration for the sale-deed in that he paid a debt not specified in that deed and paid certain amounts to other creditors in excess of the stipulated sums. In respect of this the learned Judge states “It also appears that the 1st defendant had his vendor's consent to the course he adopted,” and then adds: “the 1st defendant and his vendor might have entered into a new contract the next day after Ex. 1 and in fact did enter into a new contract when his vendor agreed to the 1st defendant being excused from paying up Rangaswami's debt.” This amounts to a finding that there was a novation of the contract of sale. Such a case is not set up either by the 1st defendant or by the 3rd defendant, and no issue has been framed on the point, and it has not been considered in the Trial Court. It further appears that this finding is directly opposed to an admission in the 1st defendant's evidence, for there he deposes “There is no particular reason why I should have paid off those advances and not Rengaswami's except that the others were more pressing and were mortgage decrees.” He does not rely on the novation of contract found by the District Judge but simply says that he made these payments because some creditors were pressing harder than others. This finding, therefore, cannot be accepted and we must take it that the contract between the 3rd defendant and the 1st defendant is in accordance with the terms of Ex. 1. That being so, it remains to consider whether the plaintiff comes within the provisions of s. 69 of the Contract Act for in this appeal it is not suggested that s. 70 is applicable. Section 69 runs as follows:—

“A person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay, and who, therefore, pays it, is entitled to be re-imbursed by the other.”

It cannot be disputed that plaintiff was interested in the payment of this money inasmuch as it was the only means of saving the property which he had purchased from the 3rd defendant.

Then the question arises, whether the 1st defendant was bound by law to pay that money, namely, Rangaswami's decree debt. Under Ex. 1, he had contracted with the 3rd defendant to pay that amount and so far as the 3rd defendant is concerned he could have compelled the payment of the sum by the 1st defendant. These facts are very much the same as in the case reported as Muthurakku Maniagarān v. Rakkuppa Maniagarān (1), the only difference being that the money in that case was due under a mortgage. Both the learned Judges in that case based their decision on s. 69 of the Contract Act and one of them added that s. 70 was also applicable. This authority seems to me quite clear but in a subsequent case reported as Kunchithapatham Pillai v. Palamalai Pillai (2), some little doubt seems to have been expressed as to the correctness of Muthurakku Maniagarān v. Rakkuppa Maniagarān (1) although there was no express dissent, the observation relied on by the respondent being one made obiter. In considering the meaning of the words “bound by law to pay” the learned Judge says:

“What is intended is a contractual obligation and not a legal one.” If we accept these words in their literal sense, it would imply that a person who is bound by Statute to pay a certain money is not “bound by law to pay” and I do not think that can possibly have been the meaning of the Judges. What I think is their meaning is that the contractual obligation must be one between the person paying and the person who is bound by law to pay. But if that is so, the person paying would not need to have recourse to s. 69, for he could base his action on his contract. If that is the meaning of the words, I must respectfully dissent, for I prefer to accept the definition of the words “bound by law to pay” given by Beaman, J., in Somashastry v. Swamirao Kashinath (3), where at page 98* he says “‘Bound by law’ does not mean bound by law to the plaintiff, but that the defendant at the suit of any person might be compelled to pay.” I entirely agree that this definition is the correct one and the same view is taken by a Bench of this Court in Venkata Simhadri Jagapatiraju v. Sadrusanamarad (4) where we find the following observation at page 801†: “The person who is interested in the payment mentioned in s. 69 must be a person who as between himself and the defendant was not bound to pay though the defendant may be under an obligation to pay to a third party.” On the facts of that case it was held that s. 69 was not applicable, but the same reasoning is adopted that we find in Muthurakku Maniagarān v. Rakkuppa Maniagarān (1), The same view is taken in Mothooranath Chuttopadhya v. Kristokumar Ghose (5) and Chandradaya v. Bhagaban Chandra (6). In this state of the authorities and also on the facts of this case, I am clearly of the opinion that s. 69 is applicable and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the money he has paid.

There is one further argument put forward for the respondents relating to the question of the liability of the lands in 1st defendant's possession to be proceeded against for Rangaswami's decree. It is argued that the attachment of all the properties having been made before judgment and only plaintiff's property having been brought to sale, the other properties were no longer liable for the decree, apparently on the ground that the attachment ceased on the date of the judgment. I may note here that if that were so, the attachment of plaintiff's land would also have ceased on that date, because the sale to him was after the date of the decree. But, I think, the 1st defendant is bound by the recital in his document which states that at the time when the lands were sold to him they were under attachment although there is no evidence let in to show that any subsequent steps were taken after the decree; I may also add that in the opinion of the Judges forming the Full Bench in Meyyappa Chettiar v. Chidambaram Chettiar (7) attachment before judgment continues in force until it is put an end to by the Court. It is, therefore, obvious, in the circumstances that this attachment was continuing at the time of the sale to the plaintiff and the sale to the 1st defendant. This argument, therefore, does not help the 1st defendant in any way. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed, but the plaintiff is only entitled to a certain portion of his claim. The District Munsif disallowed a certain portion of the claim and although I think he was wrong in doing so, plaintiff filed his memorandum of objections too late and it was dismissed consequently so far as that is concerned the order has become final. The lower Appellate Court's decree is, therefore, set aside and the decree of the District Munsif restored with costs both here and in the lower Appellate Court.

I may also note that 3rd defendant was not a party to the appeal in the District Court and consequently the suit was dismissed as against him also although in the judgment there is no discussion of his liability.

First appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 21st January 1924.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Appellant.

Messrs. H. D. Chandra, Ram Chandra, Chaudhari Zahiruddin, and Chaudhari Abdul Karim, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is the plaintiff's appeal from a part of the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki, dated the 21st January 1924. The suit out of which it arises was instituted on the 27th April 1923 for the recovery of a one-third share in eight items of zemindari property. This property in its entirety originally belonged to one Musammam Mahmudunnissa. On her death in 1911 the inheritance devolved according to the Hanafi Muhammadan Law on three persons, Abdul Karim, Zahiruddin and Mazharuddin in equal shares. Abdul Karim is the son of a deceased brother of Musammam Mahmudunnissa and Zahiruddin and Mazharuddin are sons of another deceased brother of the lady. Zahiruddin, the brother of the plaintiff Mazharuddin, is the defendant No. 1 and Abdul Karim is the defendant No. 2 in the present case. The defendant No. 3 is Ratan Lal and defendants Nos. 4, 5 and 6 are sons of Kundan Lal. Kundan Lal and Ratan Lal held a mortgage of two items of the property in suit and are in possession of those items by virtue of that mortgage. The deed of mortgage was executed by Zahiruddin on the 17th January 1913. Mazharuddin, the plaintiff-appellant, attested the deed of mortgage. One of the defences to the suit put forward by the defendants Nos. 3 to 6 was that the plaintiff was estopped under s. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, from claiming title to the mortgaged property. The defence was succeeded in the Trial Court and the result was that the plaintiff's suit was dismissed as against the defendants Nos. 3 to 6 and decreed as against the other defendants. The appeal before me relates only to the two items held by the defendants Nos. 3 to 6 under the mortgage already mentioned. These items are an 8-annas share in village Tikaria and the entire mahal which once belonged to Musammât Mahmudunnissa in village Karanjawara both situate in Pargana Dewa in the District of Bara Banki.

A few facts may now be stated. In the mutation proceedings, which followed on the death of Musammât Mahmudunnissa, one Raushan Ali claimed the entire estate on the ground that Musammât Mahmudunnissa held barely a life-interest in the estate which had devolved upon her by inheritance from her husband and that on her death he as the nearest reversioner of Musammât Mahmudunnissa's husband was entitled to that estate under a family custom. Zahiruddin objected to the claim of Raushan Ali and set up an oral gift of the whole property in his favour made by Musammât Mahmudunnissa. Zahiruddin's brother, Mazharuddin, the present plaintiff, supported the gift upon which Zahiruddin had founded his claim to the entire estate of Musammât Mahmudunnissa and added that in the event of the gift being held invalid he too had a share in that estate. Finally he said that he did not desire any mutation of names to be made in his favour. The Court of Revenue in charge of mutation proceedings rejected the claim of Raushan Ali and decided that "the property should be entered in the names of the legal heirs of the deceased widow who are the three nephews of the deceased lady, viz., Zahiruddin, Mazharuddin and Abdul Karim, but as Mazharuddin does not claim the property I agree with the Tahsildar that Zahir-uddin should have two-third and Abdul Karim one-third of the property" (Ex. C-4). The conclusion at which I reach is that Zahiruddin's name alone was entered in the column of proprietors in the khewat of villages in respect of the two-third share in the estate of Musammât Mahmudunnissa with the express consent of Mazharuddin.

The plaintiff supported the gift put forward by his brother, Zahiruddin, all along until 1918 as he himself says. The reason for this attitude of the plaintiff is not far to seek. Both the brothers combined to resist Raushan Ali's claim and the line of defence which they chose to adopt was the alleged gift in respect of the whole property. Under pure Muhammadan Law they could have only two-thirds of the estate between themselves but they wanted the whole. Thus their object was not only to defeat Raushan Ali's claim but also the claim of Abdul Karim. The decision of the Court of Revenue was not final. The two brothers might well have been contemplating again to put forward Zahiruddin's claim on the basis of the alleged gift in a Civil Court. They might as well have been apprehending an attack by Raushan Ali in the same Court. In the circumstances it seems to be natural that both the brothers decided to stand by the gift. Mazharuddin says in his statement made in the witness-box in the present case that at the time of mutation proceedings Zahiruddin "told me that Musammât Mahmudunnissa had given the property to me only. I did not ask about it. I believed what he told me. I remained under this belief till 1918." It follows, therefore, that on the date of the mortgage in question Zahiruddin was the ostensible owner of the two-third share with the consent of the plaintiff and it was in that character that he executed the deed of mortgage in favour of Kundan Lal and Ratan Lal on the 17th January 1913. As already stated, the khewat bore the name of Zahiruddin only in respect of that share. In the circumstances it was only natural that he alone would execute the deed of mortgage in question. In the light of the same circumstances it is a reasonable presumption to make that Mazharuddin was a consenting party to Zahiruddin alone appearing as an executant of the deed of mortgage, Zahiruddin alone having the ostensible title to the mortgaged property.

The fact that Zahiruddin attested the deed of mortgage does not by itself estop him from denying that he knew of its contents or that he consented to the mortgage but there might be circumstances which would show that the attestation "was intended to convey some thing more than a mere witnessing of the execution, and was meant as involving consent to the transaction." Pandurang Krishnaji v. Markandeya Tukaram (1). That such circumstances do exist in the present case I have already shown but there is also independent evidence leading to the same result. The substance of that evidence is that Mazharuddin assured the mortgagees that the title to the estate lay with his brother, Zahiruddin, and that he, Mazharuddin, had no interest in it and that with a view to signify that assurance he consented to attest the deed of mortgage. This evidence has been accepted as trustworthy by the learned Judge of the Trial Court and I am persuaded to accept as correct the opinion of the learned Judge. As to the merits of this evidence, I find that it is consistent with the probabilities of the case.

It was urged by the learned Advocate for the appellant that the mortgagees should have made further inquiries into the question of title. But in the circumstances of this case there was no reason for any such inquiry. The assurance given by Mazharuddin as to the title of the property under mortgage was enough to create a belief in the minds of the mortgagees and to act upon it. They accordingly believed and acted upon that belief. Mazharuddin cannot turn round and say that the mortgagees should not have believed him but made further inquiries. In the case of Bloomenthal v. Ford (2) quoted by me in my judgment in the case of Mohan Singh v. Sewa Ram (3), Lord Halsbury said:—"But once the conclusion is arrived at that belief was induced, and intentionally induced by a mis-statement of fact intended to operate upon the mind of another, upon which the man has acted, then I do not think any case can be found in the books in which it has been suggested that the legal consequence does not follow, namely, that there is estoppel, and that it is open to the person who has made the representation to say 'I told you so and so; but you ought not to have believed me. You were too great a fool.'...I do not believe that any such case can be brought forward, or that there is any authority for such a proposition." I, therefore, hold that the estoppel under s. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act has been made out.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

It is not necessary that in the case of an unregistered firm a notice under s. 23 (2) of the Income Tax Act should be served on the member of the firm who made the return. It is sufficient if under s. 63 (2) of the Act it is served on any member of the firm.

The word 'person' in s. 63 (2) of the Income Tax Act includes a firm as provided by the General Clauses Act, 1897; and when the return is made on behalf of the firm by a partner, it is the firm that is the person who makes the return.

the greatest difficulty that I could extract a question of law of any sort in this case; but, if there is any, I suppose it is this, as to whether under s. 23 (2) of the Income Tax Act the person who made the return in the case of a firm means the identical person who made the original return. Common sense would indicate that the only requisite is that the firm who made the return should, as a firm, have the notice properly delivered to them. This is a matter of general law and it is obviously a question of fact in most cases whether the notice was such as to reach the legal entity known as the firm. Here it was addressed to one of the partners and by the ordinary law and the specific provisions of s. 63 (2) of this very Act each partner is an agent for all the others in the firm. The question must be answered in this way; the assessee must pay the costs of this reference Rs. 150 (Rupees one hundred and fifty).

Krishanan, J.—I agree to the answer proposed by the learned Chief Justice. The question put to us by the referring authority is whether in the case of an unregistered firm a notice under s. 23 (2) of the Income Tax Act should be served only on the member of the firm who made the return or whether under s. 63 (2) of the Act it can be served on any member of the firm. There can be no doubt about the answer and it must be in the affirmative. Notice can be served on any member as provided for in s. 63 (2) and such service is good service. The word 'person' as pointed out by the Referring Officer, clearly includes a firm as provided by the General Clauses Act, 1897; and when the return is made on behalf of the firm by a partner it is the firm that is the person who makes the return and any proper service on the firm as authorized by s. 63 (2) will be a proper service.

I agree to the order proposed as to costs.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiffs sue to recover possession of occupancy field No. 148, area 2.74, of Mouza Belsany, Tahsil Chanda. They contend that they leased it out to defendant for one year but that he does not return it. Defendant stated that the field had been leased out to him by the plaintiffs in perpetuity along with malik makbuza field No. 5 under a sale-deed dated the 11th April 1917, and that the area of the field in suit was 1.54. It was further contended for the defendant that the defendant was led by the plaintiffs to believe that he had full right and title in the field and so the plaintiffs are estopped from claiming it. The defendant stated that he was willing to abide by the plaintiff Sona's special oath on gangajal if he swore that he did not give the occupancy field No. 148 at the time of the sale. Sona stated that he was willing to take the oath, and, as shown by the order-sheet, dated the 23rd March 1921, he took the special oath as proposed by the defendant. The defendant further stated that he would "admit the plaintiff's title to the occupancy field in suit with an area found by this Court on the evidence on record if special oath is taken," and the plaintiff Sona in return stated that he was willing to take the special oath as proposed and abide by the decision of the Court about area.

The Trial Court on the oath decreed possession of the field and found that the area of the field was 2.74 acres. On appeal, as regards the area, the lower Appellate Court finds that no appeal lies, because the Munsif who tried the case was appointed an arbitrator by the parties and his decision as to the area is in the nature of an award.

It is here contended that the form in which the special oath was taken is not on record, and that vitiates the compromise. I do not think so. The defendant proposed a particular oath, and the plaintiff as the order-sheet shows, took that oath. As regards the field the finding is conclusive.

With regard to the area, there is ample authority for the proposition that where both parties agree in a particular matter to abide by the finding of the Court in respect to it, such finding is final and binding on the parties and no appeal lies against it, the decision in such cases being in the nature of an arbitrator's award. I need only mention Sayad Zain v. Kalabhai Lullubhai (1), Shahzadi Begam v. Muhammad Ibrahim (2), Nidamarthi Mukkanti v. Thammana Ramayya (3) and Sita Nath Goswami v. Baikuntha Nath Goswami (4).

The decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct. This appeal must, therefore, fail and is accordingly dismissed with costs. The appellant will pay the respondent's costs.

Where one of two or more ryots holding a joint patta under a landholder pays the whole rent due to the landholder in order to save the holding from sale, he is, by operation of law, entitled to a charge upon the share of each of his co-sharers for the realisation of the latter's share of the rent. Section 132 of the Madras Estates Land Act relates only to a question of procedure and does not affect the substantive rights of the parties and does not prohibit a Civil Court from enforcing a charge for rent given by s. 5 of the Act. [p. 552, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff held the patta for the suit land and took in with him four lopayakari tenants, but, in 1908 a dispute arose between them as to who was entitled to the occupancy right in the land, and it was finally decided that they all had occupancy right in the land. Subsequently, the plaintiff paid the whole of the rent and now seeks to recover a portion of the amount from the other co-sharers. In the present case, we are only concerned with one of these sharers. The plaintiff relies on the ruling of the Full Bench in Rajah of Vizianagram v. Rajah Setrucherla Soma-sekhararaz (1) in which it was held that, where one of two or more co-sharers owning an estate subject to the payment of revenue to Government pays the whole revenue in order to save the estate he is by the operation of law entitled to a charge upon the share of each of his co-sharers for the realisation of the latter's share of revenue, and contends that, in consequence of this, his suit which is brought more than three years after the payment is not barred by limitation as it is a suit to enforce a charge and comes within the scope of Art. 132 of the Limitation Act. The District Judge has differentiated the present case from that, in that the present claim is one for rent under the Estates Land Act holding that under the Estates Land Act rent is not a charge on the land. Section 5 of the Act, however, clearly makes rent a charge upon the land and it is difficult to see how the present case can be differentiated from the Full Bench decision which is concerned with the payment of revenue. There seems to be no distinction between the charge given under s. 5 of the Estates Land Act and the charge given under s. 2 of the Revenue Recovery Act. In both cases the charge is actually given in favour of the landlord, in the latter case, the Government, but there is nonetheless the charge upon the land in both cases. It would, therefore, appear that the Full Bench decision is applicable here and that the District Judge is wrong.

The respondent, however, relies on a case of Panangipalli Suranna v. Suryanarayana Jagapathiraju (2) in which it was held that the charge under s. 5 of the Estates Land Act is not a charge within the meaning of s. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. The correctness of the decision, to which I was a party, has been questioned in a subsequent case reported as Bollapragada Venkatalakshmana Garu v. Nenda Seetayya (3), but whether it is correct or not, the mere fact that the charge does not come within the meaning of s. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act does not necessarily imply that it is not a charge within the meaning of Art. 132 which is very general in its terms. I do not think that the decision in Panangipalli Suranna v. Suryanarayana Jagapathiraju (2) is any authority to the contrary.

Another argument is based on some of the remarks in Bollapragada Venkatalakshmana Garu v. Nenda Seetayya (3), namely, that because it is s. 132 of the Estates Land Act which gives the Revenue Court power to apply the provisions of Ch. VI (of that Act) to the execution of a decree for arrears of rent, the same provisions are not applicable in the case of a Civil Court which must act under the C. P. C. No doubt these remarks in a way support the respondent's case, that the charge under s. 5 is limited in its application, but they were made obiter and if it was meant to lay down that a Civil Court cannot in any circumstances enforce the charge for rent given by s. 5 (of the Estates Land Act) with all respect, the remarks appear to me to go too far, for s. 132 relates only to a question of procedure and does not affect the substantive rights of the parties. The procedure to be adopted by the Revenue Court is that contained in Ch. VI of the Estates Land Act, whereas the procedure in execution by a Civil Court is that laid down by the C. P. C., but whichever form of procedure is adopted, it cannot remove a charge which is given by law. In this view, I think that the ruling in Rajah of Vizianagaram v. Rajah Setrucherla Soma-sekhararaz (1) must be held applicable to the present case and that, consequently, the plaintiff has a charge upon the land for the rent paid by him.

A further contention is put forward by the respondent that he is not liable for contribution under s. 69 of the Contract Act because the plaintiff alone was the person bound to pay the rent. It was held in Jagapatiraju v. Sadrusannamarad (4), that the only person who is personally bound to pay revenue to the Government is the registered holder and that as the plaintiff was the pattadar the other sharers were not personally bound to pay rent. This is a new argument put forward apparently for the first time in this Court and it would appear to be opposed to the facts, for it appears that the other co-sharers did actually obtain pattas in their own names from the landlord and, consequently, they would thus be liable to pay the rent under these pattas. Another case relied on is Naraina Pai v Appu (5), but that, again, was a case of contribution in which the persons ought to be made liable was not the pattadar. In the present case, as all the parties had pattas, they were all personally liable to pay the rent. Consequently, the plaintiff has a right under s. 69 of the Contract Act to ask for contribution.

The appeals must accordingly be allowed, and there will be a decree for the recovery of the respondent's proportionate share of the rent with proportionate costs throughout, with the direction that on failure to

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—Dasarat, Nankhu and Ramlochan were three brothers. Ramlochan died leaving a widow Sahodra Kuer and a son Raghubar Dayal. Bhupnarain cited as defendant No. 1 in this suit is the son of Nankhu. Bishundayal cited as defendant No. 8 is the grandson of Dasarat. Defendants Nos. 2 to 7 are the sons and grandsons of Bhupnarain. Defendant No. 9 is the son of Bishundayal and defendant No. 10 is the son of defendant No. 9. It has been found by the Court below, and the finding is one which is binding on us in second appeal, that Bhupnarain and Bishundayal together with their sons and grandsons constitute a joint family. It has also been found that Raghubar Dayal was separate from Bhupnarain and Bishundayal.

Raghubar Dayal died leaving, according to the case of all the parties, three daughters Phalindra Kuer, Lalpari Kuer and Sabinda Kuer. It was the case of Bhupnarain that Raghubar Dayal died leaving also a son Baburam who died shortly after the death of Raghubar; and that, in the events which happened Sahodra Kuer became entitled to succeed to the properties of Baburam on his death as his grandmother and that the daughters of Raghubar Dayal had no interest in the properties which were once of Raghubar Dayal but which on his death came into the hands of his son Baburam. Bhupnarain contended that he was the reversionary heir of Baburam and would be entitled to succeed to the properties upon the death of Sahodra Kuer. Sahodra Kuer on the other hand contended that Raghubar Dayal died leaving three daughters and she applied in the Land Registration Department for registration of the names of the daughters of Raghubar Dayal who are all minors and whom Sahodra Kuer purported to represent in the matter of that application. On the 20th February 1909 the land registration case was decided against Bhupnarain and on the 27th April 1909 Bhupnarain instituted a title suit as against Phalindra Kuer, Lalpari Kuer and Sabinda Kuer in substance for a declaration that they as the daughters of Raghubar Dayal had no interest in the estate which was once of Raghubar Dayal and that he was entitled to succeed to the properties on the death of Sahodra Kuer. The suit was resisted by the daughters of Raghubar Dayal; but was ultimately compromised on the 14th February 1912 by which Bhupnarain got 7 dams 13 cowris out of 10 dams 13 cowris mokarrari in Mouza Senaria and 32 bighas of raiyati land and the daughters of Raghubar Dayal got 3 dams of mokarrari in the same village and certain other properties. In the course of this litigation Bhupnarain had to borrow certain sums of money from time to time from the plaintiffs who are the appellants in this Court. The money was required by Bhupnarain to enable him to prosecute the suit as against the daughters of Raghubar Dayal. Five mortgage-bonds in all were executed between September 1909 and November 1910. Of these four mortgage-bonds were executed by Bhupnarain and Bishundayal and one was executed by Bhupnarain during the illness of Bishundayal. The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted by the appellants to enforce these mortgage-bonds as against the entire joint family consisting of Bhupnarain, Bishundayal and their sons and grandsons. The suit was not resisted either by Bhupnarain or Bishundayal; but it was resisted by their sons and grandsons and the only question is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to a mortgage-decree in this suit. It is conceded that they are not entitled to any personal decree as against Bhupnarain and Bishundayal inasmuch as the suit was brought more than six years after the execution of the mortgage-bonds.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the ground that the money was borrowed by Bhupnarain and Bishundayal without any legal necessity. The learned Judge in the Court below has reversed the decision on the ground that the expenditure of the money resulted in a benefit to the joint family and that accordingly the creditors are entitled to a mortgage-decree as against the joint family.

There is one passage in the judgment of the learned District Judge which requires immediate attention. He says: "At the outset I may say that I have not been able to find any authority for the proposition of law advanced by the learned Subordinate Judge, that is, that speculative expenditure will not bind a joint family, however, beneficial be the result. The law would appear to be that the test of the transaction is the question of the actual benefit, and that, if the joint family derived actual benefit from the expenditure incurred by the kartas, it would be bound by the expenditure, even though the latter may have been speculative at the outset." I entirely differ from the learned District Judge. It is necessary to remember that "the power of the manager for an infant heir to charge an estate not his own, is, under the Hindu Law, a limited and qualified power." I may point out that it is settled law that the power of a karta of a joint Hindu family stands on the same footing as that of the manager. In the leading case of Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koon- weree (1), the position in regard to the power of the manager to charge an estate which belongs to an infant heir is stated in these terms: "It can only be exercised rightly in a case of need, or for the benefit of the estate. But, where, in the particular instance, the charge is one that a prudent owner would make, in order to benefit the estate, the bona fide lender is not affected by the precedent mis-management of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted, or the benefit to be conferred upon it, in the particular instance, is the thing to be regarded." It is obvious, therefore, that the test which must be applied by the Court in each case is—is it a transaction into which a prudent owner would enter? Now I hold that a prudent owner would never think of entering into a speculative transaction which may benefit him, but which may also cause him loss. The question of the right of the creditor or the liability of the joint family cannot depend upon the spin of the coin or the throw of the dice. I may be possibly taking a very extreme case, but the test, in my opinion, is the same. In Ram Bilas Singh v. Ramyad Singh (2), the Chief Justice of this Court after pointing out that it is not desirable to lay down any general proposition, which would limit and define the various cases, which might be classed under the term beneficial as used in the cases, said as follows:—"It is clear, however, that all transactions of a purely speculative nature would properly be excluded." I may refer to a passage in my judgment in Sheotahal Singh v. Arjun Das (3): "I quite agree that the manager of a joint family has no authority whatever to affect or dispose of any portion of joint family property in order to enable him to embark on speculative transaction." In my judgment in that case I conceded that there is a certain element of risk in every business transaction and if we are to hold that when the business has succeeded and the entire family has benefited by it, we ought not to uphold the mortgage transaction entered into by the manager to enable him to embark on such a business, unless the mortgagee satisfies us that the business was bound to succeed and that benefit was bound to accrue to the family, we would necessarily handicap the managers of joint Hindu families and place limitation on their powers, which would have the effect of stopping all business transactions in every Mitakshara family. But it is one thing to say that a manager of joint Hindu family has complete power to enter into business transactions, where the particular business is part of the ancestral joint family property; it is another thing to say that he has power to enter into speculative transactions. I still adhere to the opinion which I expressed in that case that the test is not whether benefit was bound to accrue to the joint family; but it is still necessary for the mortgagee to show that the transaction was one into which a prudent owner would enter; and as soon as this test is laid down we must hold that it is not in the power of the karta of a joint family to bind the joint family by entering into speculative transactions. In my opinion the question of benefit must be determined by reference to the nature of the transaction, and not by reference to the result thereof; although the result may properly be taken into consideration in determining whether the transaction was one into which a prudent owner would enter. The proposition rests on principle and is covered by authorities and it is not necessary to pursue the subject.

The question, however, is somewhat different in this case. It is conceded that the creditor must establish that the transaction was for the benefit of the joint family. The money was borrowed and the mortgages were executed to enable Bhupnarain to establish his title to the estate of Baburam. On his own case Bhupnarain was the nearest heir of Baburam expectant on the death of Sahodra Kuer. Bishundayal was one degree removed from Bhupnarain and was not entitled in any case to succeed to the properties of Baburam. If Bhupnarain succeeded in the action he might establish his title to the estate of Baburam; but the joint family of which he was a member would not necessarily participate in the benefit that might accrue to Bhupnarain. What then was the position of the joint family? Bhupnarain might fail to establish his case in which case his suit would be dismissed and no benefit would accrue to the joint family; but Bhupnarain might succeed. But if he succeeded the benefit would accrue to him and not to the joint family; for it is well established that unless he chose to share the property along with the members of the joint family the fruits of his victory would belong to him and not to the joint family. How can it then be said that the mortgage transactions were for the benefit of the joint family?

It is said that Bhupnarain has actually made over the property which he gained as a result of his suit to the joint family. That may be so; but the matter rested with Bhupnarain and the joint family could never have compelled him to make over the property to it. Benefit has accrued to the joint family, not as a result of the transactions which are the subject-matter of the suit, but as a result of an act of bounty on the part of Bhupnarain. If it be contended that there was an agreement between Bhupnarain and the joint family by which the joint family agreed to finance Bhupnarain in the litigation and Bhupnarain agreed to share the property which was the subject-matter of that litigation with the joint family, I would unhesitatingly say that the agreement being of a speculative nature could not bind the joint family.

In my opinion the decision of the learned District Judge cannot be supported. I would accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and the decree passed by the Court below and restore the judgment and the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge. The result is that the suit is dismissed with costs in this Court and in the Court below. So far as the costs in the Court of first instance are concerned, I agree with the learned Additional Subordinate Judge that each party should bear his own costs.

Adami, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.—The order of the Sub-Collector, Ex. E-1, was passed on the appeal of Melam Surayya and two others. The written statement of the defendant which was carelessly drafted produces the impression that the order was passed on revision. The appeal of Surayya and others was filed on 14th November 1916, and though it was more than 30 days from the date of the Tahsildar's order (10th October 1916) the appellants stated that they heard of the order on 16th October 1916 and so claimed that their appeal was within time. Mr. Lancashire called for a report on 18th April 1917. I think it must be taken that he excused the delay, or otherwise he would not have called for a report and might have rejected the appeal as out of time. The Subordinate Judge is not clear as to whether the order of the Sub-Collector was passed on appeal or on revision. I have now sent for all the originals of Exs. C, D, E, etc., and am satisfied that the order was on appeal. The second appeal fails so far as the land is concerned.

As to the claim for the assessment of Rs. 2-2-6, the Subordinate Judge is obviously in error. This does not relate to a cess nor to damages for proceedings taken under the Revenue Recovery Act. It is for money had and received. No land having been ultimately granted to plaintiff, there was no assessment to pay. One is surprised that the Government filed a memorandum of objections in respect of this amount and wished to retain the money, as revenue relating to a grant which has been cancelled. Anyhow I hold that this portion of the claim is not barred, and allow the appeal.

The plaintiff next claims that he is entitled to damages. He says that relying on the grant by the Tahsildar on 10th October 1916, seeing that assessment was collected from him on 4th December 1916, he began to put the land to good use. He was expected to do so, and he was entitled to do so. Half the Fasli being nearly over, he must be diligent in putting the land to some use if his payment of assessment was not to turn out to be a mere waste of money. I cannot agree with the view of the Subordinate Judge that merely because one knows or is bound to know that the order of the Tahsildar is subject to appeal or revision, he is not entitled to damages. Ayling, J.'s judgment in Devaramani Bhogappa v. Pedda Bhimaka Gowd (1) shows that a grantee, if he begins to make improvements after the grant, is entitled to the value of the improvements. This is also clear from the judgment of Benson, J., in Muthuveera Vandayan v. Secretary of State for India (2) which prevailed and which was confirmed in Letters Patent Appeal in Muthuveera Vandayan v. Secretary of State for India (3). White, C. J., was for giving a higher relief and did not differ on this matter.

The amount of damages has not been found by the lower Appellate Court and I can find it here to avoid a calling for a further finding.

The plaintiff has given no particulars of loss in the plaint. Nor did the defendant insist on having the particulars. The defendant merely put the plaintiff to proof. Issues were framed and on the 2nd issue plaintiff adduced his evidence. He swore to spending Rs. 30 for casuarina plants. There is no cross-examination by the defendant. His 4th witness says he levelled the land and might have spent Rs. 25 or Rs. 30. I believe the plaintiff and this witness but I take only the lower figure. In this case there is nothing to show that the plaintiff was aware of the appeal petitions of Melam Surayya on 14th November 1916 or on 2nd March 1917 or of the order of the Sub-Collector on 18th April 1917. Up to then, he had no reason to think that his title was in jeopardy. Having got an order on 10th October 1916 and paid his assessment on 4th December 1916, he proceeded to put the land to use. The fact that the order of the Tahsildar dated 10th October 1916 was obtained by the help of the Karnam has no bearing on the question of bona fides in making the improvements. I, therefore, find that the plaintiff effected his improvements bona fide within the meaning of s. 51 of the Transfer of Property Act, i. e., in the belief that he was absolutely entitled to the land at the time. He was, as a matter of fact, so entitled and this is all that s. 51 means [vide Mathunsa Rowthan v. Apsa Bin (4), Narayana Aiyar v. Sankaranarayana Aiyar (5) and American Baptist Foreign Mission Society v. Amalanadhuni Pattabhiramayya (6).]

I, therefore, award a decree to the plaintiff for Rs. 25 for damages.

The appellant will receive proportionate costs on the portion he has succeeded and pay proportionate costs on the portion in respect of which he has failed throughout.

Under s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the initial onus lies upon the landlord to prove that the rent of the tenancy is liable to be enhanced on the ground of additional area. This onus may be shifted by proving the origin of the tenancy or a contract or by other mode of proof showing the right of the landlord to enhance the rent on that ground. The onus is not shifted by merely producing dakhilas which mention the areas for which rent has been paid. [p. 558, col. 1.]

Babu Hamendra Chandra Sen, for Babus Surendra Chandra Sen and Binoyendra Prosad Bagchi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question involved in this appeal is whether the finding of the Court of Appeal below that the defendants are liable to pay additional rent for additional area is correct. The plaintiff landlord brought a suit for recovery of enhanced rent on the ground of excess area as well as under s. 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The First Court decreed the suit; but on appeal the learned District Judge dismissed the plaintiff's claim under s. 30, Bengal Tenancy Act maintaining the order of the First Court for additional area. This appeal is by the defendants and it is argued that the learned Judge has erred in law in holding that the defendants are liable to pay enhanced rent for the additional area. The learned Judge has found that there has been a uniform payment of rent for more than 50 years, that the presumption raised by s. 50 has not been rebutted, that it is not known how the lands were first let out or what were their boundaries at the time, jamias were created, that there is no evidence to show when the jamias were created and what were the areas of the several plots, that there is no evidence to show that the lands were ever measured, that it is clear that the same rent is being paid for nearly half a century and that there is nothing to show that the tenants ever agreed to pay enhanced rent for increase in area. After recording all these findings in favour of the tenants the learned Judge observes that as area was mentioned in the dakhilas; it gave indication of the areas which were let out and that "the uniform mention of the areas all through go to indicate that area was the criterion." What the learned Judge means to say is that the fact that area was mentioned in the dakhilas and had been so uniformly mentioned is sufficient indication of the fact that the original letting was with reference to the area. The appellant argues on the authority of several decisions of this Court that this view is incorrect. Reliance is placed on the case of Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Kaulat Shaik (1), where after reviewing almost all the cases on the point Rankin, J., came to the following conclusion: "I take it to be the settled rule of this Court that when a letting upon the basis of a measurement is proved the tenant has prima facie to show that the rent was a consolidated rent for all the land within specified boundaries but that in the absence of such proof the mere production of such dakhilas as those now in evidence does not suffice to show any onus on the tenant." He has followed the dictum of Prinsep and Bevorley, JJ., in the case of Gouri Pattra v. Reily (2), where it has been said that "the mere fact that on a measurement made...under the authority of Government given under Ch. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is found that the tenants generally are in possession of lands in excess of the areas entered in the zemindari papers and their rent receipts does not necessarily prove that he is entitled to additional rent for the excess areas." The law then may be taken to be that under s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the initial onus lies upon the landlord to prove that the rent of the tenancy is liable to be enhanced on the ground of additional area. This onus may be shifted by proving the origin of the tenancy or a contract or by other mode of proof showing the right of the landlord to enhance the rent on that ground. The cases that have been cited show that the onus is not shifted by merely producing dakhilas which mention the areas for which rent is paid. We are asked by the respondent to differ from the case of Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Kaulat Shaik (1) on the ground that the finding of the learned Judge that uniform mention of areas goes to indicate that the original letting was with reference to the area is a finding of fact which cannot be disturbed in second appeal. We would have given our best consideration to this argument if the matter were res integra, but we are not at the present moment prepared to differ from the decisions of this Court. In the present case the finding of the learned Judge that the plaintiff is entitled to enhancement of rent for increase in area is based upon the dakhilas alone. There is no other evidence on which reliance has been placed. We accordingly think that the view taken by the learned Judge is against the rulings of this Court and cannot be supported.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance with costs in this Court and the lower Appellate Court.

There is a cross-objection filed on behalf of the respondent against the finding of the Judge that a certain kabuliyat executed by the defendants in 1308 was a confirmatory lease. The contention is that that lease was the origin of the present tenancy of the defendants. Both the Courts below have concurred in finding that it was not the lease by which land was let out to the defendants but it was a confirmatory lease. It appears from the lease itself that the land was in possession of the defendant's father as a tenant and that after his death the defendants executed the lease to obtain recognition by the landlord. The concurrent finding of the Courts below cannot be disturbed either on law or on the merits. The cross-objection is accordingly dismissed but without costs.

Landlord and tenant—Co-sharer landlords—Suit to recover rent for excess land by some co-sharers, whether maintainable.

Where a tenant has been paying a certain rent in past years for the land in his occupation, it is not open to some of the co-sharer landlords to file a suit seeking to recover from the tenant a larger amount of rent than has been paid in the past. Whether the claim made is one for enhanced rent, or a claim for rent for excess land taken in occupation by the tenant, the principle is the same, that the question must not be at the mercy of one sharer, but it must be decided between the tenant and the whole body of the sharers entitled to claim rent as landlords.

Application from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Godhra, in Small Cause Suit No. 437 of 1923.

Mr. R. W. Desai, for the Applicants.

Mr. H. M. Mehta, for the Opponents.

JUDGMENT.—These are applications entertained under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act in suits filed by the Desais of the village of Vinzol. The plaintiffs were not entitled to claim the whole of the rent. They are sharers to the extent of fourteen annas and seven and a half pies. The sharer entitled to the balance is not a party to the proceedings. The plaintiffs are claiming their share of what is payable by the tenants, at a higher amount than has been paid in the previous years, on the ground that although the bigha in these cases may be the same, the tenants are liable to pay additional rent for certain excess land in their occupation. It would not, therefore, be, strictly speaking, a suit for enhanced rent, but merely a claim that the tenants should pay the proper rent for the lands they are cultivating, the rate itself being admitted. But since these tenants have been paying certain rents in past years for the land in their occupation, it is not open to one co-sharer to file a suit seeking to recover from the defendants a greater amount of rent than has been paid in the past. Whether the claim made is one for enhanced rent, or a claim for rent for excess land taken in occupation by the tenants, the principle is the same, that the question must not be at the mercy of one sharer, but, if at all, must be decided between the tenants and the whole body of sharers entitled to claim rent as landlords.

On these grounds we think the Judge was wrong in entertaining the claim of the plaintiffs who were entitled to only fourteen annas and seven and a half pies share of the increased rent from the defendants. The defendants would still be liable to pay the balance of the rent to the co-sharer, and again they might be harassed by a claim for more rent on some entirely different principle. If higher rents are to be asked for, then they can only be asked for by the whole body of sharers (see Bal- krishna Sakharam v. Moro Krishna Dabholkar (1).

We, therefore, make the Rule absolute and amend the decree by directing that the amounts admitted by the defendants as due to the plaintiffs for rent be substituted for the amounts decreed. The applicants will be entitled to their costs of the Rule in all these applications.

Mr. S. N. Rai, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

Sen, J.—The plaintiffs-appellants instituted a suit for declaration of their title to and for recovery of possession of 2 bighas 6 khatas and 19½ dhurs of land which they had purchased by a kobala, dated the 31st January 1917, but from which they alleged that they had been dispossessed by the respondents in June 1920. The kobala was executed by one Mahaoti Ojhain, one of the two daughters of one Sham Lal Ojha and the said vendor purported to convey the entire half share inherited by her as heir of her father Sham Lal Ojha. The respondents, on the other hand, contended that the entire properties alleged by the plaintiffs-appellants to have been owned by Sham Lal really belonged to Sham Lal's widow Mahaoti Ojhain, who had acquired her interest therein under two sanads; that the said widow had by a deed of gift, dated the 30th June 1905, conveyed her interest to Damodar Ojha, grandson of Sham Lal Ojha by his other daughter Bhagawati Ojhain, who in turn purported to sell the entire interest for a sum of Rs. 1,300 by a kobala, dated the 5th November 1919. The Munsif gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff. He found that the kobala put forward by the plaintiff was genuine, that the entire property had really been Sham Lal's, having been acquired by him and that, therefore, Mahaoti Ojhain as one of his two daughters was entitled to a half share therein and had validly alienated that share in favour of the plaintiffs-appellants. The learned Subordinate Judge affirmed these findings arrived at by the Court of first instance and also found that the alleged deed of gift by Sham Lal's widow in favour of Damodar Ojha was illegal and invalid and that it had not been acted upon. He then proceeded to consider the question as to whether the alienation by Mahaoti Ojhain was under circumstances of legal necessity. He found that there was no legal necessity for the transfer and thus concluded that the kobala executed by her could not bind the property so conveyed.

It is urged before us by the learned Advocate appearing for the appellants that in any event the alienation in favour of the plaintiffs would be binding during the lifetime of Mahaoti Ojhain and that, therefore, the Court of Appeal below was in error in dismissing the suit altogether. On behalf of the respondents it is conceded that a daughter could alienate her share in the inheritance, such alienation being good only for her lifetime, but what is questioned is that a definite plot of land such as the one the subject-matter in this suit, could not be sold.

It is also urged by the learned Advocate for the respondents that the Court of Appeal below appears to have come to a finding that the kobalas in favour of the appellants as well as that in favour of the respondents are both collusive documents and that, therefore, the proper course for the Court of Appeal below was to dismiss the suit.

With regard to the first point it is clear that Mahaoti Ojhain being a limited owner was not entitled to alienate the property absolutely without there being legal necessity therefor. She could not bind the inheritance for her own personal debts or private purposes as against reversioners, but she could do so only for her own life. It is also clear on the authorities that a daughter can alienate her own life-interest, and effect can be given to such alienation by partition sought at the instance of the alienee. In the present case Mahaoti Ojhain purported clearly to transfer the land in question as representing her half share in the inheritance. That being so, there does not appear to be any difficulty in the way of giving a declaration in favour of the plaintiffs-appellants that they are entitled to the half share of Mahaoti Ojhain in the inheritance, such interest to enure only for the lifetime of Mahaoti Ojhain. The plaintiffs-appellants must be left to such course as they may be advised to take for the purpose of getting partition of their acquired share according to law. But it is impossible in the circumstances of this case to grant the prayer for possession asked for in the plaint.

With regard to the second point it does not at all appear clear that the learned Subordinate Judge has come to a definite finding upon proper materials that the kobala in favour of the appellants was a collusive document. No doubt an observation to that effect appears in the last paragraph but one of the judgment. But it seems hardly to amount to a finding of fact and cannot be taken to dislodge the clear finding of fact arrived at by the Court of first instance, after a due consideration of the evidence that the plaintiffs' kobala was genuine and for consideration. Moreover a case of collusion does not arise under the circumstances. It has been found that the estate was of Sham Lal Ojah's, that the plaintiffs' vendor, one of the daughters of Sham Lal, was entitled to a half share thereof, and that she parted with that interest in favour of the vendor—the vendor admitting that the kobala was genuine and for consideration. No case of collusion between the vendor and the vendee can arise in these circumstances and no such case was put forward in the pleadings.

The appeal will, therefore, be allowed in part. It is declared that the appellants are entitled to the half share of their vendor Mahaoti Ojhain in the estate of her father Sham Lal Ojha without prejudice to the rights of the reversioner or reversioners, if any, upon the death of Mahaoti Ojhain. The appellants are entitled to their costs from the respondents.

Mr. S. R. Parulekar, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. R. Bakhale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the decision of the Subordinate Judge was right, and that the authority relied upon by the Assistant Judge has no application. The applicant at the time he presented the darkhast had no title to the decree which he sought to execute. He had only a right under his own decree to obtain an assignment from the decree-holder of the other decree. The applicant was given time by the Subordinate Judge to cite any authority to support his proposition. He failed to do so. There is no authority that we know of which lays down that a darkhast-dar, who has no title whatever to execute the decree at the time of the darkhast, can remedy the defect by completing the title after the date of the darkhast, and then try to execute the decree by virtue of that title.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Appellant.

Babu Biraj Mohan Majumdar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant against a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Chittagong reversing a decision of the Munsif. The suit out of which this appeal arises was a suit for rent. The plaintiff's claim was that defendant No. 18 was the proprietor of a certain taluk and that defendant No. 18 had leased this out in sadar patni right to the plaintiff in March 1915 and that at the same time four years' arrears of rent from 1911 to 1915 had been assigned by defendant No. 18 to the plaintiff.

iff. The plaintiff further claimed that the defendants other than defendant No. 18 were tenants under him and claimed rent at the rate of Rs. 17-8 as a year. The case for the defendants, other than defendant No. 18, was that they were neither the tenants under defendant No. 18 nor under the plaintiff and they asserted that neither of these persons had any title to any of the land. They say that their landlord was some other person named Raj Chandra Sen and that they had been paying rent to him all along. The First Court dismissed the suit but the Subordinate Judge held that the provisions of s. 78 of the Land Registration Act, Act VII of 1876 were no bar to the claim by the lessor.

Four points have been urged before us on behalf of the appellant. First, it is said that s. 78 of the Land Registration Act is a bar to the claim. Secondly, it is said that the learned Subordinate Judge has relied for his decision upon the admissions of certain co-tenants of the defendants which, it is said, are not evidence against them. Thirdly, it is said that defendants Nos. 3 and 15 have died and that no substitution has been effected and that without the substitution the suit cannot lie. Fourthly, it is said that the learned Subordinate Judge must be deemed to have accepted the entry in the khatian and that that being so, he should have dismissed the suit.

As to the first point there are decisions of this Court that s. 78 is no bar to a person in the position of the present plaintiff recovering rent although the person who should have been registered as the proprietor and through whom he claims has not been registered. One of the rents which are claimed in the suit was claimed by virtue of the assignment and it is suggested that so far as this rent is concerned s. 78 is a bar. This Court, however, has otherwise decided [See Syed Serapat Hossein v. Tarini Prosad Dobey (1)] In the circumstances, we think that there is no substance in the first point.

So far as the second point is concerned, it appears that there was evidence on the record apart from the admissions upon which the learned Judge is said to have relied for it appears that the plaintiff examined the landlord's gomasta and that he deposed to the realization of rent of the taluk from the defendants and proved the counterfoils showing such realisation. It, therefore, appears that the learned Judge relied on other evidence than the mere admissions of the co-tenants.

So far as the third point is concerned this was not taken in the Court below and we do not think that it is open to the appellant here.

As regards the fourth point, we think that it was open to the learned Subordinate Judge as he did to accept a part of the entry in the khatian and not to accept the rest of the entry. There is, accordingly, nothing in this point.

In the result, the appeal fails and must be dismissed.

The Deputy Registrar's costs as representing the minor respondents have already been paid.

Where goods are consigned to a Railway Company for carriage under Risk-Note Form "B," the Railway Company would only be liable for the loss of a complete package or of a consignment consisting of a complete package or packages, and even if a package or packages are missing the Company would only be liable if the plaintiff can prove wilful neglect etc., as mentioned in the Risk-Note. Where in such a case all the packages in the consignment are delivered to the consignee, the fact that the contents of some of the packages are lost does not make the Railway Company liable under the terms of the Risk-Note. [p. 563, col. 2.]

In the case of a consignment of tins of oil, if all the tins are delivered, then there is no loss of a package even although the tins delivered contain no oil when delivered to the consignee. [ibid.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge at Broach, in Appeal No. 4 of 1922, amending that of the Subordinate Judge at Broach, in Civil Suit No. 42 of 1920.

Mr. Binning, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. N. Thakor (with him Mr. M. K. Thakore), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 1,600 as the price of the contents of the plaintiff's tins of oil, with interest. The Trial Court decreed the plaintiff's claim to the extent of Rs. 957. The Appellate Judge increased the decretal amount to Rs. 1,189-12-9. The Railway Company have appealed. It is curious to note that in so many of these Risk-Note cases, the parties fail entirely to realize what are the real issues in the case, and in second appeal they endeavour to remedy the defects which have occurred in the proceedings in the Courts below. The third issue in the Trial Court was: "Is the Risk-Note set up by the defendant Railway Company duly proved?" That was found in the affirmative. Then the second part of the issue was: "If so, are the defendants absolved from any liability?" Under the terms of the Risk-Note the defendants would only be liable, in any event, for the loss of a complete package or of a consignment consisting of a complete package or packages, and if a package or packages were missing, then the defendants would only be liable, if plaintiff could prove wilful neglect as mentioned in the Risk-Note. The Trial Court held that the defendants were not absolved from liability, apparently on the ground that plaintiff had proved that the loss had occurred by wilful neglect of the defendants.

The question whether the defendants were liable at all, because they alleged that no complete package had been lost, does not appear to have been raised in the issues. The Judge really considered that the Railway Company were responsible for the oil that disappeared from the plaintiff's tins, and decreed the plaintiff's claim. There was no question also in the Trial Court, whether had there been a deviation of the route, or whether the unloading or reloading of the tins at Wari Bunder by the defendants was unjustifiable.

In appeal, the same faults of procedure also occurred. The same issues were raised while the vital points in the case do not seem to have been discussed. It is difficult then to consider them if they are questions of fact in second appeal.

The first question really is whether any of the plaintiff's packages have been lost.

We have been referred to the decision in East Indian Railway Company v. Nilkanta Roy (1) in which it was held that if in the case of tins of oil the tins are delivered, then there is no loss of a package even although the tins contain no oil when delivered to the consignee. The decision of Mr. Justice Fletcher to that effect depended on a decision of this Court, which has not been reported. However, we can quite understand how it came to pass that the Railway Companies asked the Legislature to sanction a form of risk-note so as to absolve them from liability, except in the case of a loss of a complete package. If a tin of oil disappears entirely, then undoubtedly it is lost. But a question would arise if the contents are partly lost and the tin is there, how much oil should be left in a tin so as to constitute delivery of the package. Other complicated questions might arise and the solution of the difficulties was found by absolving the Company from liability unless the package has disappeared entirely.

We have now got the decision of this Court in B. B. & C. I. Railway Company v. Ambalal Sevaklal, (Civil Application No. 198 of 1909, (unreported) which says:—

"In this case we think it is quite clear that there has been no loss of a complete package forming part of the consignment. All the tins forming separate packages in the consignment were delivered to the consignee. The fact that all the contents of some of the tins were lost does not make the Railway Company liable under the terms of the Risk-Note in Form B."

That, therefore, would dispose of the case unless it could be found that the defendants had committed a breach of their contract. It was never alleged that there was such a breach of the contract as to make the defendants liable, apart from the terms of the Risk-Note, for any loss of the goods, and, therefore, we are not in a position to say that the conduct of the defendants in unloading the goods at Wari Bunder and reloading them again, itself amounted to a breach of contract.

There is no question of deviation in this case because the goods came to Bombay as they would ordinarily come to Bombay and it would not make any difference if they were unloaded at Wari Bunder and reloaded again for being carried on to B. B. &

C. I Railway line. On the question whether it would be more convenient from an administration point of view that the goods should go to Dadar instead of to Wari Bunder, there is no evidence, so that we are unable to hold that there is any foundation for saying that the Company was guilty of a breach of contract under the terms of the risk-note.

We think that the decision of the Court below was wrong and the appeal will be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

Duval, J.—These two appeals are brought by two tenants against an order of the Additional District Judge of Dinajpur in appeal upholding the respondent landlords, contention that he was entitled to get enhanced rent from these tenants under s. 30, Bengal Tenancy Act, the presumption arising under s. 50 having been rebutted. The landlord's case was that rent was not fixed and that the presumption under s. 50 did not arise as the rent varied at various items since the time of the Permanent Settlement. The Munsif found that the presumption of fixity of rent had not been rebutted as there had been no change in the rate of rent anyhow since 1849 and that jamawasilbaki papers of an earlier date were not conclusive to show that the jamas did not exist back to the time of the Permanent Settlement. The Munsif, therefore, disallowed the claim for enhancement and decreed the rent at the former rent. In appeal the learned Additional District Judge has mainly relied on the jamawasilbaki papers of 1226 as showing that the rate of rent as shown in these papers of all the jamas in the village was Re. 10-5 gandas per bigha and admittedly the rate of rent in 1256 (1849) was Re. 1-9-7 per bigha. He, therefore, held that there had been a variation in the rent and for that reason the presumption had been rebutted. Now it has been held that the question generally whether the tenant has held at a uniform rate of rent for more than 20 years or back to the time of the Permanent Settlement is a question of fact and not a question of law. In this connection I would refer to the case of Alimuddin Mollah v. K. S. Banerjee (1) a decision which my learned brother was a party.

The main question, therefore, which arises in this appeal and which we have to consider is whether the learned Additional District Judge in coming to his decision that there has not been uniform rate of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement has arrived at his finding by taking into consideration evidence which legally is not evidence at all. The main point is as to the jamawasilbaki papers of 1226. As I have remarked they were used in the Court of the Munsif only to show that the jamās at present existing were not contained in them. That, of course, is negative evidence and does not carry us very far; for as it has been remarked both by the Munsif and the Additional District Judge the present jamās might not have existed as they might have been carved out of larger jamās appearing in these papers. The learned District Judge, however, has used the entry of Re. 1-0-5 gundas, which is the rate of every holding in the village as evidence for holding that these jamās, if existing, could not have been held, back to the time of the Permanent Settlement at the rate of Re. 1-9-17 gundas. It is urged on behalf of the appellants, however, that these jamawasilbaki papers of 1226 are not admissible as they are not legally proved. Suffice it to say that they came out of the zemindar's record-room. They are obviously papers kept in the ordinary course of business and they are over 100 years old and the only person responsible for any entry in them must, therefore, be by this time dead. The mere fact that no formal evidence was adduced to prove that the man is dead who must if alive be over 120 years old does not appear to us to be very material. It is well-established that jamawasilbaki and jama-bandi papers can be admitted in evidence under s. 32 (2) of the Indian Evidence Act, but it must be clear that the persons who made them are dead and that the papers were made in the ordinary course of business. In this connection I would only refer to the cases of Durga Priya Choudhury v. Hazra Gain (2) and Umed Ali v. Habibulla (3). In my opinion, therefore, the learned Additional District Judge had committed no error in accepting a natural presumption that the writer of these papers of 1225 B. S. is dead.

It is urged, however, that there is no need in jamawasilbaki papers to set out the rate of rent. The amount of rent is what is to be entered in such papers in the ordinary course of business; the entry of the "nirik" is not an entry made in the ordinary course of business and so the entries are not entries which can be relevant under s. 32. I do not think that we can lay down that certain entries in what is a clear statement as to the state of collection in a certain year are made in course of business and others are not. The zemindar might have had reasons a hundred years ago to have the rate entered and I cannot believe that these papers were made in anticipation of the present or other suit. I cannot hold that the entry as to the rate of rent can be distinguished from other entries in the jamawasilbaki papers as being entries not made in the ordinary course of business. I hold, therefore, that the jamawasilbaki papers have been received in evidence not illegally by the learned Additional District Judge.

It is next urged that a new case was made in appeal which should not have been allowed. I see nothing in this contention. The whole record was before the District Judge and he read the evidence for and against the presumption of fixity of rent and dealt with it as he as a judge of fact was entitled to do. The fact that the learned Judge dealt with the case in a somewhat different way from the Munsif is no reason to hold that the learned Judge acted illegally.

It is also urged that, as a matter of fact, the jamawasilbaki papers are not good evidence, assuming that they were received in evidence, because of the register, Ex. H, in which the rate of rent appears to have been recorded as Re 1-8 sicca which is more or less the sum of Re. 1-9-17 gundas which is the rate existing in 1256. But the learned District Judge has dealt with the facts of the case and has pointed out that this Ex. H is defective and in parts illegible and that in many cases there were two different rates of rent set out in it, one shown by the Collector and the other by another officer. Exhibit H, therefore, as he rightly points out, does not carry us very far.

The learned Advocate further raises the question as to certain remarks made by the learned District Judge as to the effect of slight variations in the rent. It is not necessary for me to discuss this point. The learned Additional District Judge himself has come to the finding of fact that the rent which was in 1226 only Re. 1-0-5 gundas sicca, 30 years later had advanced to Re. 1-9-17 gundas. This is a finding that there was a material, not a slight variation.

Lastly the learned Advocate has stated that certain of the defendants who were tenants on the land were not on the record. It appears that when the case came on for trial there was a petition by the defendants that certain co-owners in the tenancy were not before the Court and so the case could not proceed. But at the trial this objection was waived, and we do not know if there was anything material in this objection: presumably there was not as it was not pressed, but I may only add if there were any other parties who should have been parties to the suit and who were not parties they would not be bound by the decree.

In view of what I have said above I come to the conclusion that the finding of fact at which the learned District Judge has arrived has not been vitiated by any misrepresentation or misunderstanding of the evidence. It rested with him to weigh the evidence and we cannot say that there is any evidence on the record which should not be there.

These appeals, therefore, must be dismissed with costs on the findings of fact arrived at by the Court of Appeal below.

The postponement of redemption for a long time does not by itself operate as a clog on the equity of redemption. [p. 567, col 1.]

The true test in such a case is: was the transaction in its essence an advancement of a loan on one side and furnishing of a security for the same on the other? If the answer is in the affirmative, postponing the right to redeem to an inordinate length of time may reasonably lead to the inference that the intention was to kill that right and this will not be permitted by law. If, on the other hand, the transaction is in its reality more than or different from a pure transaction of a loan or security, the equitable doctrine of relief against a clog on the right to redeem has no application. JUDGMENT.—This is the plaintiff's appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur dated the 25th February 1924 confirming the decree of the Munsif of Musafirkhana dated the 4th December 1922. The suit, which has been dismissed by the Court below, was one for redemption of a mortgage dated the 21st January 1883 for a sum of Rs. 1,000 in respect of an 8 pies share situate in five villages in the District of Sultanpur. The original mortgagor was one Mendai Khan and the mortgagees were Mahabir Singh, Shamsheer Singh and Nageshar Singh. The mortgagor and the mortgagees are all dead. Mendai Khan's heirs in law are defendants Nos. 10 to 13 and the representatives of the mortgagees are defendants Nos. 1 to 9. The plaintiff, Narain Das, is the purchaser of a share in the mortgaged property at an auction-sale.

By the terms of the deed of mortgage the right to redeem was postponed till the expiration of a period of 200 years. In answer to the suit for redemption the defendants pleaded that the term of 200 years was a bar to the claim for redemption. The Courts below have accepted the defence and dismissed the suit. In second appeal it is urged on behalf of the plaintiff that the term postponing the right to redeem to a period of 200 years was on the face of it oppressive opposed to the essence of a contract of mortgage and consequently a clog on the equity of redemption. This is an argument which has been considered by the Courts below and negatived. I have to decide whether the Courts below have gone so hopelessly wrong that their decrees must be set aside. I am not prepared to so decide.

In para. 16 of the written statement the defendants said that their ancestors had, as a matter of fact, paid the full price of the property in suit and for certain reasons advantageous both to the mortgagor and the mortgagees the form of the transaction agreed upon was to be that of a mortgage. The Trial Court took this defence into consideration and on the strength of documentary evidence showing the value of the property to be about the same as the mortgage-money came to the conclusion that the essence of the contract between the parties was one of a transaction of sale but for certain reasons it took the form of a mortgage. On that ground it held that the mere length of time fixed for redemption did not constitute a clog.

In the Court of Appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that there was nothing else in the deed of mortgage except the long term of 200 years which could give rise to the application of the doctrine of relief against a clog on the equity of redemption, and that the long term by itself was not a sufficient basis for such a relief. For this opinion of the learned Subordinate Judge there is authority in the case of Zulfiqar Ali v. Suraj Prasad (1).

On the question as to whether the essence of the contract was a sale or a mortgage the learned Subordinate Judge observed :—

“There is no proof on record beyond the evidence provided by the earlier sale-deed that any such considerations in fact were made at the time of the mortgage.” But what proof can there be except a reasonable probability arising out of the circumstances of this case? The mortgagor and the mortgagees are all dead. Direct evidence was impossible. In my judgment the learned Munsif was right in drawing an inference from the view that though a mortgage was agreed upon for certain reasons as the apparent form of the transaction the mortgagees paid the full price of the property mortgaged. That being the essence of the contract no question of clog does, in my opinion, arise in the case. The true test in all cases of this nature is : was the transaction in its essence an advancement of a loan on one side and furnishing a security for the same on the other? If the answer is in the affirmative, postponing the right to redeem to an inordinate length of time may reasonably lead to the inference that the intention was to kill that right and this will not be permitted by law. If, on the other hand, the transaction is in its reality more than or different from a pure transaction of a loan and security the equitable doctrine of relief against a clog on the right to redeem has no application.

The appellant must establish, before he can succeed, not only that the decision of the Court below might well have gone in the contrary direction but that it must have been so: Nabakishore Mandal v. Upendra-kishore Mandal (2). I am not satisfied that the appellant has established this. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Ramaprosad Mukherjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit in which the plaintiffs sued for enhancement of rent on the ground of rise in the price of staple food crops. The facts are that the land was debutter of certain Barals of which one Radhamadhab was the shebait who on the 27th September 1889 granted a mourashi mokarrari patta to the defendant's predecessors. There was a suit in the original side of the High Court for the better management of the property and the land now in suit was directed by the Court to be sold, presumably as a secular property for the realization of the costs of the suit. It was purchased by one Haridhon Dutt whose estate afterwards went into the hands of a Receiver from whom the plaintiff purchased the property. The defendant was in possession of the land at an annual jama of Rs. 6-2 and the present suit is for enhancement of the rent of that jama. The learned Munsif decreed the plaintiffs' claim and enhanced the jama to Rs. 7-15-9. That decree was confirmed on appeal by the District Judge of the 24-Parganas.

The learned Advocate for the appellant has argued three points. He argued in the first place that the defendants' mourashi mokarrari tenancy having been recognized by successive owners, the plaintiffs are not entitled to maintain the present suit. On this point the learned Subordinate Judge found that in 1909 the Receiver brought a suit against the defendants' predecessor for rent and in execution of the decree put up the property to sale describing the same as an occupancy holding. It was purchased by one Madhukar on the 23rd November 1909 from whom the defendants purchased the holding on 22nd November 1910. From these and other facts the learned Judge is of opinion that the defendants failed to prove that successive owners recognized his tenancy as mourashi mokarrari.

The second point argued is that the defendant is either a mourashi mokarrari tenant or a trespasser and, therefore, s. 30 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply to the present case. This contention has no substance. The defendant is a tenant on the land. By virtue of long possession he has acquired at any rate a right of occupancy. The plaintiffs and their predecessors treated him as a tenant with ordinary right of occupancy. It cannot, therefore, be said that he is a trespasser and, therefore, s. 30 (b) does not apply. As to his being a mourashi mokarrari tenant the matter will be considered in connection with the next point.

Lastly it is argued on the merits that having regard to the facts found and the recital in the lease granted by Radhamadhab, it should have been held that the lease granted to the defendants' predecessor is a valid one and binding on the plaintiffs. It is also contended in view of these facts that the onus of proving that there was no necessity for the granting of the lease was on the plaintiffs and they having failed to discharge the onus, the suit ought to have been dismissed. It is urged that a shebait can transfer debutter property for legal necessity, and, therefore, his position is similar to that of a Hindu widow. No authority has been placed before us in support of this proposition. No doubt a shebait or a mohunt has under special circumstances the power to alienate or grant a mokarrari lease of the trust property and so far the similarity of his position to that of a Hindu widow is maintainable. But a Hindu widow has an estate in the property unknown to English Law and unlike any other that may be created under the general law. Though she gets a limited interest in the property, she has got powers which are not enjoyed by life-tenants; she cannot be removed from possession of the property but a shebait is liable to be dismissed for acts of breach of trust; she is not accountable to any one for the income of the property in her charge, whereas a shebait is subject to the rights of the beneficiaries to ask for accounts. The widow does not hold the estate in trust for the reversioner, but the shebait, though not a trustee in the strict sense of the term, is the manager or custodian of the debutter property. The question that arises for consideration is whether a shebait can grant a mokarrari mourashi lease like the one in the present case. It is conceded by authorities that he can do so for unavoidable necessity. In the present case there is no proof that there was any necessity for the granting of the lease. It is held in Abhiram Goswami Mohant v. Shyama Charan Nandi (1) that it is well-settled law that the power of a mohunt to alienate debutter is, like the power of a manager of an infant heir, limited to cases of unavoidable necessity. It is hardly necessary to remark that a person deriving title from holder of a limited interest in the property is under necessity of proving the authority of the limited owner to make alienation and ordinarily the onus would be on him to prove the validity of the transaction. In this case, as we have observed, there is no evidence to show that there was any necessity existing at the time when the mourashi mokarrari patta was granted. It is also argued in this connection that the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation or in other words the defendant has by efflux of time acquired the status of a mourashi mokarrari tenant in the land in suit. This question has now been put beyond the range of controversy by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Vidya Varuthi Tirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (2). There their Lordships have held that according to the well-settled law in India, a mohunt is incompetent to create any interest in respect of the muth property to endure beyond his life. The tenant or transferee acquires a right similarly limited. If the successor of the mohunt permits the tenant to continue in possession and receives rent from him during his life, the tenancy thus created will be a new tenancy created by himself for his lifetime. It is within the power of every successive trustee to continue tenancy during his life and consequently his possession in that never becomes adverse to the successor of the last mohunt. In the present case, however, there is no finding that the defendants ever asserted as against the successors of Radhamadhab his mokarrari mourashi title. In fact the evidence, so far as it goes, shows that the holding was described as an occupancy holding and no objection was taken to such description by the tenant.

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Question of title decided between parties—Redemption of property by plaintiff during pendency of previous suit—Dispossession—Suit to recover possession, whether maintainable.

Defendant obtained a decree for possession of certain property against the plaintiff as reversioner to the estate of one B. During the pendency of that suit plaintiff obtained a decree for redemption of that property from a mortgagee and obtained possession thereof. He was subsequently dispossessed by a transferee of the defendant and brought a suit to recover possession of the property:

Held, that the decision in the previous suit on the question of title operated as res judicata between the parties and that the plaintiffs' suit must, therefore, fail. [p. 570, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultaupur, dated the 8th February 1924, upholding that of the Munsif, Musafirkhana, dated the 31st October 1923.

ORDER.

Daniels, J. C.—(April 3, 1925).—The only question in this appeal is one of res judicata. The plaintiff-appellant Bhondai Miser filed the present suit for possession of trees in Plots Nos. 907, 1175, 1185 and 1171 in village Madyawan on the allegation that defendant No. 1 Ram Prasad inherited a 4th share in some of the trees while the plaintiff and defendant Nos. 3 to 5 were owners of all the rest. He further alleged that five years before the suit he paid Rs. 100 in redemption of a usufructuary mortgage of these trees executed in 1909 by Baij Nath in favour of Jokhu and Beni Madho and obtained possession. He had been dispossessed by the defendant No. 2 Rajwant Singh in whose favour the 1st defendant Ram Prasad has executed the sale-deed. Now in a previous suit between the parties to which the plaintiff made no reference in his suit, the 1st defendant Ram Prasad was given a decree for possession of all the trees in suit as reversioner to Baij Nath as against the present plaintiff Bhondai. On these pleadings a preliminary issue of res judicata was tried first. The learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit on the ground that though the right which the plaintiff claims in virtue of having redeemed the mortgage in favour of Jokhu and Beni Madho was not litigated in the former suit yet it had arisen prior to the institution of that suit and, therefore, ought to have been put forward by the present plaintiff as a defence. From the copies of judgments in that suit which are on the record I have been unable to ascertain whether that suit was filed before or after the 17th April 1918 which would be the date five years before the institution of the present suit. The original record of that suit may be sent for to determine the point. That record will throw light on another point also. It appears from the judgment of the Munsif that the two mortgagees from whom the plaintiff claims to have redeemed were actually parties to the previous suit, but as the judgment shows that they were discharged during the course of the suit, the record may show on what ground they were discharged, and this may have a bearing on the question whether the mortgagee right claimed is concluded by the previous judgment.

Even if the alleged redemption of Baij Nath's mortgage took place after the institution of the suit of 1918 the plaintiff will still have to explain what right he had to redeem that mortgage in face of the adverse decision of title given against him in that suit. This, however, is not the point on which the case was decided in the Court below and the plaintiff did not come prepared to meet it.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. P. Misra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Wazir Hasan, A. J. C.—(August 10, 1925).—This appeal was first heard under O. XLI, r. 11, of the C. P. C., and the facts are stated in the order dated the 3rd April 1925 admitting the appeal for notice. It will serve no useful purpose to repeat the facts in this judgment. The only issue for decision is whether the plaintiff-appellant's case is barred by res judicata. I have no doubt in my mind that it is. The respondents brought a suit to recover this property as against the appellant and other persons and the title on which the suit was founded was that the respondent, Ram Prasad, was the nearest reversioner to the estate of one Baijnath to whom the property in suit admittedly belonged. Ram Prasad's title succeeded and he obtained a decree as against the plaintiff-appellant. It appears that either during the pendency of the suit or soon afterwards the appellant redeemed a usufructuary mortgage existing on the property in suit and obtained possession. His defence as against the plea of res judicata is that the redemption having taken place subsequent to the institution of the previous suit the decision in that suit did not operate as res judicata. This is a fallacious argument. On the question of title that decision is clearly res judicata and the plaintiff-appellant cannot be allowed to go behind it by pleading the subsequent redemption for the simple reason that he had no title to redeem.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Raiyati holding—Sale in execution of decree for rent—Interest, high rate of, mentioned in kabuliyat—Auction-purchaser, whether bound by rate of interest.

Where a permanent raiya holding is sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent and the sale processes contain no indication of the stipulation about payment of interest on arrears of rent contained in the kabuliyat executed by the previous tenant, the auction-purchaser is not liable to pay interest at the rate mentioned in the kabuliyat, as the rate of interest is not an ordinary incident of a tenancy of which the auction-purchaser can be presumed to have had knowledge. [p. 571, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 9th of March 1922, affirming that of the Munsif, First Court at Lakhipur, dated the 27th of February 1920.

Babu Tarakeswar Nath Mitter for Babu Nagendra Nath Bose, for the Appellants.

Babu Mukund Behary Mallik and Mahendra Kumar Ghose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question involved in this appeal is as to the rate of interest which the plaintiff is entitled to recover for arrears of rent. The kabuliyat creating the tenancy was executed by Aminuddi Meji in 1-73. One of the terms of the contract was that "In case of default in paying a kist I shall pay interest at the rate of Rs. 6-4 per cent. per mensem: If notwithstanding this I withhold the payment of rent you will be entitled to realise the arrears of rent with interest and damages by instituting a suit." The present suit was brought by the landlord for recovery of arrears of rent with interest at 75 per cent annum for overdue instalments. He also claimed damages at 75 per cent. on arrears of cesses. The learned Munsif was of opinion that the clause was penal in its character and, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover interest at such a high rate as 75 per cent. per annum. He accordingly decreed the plaintiff's claim for arrears of rent with damages at 25 per cent. The learned District Judge on appeal has observed that there can be no doubt that the clause that not only shall interest be at 75 per cent. but also that damages will be payable is a penal one and it is, therefore, in the discretion of the Court to allow reasonable compensation instead of the penalty. In this view he agreed with the First Court and dismissed the appeal.

In appeal it is argued that the construction put upon the kabuliyat by the Courts below is wrong and that under the law the plaintiffs are entitled to recover interest at the rate claimed. With regard to the construction of the kabuliyat we do not agree with the view taken by the Courts below. If any term may be called penal in it, it is the term relating to damages in default of payment of rent at the stipulated time. But it is not necessary to consider this matter further.

The more important question that arises in the present case is whether under the stipulation in the kabuliyat payment of interest at the rate of 75 per cent. per annum is recoverable. It appears that the kabuliyat creates a permanent raiya holding but not a mokarrari holding. It also appears that the holding was sold for arrears of rent in 1899 and purchased by the defendants. The question, therefore, that arises is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to recover from the defendants who are auction-purchasers in execution of a rent-decree, the interest at the stipulated rate. In support of the appellant's contention reliance is placed upon the Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Lal Gopal Dutt v. Manmatha Lal Dutt (1). There it was held that an auction-purchaser at a sale in execution of a rent-decree of a tenure is liable for interest at the rate mentioned in the kabuliyat and not at the rate mentioned in s. 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The facts of that case were that a tenure of 500 bighas with a jama of Rs. 285 and odd was sold in execution of a rent-decree and purchased by the defendants who were co-sharer landlords. On these facts the Full Bench held that the defendants were liable to pay interest at the stipulated rate. On behalf of the respondents reliance has been placed upon the decision of this Court in the case of Annadamoyi Debi v. Saudamini Debi (2). In our judgment the facts of that case are similar to those in the case before us and the ratio of that decision is applicable to the present case. In that case a raiya holding was sold but in the sale processes no indication was given of the stipulation about interest. The learned Judges were of opinion that the defendant was not liable to pay the high rate of interest as it was not an ordinary incident of a tenancy of that character and they approved of the dictum of Banerjee, J., in Kali Nath Sen v. Trailokhya Nath Roy, (3): "The distinction between usual and unusual terms of a contract of tenancy is a distinction which should be taken into consideration in determining whether the incident in question continues to attach to the tenancy, notwithstanding its sale for arrears of rent". Annadamoyi Debi's case (2) is attempted to be distinguished on the ground that in that case it was a simple raiya whereas in the present case it was a permanent raiya holding and, therefore, the principle of the Full Bench case of Lal Gopal Dutt v. Man- matha Lal Dutt (1) should apply. Section 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act admittedly does not apply to such a lease because it is not a permanent mokarrari lease. In the Full Bench case as I have observed the facts were that the defendant at the time of his purchase at the auction was aware of the special stipulation being one of the lessors. Maclean, C. J., referred this to this special circumstances of that case: "In the present case the purchaser certainly cannot complain, he was one of the original lessors, and must be taken to have notice of the terms of the lease, if that were necessary". After making this observation the learned Chief Justice adds: "But apart from any such consideration, the lease had not expired: and the purchase must be taken to have been made subject to the conditions of the lease". The only other judgment in the case was that of Rampini, J., who depended entirely upon the special features of the case for his decision. The learned Judge observed: "Then in that case [Kali Nath Sen v. Trailakhya Nath Roy (3)] the tenancy was not put up to sale subject to the terms of the kabuliyat executed by the former tenant. But in this case it is clear that the tenure was sold subject to the terms upon which it was held. Moreover, in this case the purchasers are some of the proprietors of the tenure held under the kabuliyat of the terms of which they must have been well aware". It is evident from this remark that what influenced the learned Judges in that case was that the defendant with full knowledge of the terms of the contract and the special incident of the tenancy had purchased it and should not, therefore, be allowed to turn round and deny liability under the contract. In the present case the sale certificate described the holding sold simply as a raiyati of 9 cottas and 5 gundas of land with Rs.19 as jama. It cannot, therefore, be contended that the defendants had notice of this special term of the contract. Reliance has also been placed on behalf of the appellant on the case of Narendra Nath Sarkar v. Moniruddi Howladar (4). There also Maclean, C. J., with the concurrence of Geidt, J., held that though the rate of interest was exorbitant it was recoverable from the defendant. That was a case of a howladari tenure and not a raiyati tenure and it does not appear from the report that the auction-purchaser in that case was not aware of the terms of the kabuliyat.

In the above view, though we do not accept the reasons of the Courts below, we think that their decision is substantially correct. We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 77—Damages, suit for—Non-delivery of goods due to loss—Notice, whether necessary.

Notice under s. 77 of the Railways Act is required in all cases in which the loss of goods is alleged by the plaintiff. If the plaintiff alleges non-delivery without stating what the cause of non-delivery is, and it appears upon the trial that in fact non-delivery was due to loss, then the plaintiff fails if he has not given notice under s. 77. A case of non-delivery may or may not be a case of loss. If it is a case of loss, then notice is required. [p. 573, col. 1.]

Application for revision against an order of the Munsif, Biswan Sitapur, dated the 28th February 1925.

Mr. G. N. Mukerji, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—This is an application under s. 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act. The plaintiff was consignee of a box containing bales of cloth, delivered to the E. I. Railway at Howrah, consigned to the plaintiff at Biswan on the B. & N. W. Railway. When the consignment reached Biswan, the box was broken and some of the cloth was missing. The learned Munsif, sitting as a Small Cause Court, decreed the plaintiff's claim in part. He gave a decree for Rs. 34-8-9 with interest proportionate to costs. The present application raises a single point of law, namely, that the plaintiff's suit ought to have been dismissed because the Railway was entitled to notice under s. 77 of the Railways Act. This point was decided in reliance on Seth Mulchand v. Agent, G. I. P. Ry. Co. (1). The report I have seen is in 79 Ind. Cas. 602. That ruling had been considered and dissented from by a learned Judge of this Court in B. & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Special Manager, Court of Wards, Balrampur (2).

I do not propose to go through the authorities. It is sufficient to say that notice under s. 77 is required in all cases where the loss of goods is alleged. If the plaintiff alleges non-delivery, without stating what the cause of non-delivery is, and it appears upon trial that in fact non-delivery was due to loss, then the plaintiff fails if he has not given notice under s. 77. A case of non-delivery may or may not be a case of loss. If it is a case of loss, then notice is required. In the present case it is admitted that no notice was given. The case is one of loss. The issue was: "Are the defendants or any of them liable for the loss of goods and for profit as claimed." I, therefore, find that notice was necessary and that the case ought to have been dismissed because there was no notice. Although I do not propose to discuss or review the cases, I have looked at a considerable number of cases cited by the Counsel for the appellant. There are Cawnpore Cotton Mills Co., Ltd. v. Great Indian Peninsular Railway (3), Nadiar Chand Shah v. Wood (4), Assam Bengal Railway Co. Ltd. v. Radhika Mohan Nath (5), Madras & Southern Marhatta Railway Co., Ltd. v. Hardoss Bawmali Doss (6), East Indian Railway Co., Jethmull Ram- nand (7) and East Indian Railway Co. v. Gopiram Gourishankar (8). I have also considered such cases as support the plaintiff decree-holder, but I find that they have either been overruled or dissented from by other Courts.

I set aside the judgment of the Small Cause Court and dismiss the suit.

Vendor and purchaser—Sale of goods—Breach by purchaser—Part purchase-money not appropriated to loss, forfeiture of.

In the case of an alleged breach of contract by a buyer, the seller cannot forfeit any amount paid by the buyer as part purchase-money, where the seller has not claimed to appropriate the amount against any loss suffered by him in consequence of the breach, but has rather expressly reserved his right to institute a suit in the proper Court for the recovery of any amount that may be due to him [p. 575, col. 1.]

Application against a decree of the Small Cause Court, Karachi.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887 against the decree passed by the learned Small Cause Court Judge, Karachi, dismissing the plaintiffs' suit. The suit relates to the return of Rs. 750 and interest thereon said to have been paid by the plaintiffs (applicants) to the defendants as part purchase-money of 250 feet boring rods and 250 feet tubes which the defendants had failed to supply.

It appears that Visram Narsi and Company had negotiated with the defendants (opponents) for purchase of the boring rods and the tubes. There was some correspondence between the parties about the rates at which the order for rods and tubes of certain sizes and lengths could be placed with the home suppliers, resulting in a telegram being sent by Visram and Co. agreeing to buy at those rates. On the 29th September 1919 the defendants wrote to Visram and Company that they were in receipt of their telegram ordering 250 feet boring rods 10 feet in length and 250 feet tubes at 10 feet length which they were ordering for them from England. They asked for a cheque of Rs. 500 as an advance against this order. Visram and Company handed over this letter to the plaintiffs as they placed this order with the defendants on behalf of the plaintiffs. On the 15th October, 1919 the plaintiffs informed defendants that they were the parties responsible for the rods and tubes and sent them a cheque for Rs. 250 only. On the 9th December 1919 the defendants wrote to plaintiffs that they had received intimation from London that the order for 250 feet of boring rods and 250 feet tubes 10 feet long had been booked at certain rates and that they expected that the rods and tubes would be shipped during that month. On the 22nd January 1920 the defendants sent a bill to the plaintiffs for Rs. 417-10-6 as the value of 250 feet boring rods and intimated to them that Rs. 250 paid in advance would be credited to the plaintiffs against the cost of the tubes. On the 4th February 1920 they again sent an amended bill claiming only Rs. 217-10-6 instead of Rs. 417-10-6 after giving credit for Rs. 200 out of Rs. 250 in their hands and stated that the balance of Rs. 50 were, being retained towards the cost of the tubes. By their letter of the 9th February 1920 the plaintiffs requested the defendants not to insist on the immediate payment of Rs. 217-10-6 and promised to pay the whole amount when the tubes had arrived. But in view of the letter of the defendants dated the 20th February 1920 insisting on immediate payment of the bill for the rods and claiming 9 per cent interest if the payment was delayed and also in view of the defendants having again submitted an amended bill for Rs. 317-10-6 claiming their right to retain Rs. 150 instead of Rs. 50 as deposit against the tubes, the plaintiffs in order to avoid payment of any interest sent a sum of Rs. 500 to the defendants towards the purchase price of rods and the tubes. It appears that in the meantime the tubes had arrived but instead of the tubes being only 25 each of 10 feet length they were 250 tubes of 10 feet length or 2500 feet of tubes. On the 30th March 1920 the defendants claimed £561-13-1 as the value of the tubes. The plaintiffs naturally demurred to taking delivery of 2500 feet of tubes instead of 250 feet only. Some correspondence followed. The defendants contended that the contract was for 2500 feet of tubes and that their letter of the 29th September 1919 was written under a mistake. They relied on certain previous correspondence carried on by them with Visram Narsi to show that they had offered to sell to Visram 250 tubes of 10 feet length and not 250 feet of tubes. They asserted that the plaintiffs were bound to take delivery of 250 tubes of 10 feet length. Ultimately the defendants, however, offered without prejudice to their legal rights, to tender to the plaintiffs 25 tubes on payment of certain extra charges and intimated to them that rods and the tubes had been despatched to Karachi and that delivery could be had of the goods on payment of the balance of the amount due to Messrs. William Jack and Company. Unfortunately however for the parties, the rods were lost in transit and Messrs. William Jacks and Company were not in a position to deliver the rods with the result that no delivery either of the rods or the tubes was effected. Some further correspondence followed and ultimately the plaintiffs filed this suit for the recovery of Rs. 750 paid by them to the defendants with interest thereon.

The learned Judge held that the order placed with the defendants was not for 250 feet tubes but for 250 tubes each tube being 10 feet in length and that as the plaintiffs had repudiated the contract before the tubes had arrived by refusing to take delivery of the rods the defendants were absolved from proving that they were in a position to perform their part of the contract by delivering the rods and that the plaintiffs having committed the breach of the contract were not entitled to recover the amount. The learned Judge has evidently treated the whole sum of Rs. 750 as deposit or earnest-money liable to be forfeited on failure of the plaintiffs to perform their part of the contract.

With regard to the first point, whether the contract was for 250 feet tubes or for 250 tubes of 10 feet each, taking into consideration the whole correspondence coupled with the uncontradicted evidence of Visram that he had personally explained to the defendants his wants, the fact that for 250 feet boring rods one would expect to buy only 250 feet tubes and not 2500 feet tubes, the fact that only a small sum of Rs. 250 was, in the first instance, expected as an advance against the price and also the fact that when the rods arrived, the defendants were prepared to retain only a sum of Rs. 50 as a deposit against the price of the tubes, we think that the learned Judge was in error in holding that the letter of the 29th September 1919 which confirmed the terms of the contract between the parties was written under a mistake, and did not correctly express the contract between the parties. We think that the learned Judge was also in error in treating the whole sum of Rs. 750 as a deposit liable to forfeiture on failure of plaintiffs to perform their contract. Rupees 500 were admittedly paid as part purchase-money. The defendants had not claimed to appropriate this amount against any loss which they had or could have suffered in consequence of the alleged breach of contract. They expressly reserved their right to institute a suit in a proper Court for the recovery of any amount that may be due to them. Under the circumstances the claim of Rs. 500 at least could not be dismissed.

We also cannot understand the finding of the learned Judge that the plaintiffs had refused to take delivery of the rods at the proper time and the defendants were, therefore, absolved from proving that they were in a position to perform their part of the contract in respect of the rods. There is nothing in the correspondence to show that the plaintiffs declined to take delivery of the rods. All that they asked was that they should be permitted to pay the purchase-money when the tubes arrived. The defendants never treated this as repudiation of the contract, but asked for payment of interest, and in order to avoid payment of interest, the plaintiffs at once sent them a sum of Rs. 500 which was in excess of the sum demanded. The plaintiffs were in no way to blame for not taking delivery either of the rods which were lost in transit or of the tubes which were tendered to them subject to the payment of certain extra charges for which they were not liable and are entitled to the return of their money.

We set aside the decree of the lower Court and pass a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for Rs. 836-6-0 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum on Rs. 750 from date of suit to payment and costs throughout.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 11-A—Civ. Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 100, 101, 103—Landlord and tenant—Decree for arrears of rent—Sale of holding—Purchase by landlord—Order under r. 101 restoring person dispossessed to possession—Suit by landlord to recover possession of holding on ground of abandonment—Limitation.

The suit contemplated in r. 103 of O. XXI of the C. P. C. is a suit by a person who is kept out of possession of property purchased in execution of a decree and claims possession under his auction-purchase. The rule does not concern itself with any other cause of action which such person, apart from his character as auction-purchaser, may have against the defendant. If a suit is brought under r. 103 within the statutory period, the right to bring a suit to establish the claim of the plaintiff as auction-purchaser for possession of the property is lost. But if he has any other cause of action against the defendant it cannot be said that the rule bars his suit based on such cause of action. [p. 576, cols. 1 & 2.]

Plaintiff obtained a rent-decree against a tenant and in execution of that decree purchased and obtained possession of the holding of the judgment-debtor. Defendant thereupon made an application under r. 100 of O. XXI of the C. P. C. alleging dispossession in execution of the decree and praying for restoration of possession. This application was allowed and more than a year after the date of the order allowing the application plaintiff brought a suit for possession of the holding on the allegation that his tenant having parted with the holding wrongfully, the plaintiff was entitled to re-enter.

Held, that plaintiff's suit was not one under the provisions of r. 103 of O. XXI of the C. P. C. but was based on an entirely different cause of action and that, therefore, it was not governed by Art. 11-A of Sch. I to the Limitation Act and was consequently not barred by time. [p. 577, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This case raises an interesting question which does not seem to have come up for consideration before. The facts are that the plaintiff-respondents obtained a rent decree against the heirs of the tenant Gaganeswar Mondal and in execution of that decree purchased and took possession of the holding in suit. The defendants thereupon alleging dispossession made an application under O. XXI, r. 100, C. P. C., for restoration of possession. On the 26th June 1917 order was passed in their favour under O. XXI, r. 101. The plaintiffs instituted the present suit in May 1920. It is accordingly maintained by the appellants that the suit is barred under Art. 11-A of the Limitation Act, having been brought more than a year after the order under O. XXI, r. 101 was passed. The Trial Court gave effect to this contention but the learned District Judge held that the plaintiffs' suit is not barred under the above Article of the Limitation Act. In this appeal the appellants argue on the same line as adopted by the learned Munsif. What happened was this: The plaintiffs as decree-holder auction-purchasers took possession of the holding which they purchased in execution of the decree but were dispossessed therefrom by order of Court by the defendants claiming to possess the property on their own account and not on behalf of the judgment-debtor. The plaintiffs thereupon became aware that their tenant had parted with the holding wrongfully and brought the present suit for ejectment. The question raised in the suit is whether the tenants had a transferable or a non-transferable interest in the holding.

Order XXI r. 100, contemplates a case where a person has been dispossessed by an auction-purchaser taking possession of the property through the help of the Court. He then complains to the Court of such dispossession and the Court after making a summary investigation if it holds that the applicant was in possession of the property on his own account and not on account of the judgment-debtor, directs under r. 101 that possession be given back to the applicant. The party against whom this order is passed may then institute a suit under O. XXI, r. 103 to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property. Reading these sections together it cannot be questioned that the suit contemplated by r. 103 is a suit by a person who is kept out of possession of the property purchased in execution of the decree and claims possession under his auction-purchase. It does not concern itself with any other cause of action which such person apart from his character as auction-purchaser may have against the defendant. If a suit is not brought under r. 103 within the statutory period the right to bring a suit to establish the claim of the plaintiff as auction-purchaser for possession of the property is lost. But if he has any other cause of action against the opposite party, it cannot be said that this provision in the Chapter relating to execution of decrees bars his suit based on such cause of action. In the present case the suit is brought by the plaintiffs not in their character as auction-purchasers but as landlords. In the plaint, the cause of action in the suit is based not on the adverse decision against them in proceedings under r. 100, but on the transfer by the tenants of their non-transferable occupancy holding the information of which he got during the course of the execution proceedings. The causes of action of the two suits one under r. 103 and another as brought by the plaintiffs must, therefore, be different. In a suit under r. 103, the cause of action must be the adverse decision passed under r. 101. But the present suit is based upon a different state of facts. The cause of action is not the loss of possession by the defendants from the plaintiffs in connection with the execution proceedings but the fact that the tenants had unlawfully transferred a non-transferable occupancy holding to the defendants and hence the holding is treated as abandoned under the Bengal Tenancy Act and the landlords are, therefore, entitled to possession of the holding which the defendants are in possession of as trespassers. But it is argued by the learned Vakil for the appellant that under s. 22, Bengal Tenancy Act, the landlords having purchased the holding in execution of the rent decree the tenancy got merged in the landlord's superior interest and, therefore, the only remedy the landlords now have is to proceed as auction-purchasers under O. XXI, r. 103 their character as landlords having been lost by virtue of the purchase of the holding. We do not think that this contention is right. It is the case of the defendants that the tenant had a transferable occupancy holding. It further appears that the defendants are in possession of the land for more than 12 years. He accordingly contends that the plaintiffs are not entitled to possession because the tenants had a transferable interest in the holding and that the defendants have acquired the rights of the tenant in it. The present suit as brought by the plaintiffs is totally unconnected with the execution proceedings. It seems that the plaintiffs have abandoned all their right in the execution sale, it having been found against them that the defendants are entitled to immediate possession. In these circumstances we do not think that the present suit is barred under Art. 11-A of the Limitation Act.

The appeals accordingly fail and are dismissed with costs two gold mohurs in each case.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 35—Costs—Discretion of Court—Interference by Appellate Court.

The matter of costs is discretionary with the Court of Trial and the High Court will not interfere in appeal with an order as to costs unless it is plainly irregular and contrary to principle.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated the 29th February 1924.

Mr. H. K. Ghose, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Ram Bharose Lal and Raj Narain Shukla, for the Respondents. 31:118

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal. Plaintiffs are appellants. It relates to costs only. The plaintiffs sued for possession of certain lands alienated by their father and grandfather, etc., and for a declaration that certain decrees were not binding on them. The following issues were framed:—

1. Were the deeds in suit executed for immoral purposes?

2. Or were they executed for legal necessity and the payment of antecedent debts?

3. To what relief are the plaintiffs entitled?

3. Were the terms of interest and compound interest in the deeds in suit also justified by legal necessity? See this issue be tried in this suit?

Issue No. 1 was decided against the plaintiffs. The Court said that they produced an unnecessarily large number of witnesses, but that they spoke to general bad character and not to the facts of the debts in suit having been contracted for immoral purposes. On issue No. 2, the burden lay upon the defendants and they produced evidence. Plaintiffs produced eighteen witnesses on this point. The decision was in favour of the defendants. On issue No. 4, I do not think that any evidence was produced, but the point was argued on behalf of the plaintiffs. The decision was in favour of the defendants.

On the 3rd issue, it was decided that two out of the four deeds were binding on the plaintiffs, and a declaration was refused. As regards the other two deeds, in respect of which decrees had been passed, it was decided that the plaintiffs must be given an opportunity to save the family property. Accordingly, a decree for redemption was passed, under which the plaintiffs could get possession if they paid a large sum to the defendants. As regards costs, the order was "There having been partial success on both sides I order that the parties bear their own costs."

The matter of costs is discretionary with the Court of Trial, and I should not be ready to interfere with an order of costs, unless it was plainly irregular and contrary to principle. In the present case, the order as regards costs appears to be eminently reasonable. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Oaths Act (X of 1878), s. 11—Agreement to be bound by oath—Failure to take oath, effect of—Procedure.

Under s. 11 of the Oaths Act, the evidence given on oath is as against a person who offered to be bound conclusive proof of the matters stated. But if the party who agrees to take an oath declines afterwards or fails to take the oath, the Court may only take that circumstance into consideration in deciding the case. The absence of an oath or refusal to take the oath would not import into the case evidence which was not otherwise adduced before it. [p. 578, col. 2.]

On an application by the defendant in a suit, to set aside an order refusing to set aside an ex parte decree, the plaintiff agreed to abide by the oath of the defendant that he was not aware of the institution of the suit. The oath, however, was not taken on account of plaintiff's default to be present to hear the oath. The Court, thereupon, dismissed the application:

Held, that the Court ought to have called upon the defendant to prove his allegations by oral evidence, that on his declining to do so, it should have dismissed the application for want of evidence, and that it was improper to dismiss the application without affording the defendant such opportunity. Umayammai v. Muthiah Nadar, 17 M. L. J. 99, distinguished.

Petition, under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tellicherry, dated the 25th September 1922, in S. E. A. No. 268 of 1922, in S. C. S. No. 343 of 1921.

Mr V. P. Karunakara Nambiar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. O. T. Govindan Nambiar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise the order of the Subordinate Judge of Tellicherry passed on a petition by the defendants to set aside an ex parte decree passed against them. The defendants filed an application to set aside the ex parte decree which was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on 16th August 1922. The present application is to set aside the order passed on the previous application and also to set aside the ex parte decree. After the application was filed both parties filed a joint affidavit in which the defendants consented to take oath and the plaintiff agreed to abide by the oath of the defendants. On the date when the oath was to be taken by them, the plaintiff and the defendants appeared and they were asked to go and bathe before taking the oath. The defendants came back after the bath but the plaintiff did not return in consequence of which the oath was not taken and the Commissioner made a return to that effect. The Subordinate Judge heard the parties and dismissed the application of the petitioners.

It is contended by Mr. Karunakaran Nambiar for the petitioners that the Subordinate Judge should have set aside the ex parte decree as the plaintiff failed to be present to hear the oath taken and he relied upon a case in Umayammai v. Muthiah Nadar (1). In that case it was held that if a party who has agreed to be bound prevents the oath being taken the other party is entitled to a decree. On the strength of this ruling the petitioners want an order in their favour. That case has no application to the present, for in that case it was the plaintiff who ought to have adduced evidence of certain facts to prove his case and in the absence of evidence the Court was justified in dismissing the suit. Under the Oaths Act, s. 11, the evidence so given shall as against a person who offered to be bound as aforesaid be conclusive proof of the matters stated; if a party attacks them as regards any fact, the oath is proof of that fact and the Court is bound to accept that as proof of that fact. But if the party who agrees to take an oath declines afterwards or fails to take the oath the Court may only take that circumstance into consideration in deciding the case. The absence of an oath or refusal to take an oath would not import into the case evidence which was not otherwise adduced before it. This view was held by a Bench of this Court in a case reported as Ulagappa Chettiar v. Periakaruppan Chetty (2). In the present case the defendants failed to take the oath that they were not aware of the institution of the suit and that they were not liable to the plaintiff. The failure to take the oath would not and could not be treated as evidence that they were not aware of the institution of the suit and they were not liable to the plaintiff for the amount claimed by him. The failure to take the oath was due to the plaintiff's conduct in not appearing before the temple to hear the oath taken. In the circumstances, the lower Court ought to have called upon the defendants to prove their allegations by oral evidence and if they declined to do so, the Court should have dismissed the application, for want of evidence on their part. Such a course was not pursued in this case. The learned Sub-Judge heard the parties and dismissed the application. I think this course was not a proper course to adopt in a case of this kind. I, therefore, set aside the order dismissing the petition and directing the Subordinate Judge to restore the petition to file and dispose of it according to law. In so doing the Subordinate Judge would direct the petitioners to pay the costs of the plaintiff incurred by their negligence without reference to the ultimate result of the case. The costs of this petition will be provided for in the order that the Subordinate Judge may pass on the petition.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 35—Landlord and tenant—Occupancy tenancy—Custom of transferability—Village note, entry in, admissibility of—Presumption of correctness—Appeal, second—Finding of fact, interference with.

An entry in a village note prepared by the Settlement Officer relating to the custom of transferability of occupancy rights is admissible in evidence under s. 35 of the Evidence Act, but it is only a piece of evidence and there is no presumption of correctness attached to it. [p. 579, col. 2; p. 580, col. 1.]

A finding of fact based upon evidence on the record cannot be disturbed in second appeal. [p. 580, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Patna, dated the 20th June 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, Patna, dated the 11th September 1920.

Messrs. L. N. Singh and S. N. Rai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and N. K. Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-respondents for ejectment of the defendants on the ground of their having purchased certain occupancy holding which were not transferable by custom. The holdings originally belonged to the defendant No. 4. He sold them to the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 under three sale-deeds one dated the 13th

July 1915 and the other two dated the 3rd August 1915. The plaintiffs' case is that there was no custom of transferability of occupancy holdings without the consent of the landlord and, therefore, their old tenant having abandoned the holdings, the purchasers had no right to remain in possession and that the plaintiffs, were entitled to eject them.

The defence taken was that there was a custom of transferability in the village and that the purchasers had been recognised by the plaintiffs as their tenants.

The Trial Court came to the conclusion that the evidence adduced by the defendants established a custom of transferability in the village. As regards the question of recognition he did not come to a direct finding that the transferees had been recognised by the landlords, but he observed that having come to the finding that there was a custom of transferability of occupancy holdings it was not open to the landlords to refuse recognition.

There was an appeal against this decree to the Subordinate Judge and he on a consideration of the evidence in the case has come to the conclusion that the defendants have failed to prove custom of transferability of occupancy holdings in the village and also that they have failed to prove that the transferees were recognised by the plaintiffs. He accordingly decreed the suit.

The defendants come in second appeal to this Court and it has been argued on their behalf that the learned Subordinate Judge has not considered the cumulative effect of all the documents and the oral evidence on the question of custom. The learned Subordinate Judge has considered each one of the documents produced by the defendants to prove custom. There were nine instances of transfer upon which the defendants relied. The learned Subordinate Judge has considered each one of these instances and has held that they did not prove custom. He has also considered the oral evidence and he has come to the finding that the witnesses examined by the defendants did not prove the custom alleged by the defendants. It cannot be said that he has not taken the effect of the entire evidence into consideration. It has been argued that the village note prepared by the Settlement Officer and admitted in evidence in this case under s. 35 of the Evidence Act has not been given proper effect to by the learned Subordinate Judge. The village note says that "the custom of transfer of occupancy rights is admitted by the landlords. The landlord does not realise any salami from the transferee but he realises the arrears due from the holding from the transferee." This entry in the village note is only a piece of evidence. There is no presumption of correctness attached to it and as a piece of evidence it was considered by the learned Subordinate Judge who came to the conclusion that standing alone this village note was sufficient to establish the plea of the defendants. The learned Subordinate Judge was entitled to give such weight to this piece of evidence as in the circumstances of the case he considered proper and this is not a ground in second appeal for disturbing the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge. Having regard to the finding arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge, in my opinion, it is not open to the appellants to say that he has come to a wrong conclusion. His findings are based upon evidence on the record and cannot be disturbed. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

It is difficult to lay down any general rule as to what should be the result where the right of speech is denied to a member in a general meeting of the share-holders. [ibid.]

The proper test to lay down is to consider the facts and circumstances of each case and to determine whether the denial of the right of speech is sufficient to vitiate the resolution under the circumstances of that case. [p. 588, cols. 1 & 2.]

Those who refuse unnecessarily out of sheer impatience to listen for any reasonable length of time, to any arguments in support of the opposite views incur a grave risk in adopting this attitude of exposing the very resolution, which they may be anxious to adopt, to the scrutiny of the Court and to render it liable to be set aside. The very purpose which they may have in view may be defeated on account of such conduct. [p. 588, col. 2.]

The Court should incline more in favour of the validity of the proceedings than in favour of their invalidity, if the fact which would go to invalidate the proceedings is not established beyond reasonable doubt. [p. 589, col. 2.]

It is futile for any member to raise a general objection to the validity of notes, without indicating the nature of the objection, and without any attempt to particularise the votes objected to. It can only be interpreted as a sort of invitation on the part of the member to adjourn the proceedings of the meeting to examine the votes over again. [p. 590, col. 1.]

Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Pratt, dated the 14th December 1923.

FACTS.—In 1923, a joint stock concern known as the Tata Industrial Bank, Limited, being in a financially unsatisfactory condition negotiated with the Central Bank of India for amalgamation of its assets and liabilities with the latter, and the scheme which was agreed upon between the two concerns was laid before a general meeting of the share-holders of the Tata Bank, called specially for that very purpose, for final approval and sanction. The plaintiff-appellant, who was one of the share-holders present in the meeting, raised some points of order which were overruled, and also proposed amendments to the resolution, and was prevented from speaking on them by the members of the meeting. He then brought a suit on those very grounds for a declaration that the proceedings of that meeting be declared invalid and for an injunction. His suit was dismissed by the Trial Court.

Sir Chimanlal Setalvad (with him Mr. Kanga, Advocate-General), for the Appellant.

Mr. B. J. Desai (with him Mr. Engineer), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Shah, Actg. C. J.—[After stating the facts the judgment proceeded:] I shall first take up the points relating to the notice convening the extraordinary general meeting on July 19. In order to appreciate them, it is material to state here that the capital of the Tata Bank was seven and a half crores of rupees, consisting of ten lakhs shares of Rs. 75 each. In respect of each share at the material time Rs. 22-8-0 were called in with the result that at that date its paid up capital was two and a quarter crores. The balance sheet of this Bank published before these negotiations commenced relates to the year ending with March 31, 1923. It appears from the evidence that about the end of June 1923, the condition of the Bank was not satisfactory. The deposits in the Bank at the end of March 1923 amounted to about Rs. 5,95,00,000 while at the end of June 1923 they had gone down to 3,37,00,000 of rupees. It is also in evidence that the Manager of the Bank had found it difficult to carry on the business of the Bank. At this time the Central Bank had a capital of one crore of rupees consisting of 2,00,000 shares of Rs. 50 each. In respect of each share Rs. 25 were paid. Thus, in June 1923, the condition of that Bank was fifty lacs of rupees paid up capital and thirty lacs reserve fund, with deposits amounting nearly to thirteen crores of rupees. It is also in evidence that the market value of the Central Bank shares was Rs. 30 and a little over, and the market value of the Tata Bank shares was Rs. 14-8-0 per share. It may be remembered that in respect of the Central Bank shares the share-holders were liable to pay Rs. 25 per share and in respect of the Tata Bank shares the share-holders were liable to pay Rs. 52-8-0 per share. This was the state of the Banks when the negotiations commenced. The result of the negotiations is to be found in the agreement which came to be signed on July 5, 1923, by Mr. Commissariat and the Central Bank of India, Limited. According to that agreement the Central Bank was to take over all the assets and liabilities of the Tata Bank, was to increase its capital so as to be able to give one share of Rs. 50 with Rs. 25 paid up in respect of two shares of the Tata Bank to the share-holders of that Bank. It was also a part of the agreement that if a number of share-holders not exceeding one-third of the share-holders did not wish to take shares in the Central Bank they were to be paid at the rate of Rs. 15 per share or such amount as may be fixed under the scheme of arbitration which was provided for in the agreement in accordance with the requirements of s. 213 of the Indian Companies Act. There were other provisions with regard to the payment of the officers and other employees of the Tata Bank, but in substance the effect of the agreement was as I have just stated.

After this provisional agreement was discussed by the Directors the notice in question was issued. I have already referred to the terms of that notice, and along with that notice a circular was issued. It is pointed out in that circular which was issued by the orders of the Board of Directors, that there was an offer from the Central Bank of India, Limited, to take over the Tata Bank as a going concern on terms of allotting one share of the Central Bank of India, Limited, of the nominal value of Rs. 50 credited as paid up to the extent of Rs. 25 for every two shares in the Tata Industrial Bank, Limited, of the nominal value of Rs. 75 on which the sum of Rs. 22-8-0 per share was paid up. The Directors had called for the opinion of the auditors of both the Banks to examine the financial position of the two Banks and it was stated in the circular that the auditors were satisfied that the offer made was fair and equitable and that two shares of the Tata Bank were worth one share of the Central Bank. The result of the amalgamation was stated in the circular to be that the uncalled liability of Rs. 105 which then existed on two shares in the Tata Industrial Bank, Limited, would be exchanged for an uncalled or contingent liability of Rs. 25 per share in the Central Bank of India, Limited.

A reference to the agreement was made in the circular in the following terms:—

“An agreement for carrying the proposed amalgamation into effect has been entered into between Mr. Hormasji Framji Commissariat a share-holder of your Company on behalf of your Company and the Central Bank of India Limited, which agreement is conditional upon your sanction of the scheme of amalgamation and a copy of the conditional agreement which bears date July 5, 1923, is open for inspection by any member of your Company at the registered office.”

The attention was drawn in the circular to s. 213 of the Indian Companies Act and to the rights of the share-holders under that section and it was pointed out that those dissentient share-holders, who would not like to take up the shares of the Central Bank of India, Limited, would be paid as provided, i.e., Rs. 15 per share or such amount as may be fixed by arbitration in the manner prescribed under s. 213. It also mentioned that the Central Bank was not bound to proceed with the scheme of amalgamation if more than one-third of the share-holders dissented.

These were the materials circulated to the members and they had an opportunity under the terms of the circular to inspect the agreement if they were minded to do so.

With reference to this notice it is urged:—

(1) That the interest of the Directors in this arrangement has not been disclosed;

(2) that the difference of opinion among the Directors with reference to this scheme, as indicated in the minutes of the Directors' meeting, was not communicated to the share-holders;

(3) that the basis of the calculation adopted by the two Banks in arriving at this result, or rather in fixing the price of the Tata Bank concern, has not been disclosed; and

(4) that it was defective because a copy of the agreement was not sent with the circular to the share-holders.

As regards the point relating to the interest of the Directors, it has been suggested vaguely that the Directors themselves were to benefit under this arrangement, and that there was some kind of secret understanding which was not disclosed. Beyond a suspicion on the part of the plaintiffs that there was some secret arrangement between the Directors of the Tata Bank and the Managing Director or Directors of the Central Bank, there is nothing to show any secret arrangement. So far as the record is concerned it is clear that there is no evidence of it, and Mr. Pochkhanawalla, the Managing Director of the Central Bank, stated definitely as follows:—“There are no terms of the amalgamation not contained in the agreement of July 5, 1923.” It is true that if there was any kind of secret arrangement between the Directors of the two Banks; it must be disclosed in the notice and, if it has not been disclosed, the notice would be bad. Such an arrangement cannot be assumed and, if that suggestion is to be made with any effect, it must be proved. It is material to note on this point that in the plaint there is no allegation in the sense that the Directors were going to make any secret profit or to get any secret benefit out of this transaction.

The second thing suggested against the Directors relates to their liability in respect of certain debts due to the Tata Bank. The liability of the Directors is indicated in the balance sheet of March 31, 1923, and is stated thus:—

"Debts due by Directors of the Bank jointly with other persons or against securities and considered good including debts due by the Joint Stock Companies guaranteed by their agents, a Director of the Bank being a member of the firm of agents."

In respect of this liability it is clear that the effect of the agreement is merely to substitute the Central Bank as a creditor instead of the Tata Bank, and there is no suggestion and certainly there is no evidence to show that the Directors were in any way placed more favourably with reference to their liability for these debts under the agreement than they were before the agreement with reference to the Tata Bank. Therefore, so far as the suggestion that the notice is bad because the Directors' interest or any secret arrangement with regard to the Directors' interest has not been disclosed in the notice is concerned, it seems to me that the contention of the appellants must fail for the simple reason that there is no evidence whatever on the point in favour of the plaintiffs. On the contrary there is clear and reliable evidence to the effect that there was no arrangement between the two Banks except that disclosed and stated in the terms of the agreement of July 5, 1923.

I have so far dealt with the question of the Directors' interest which is said not to have been disclosed and also incidentally with the point that there was an undisclosed agreement which should have been stated in the notice.

The next point is that the difference of opinion among the Directors should have been referred to in the notice. I am quite unable to accept this contention. It is true that apparently there was some difference of opinion among the Directors up to a certain stage, but they all unanimously resolved on June 27 to refer this matter for the consideration of the share-holders. It may be that there was some difference of opinion among the Directors; but I do not see how the omission to mention that circumstance can be said to constitute a defect in the notice. There is no rule of law or prudence which compels a reference in the notice to such differences of opinion among the Directors.

The next point is that the basis of the calculation, upon which, broadly speaking, the terms of this arrangement were settled, is not disclosed in the notice. On this point I do not consider it necessary to go into the details of the figures. They have been explained by Mr. Pochkhanawalla in his evidence and the learned Trial Judge has referred to that evidence as follows:—

"266 lakhs as assets as per the balance sheet as at March 31, 1923, plus two lakhs by way of profits, and four lakhs by way of appreciation of Government securities, to be added. That would make a total of 272 lakhs, and making allowance for depreciation in industrial investments prior to March 31, 1923, balance 252 lakhs net assets. Less depreciation made for the purpose of amalgamation, 22 lakhs depreciation in buildings, 15 lakhs depreciation in industrial investments since March, 1923, ten lakhs for loss of interest on capital locked up in buildings not let and to meet the claims for compensation by employees, and five lakhs for contingencies. This would make a total of 52 lakhs leaving a balance of 200 lakhs and the assets which form the basis of the calculation for the purposes of the amalgamation scheme."

The learned Judge has referred to these different items in detail, and has expressed his opinion thus:—

"It is clear they refer to details which there was no obligation to set forth in the notice, and which would have been elicited by any intelligent share-holder at the meeting."

I agree with this view of the learned Judge. Apart from that I am of opinion that there is no proviso which compels any reference to the statement of these details in a notice convening the meeting. It seems to me that what was stated in the circular and notice was sufficient. I do not say that the basis of this calculation could not have been referred to in the circular. If the Directors of the Tata Bank thought it proper to do so, they could have done so. But the fact that they have not done so does not, in my opinion, constitute any defect in the notice, much less such a defect as would invalidate it. The information given in the circular was broadly speaking what the share holders would require as to how they would stand under the proposed agreement with reference to their interest in the Bank. It was made clear to them in the circular that so far as they were concerned they were getting the equivalent of their shares with this added difference that the outstanding liability of Rs. 105 on every two shares would be reduced to Rs. 25. It cannot be said that anything more was necessary. It seems to me that the basis which has been disclosed by Pochkhanawalla in his evidence is merely a sort of rough calculation for the guidance of the Banks. But there is nothing on the record to show that that basis was accepted in writing on any occasion. Broadly speaking the basis so far as the Tata Bank was concerned was that all the assets such as they were at the date of this agreement were to be taken over by the Central Bank, subject to their liability to give one share of the Central Bank for every two shares of the Tata Bank with Rs. 25 paid up in respect of that share, and in the case of those share-holders, who were not prepared to accept the shares in the Central Bank they were to get at the rate of Rs. 15 or such further sum as may be determined by arbitration in accordance with the provisions of s. 213 of the Indian Companies Act. It clearly gave notice to the share-holders as to what was proposed to be done. The assets of the Bank were disclosed in the last balance-sheet; and it was made clear that these were to be taken over by the Central Bank subject to their getting this return. If any further information was needed, as pointed out by the learned Judge, it could have been elicited at the meeting; but if the share-holders were satisfied that no further information was required, that this was a good scheme as regards their interests, it was open to them to accept it without any further information as to the basis of the calculation. I think that the omission to refer to this basis in the notice does not in any sense constitute a defect in the notice.

The last point with reference to the notice is that the copy of the agreement was not circulated along with the notice to the members. The agreement is referred to in the special resolution which is proposed for consideration; and it is also stated that the agreement will be available for inspection at any time to the share-holders, when they would care to have inspection of it. It is also in evidence that this agreement was on the table at the meeting of July 19, though it has been contended on behalf of the appellants that this agreement was not available for reference at the meeting. It seems to me that on the evidence of Mr. Pochkhanawalla it must be held that the agreement was kept on the table for reference at the meeting. Apart from that, I am unable to hold that the omission to send a copy of the agreement to each share-holder with the notice constitutes a defect in the notice.

I have so far dealt with the specific points urged as regards the notice. It may be stated generally that under s. 79 of the Indian Companies Act read with Article 68 of the Articles of Association of the Tata Bank, all that was required by law to be stated in the notice was the general nature of the business. The general nature of the business was clearly indicated in the notice and sufficient details were given, which were necessary for the purpose of enabling the share-holders to consider the question. I may state that several cases have been cited with reference to the point of defective notice. I shall mention only Alexander v. Simpson (1), Kaye v. Croydon Tramways Co. Ltd. (2) and Tiessen v. Henderson (3).

The net result is that where there is any secret agreement or any interest of the Directors in the agreement not disclosed in the circular, or in the notice, the Court will view with strictness any omission to refer to it in the notice or in the circular accompanying the notice; and the omission to mention any secret arrangement would constitute a serious defect in the notice. But where no secret agreement is proved or suggested and where there is no indication that there was anything to conceal the Court will as far as possible take a liberal view of the terms of the notice and will not upset the proceedings taken on a notice for some defect, which might have been avoided, but which was not avoided on account of some honest mistake. On this point, I think the following observation of

"I do not think that a notice calling a meeting ought to be treated very critically in order to see whether we cannot pick out some defect in it."

In the present case looking at the notice and the accompanying circular broadly with reference to the facts of the case, I am satisfied that there is no such defect in this notice such as could invalidate it. I concede that more could have been stated in the circular: but there is no essential matter, which can be said to have been omitted in the present case.

I shall now deal with the objections which have been raised with reference to the special resolution. It has been urged that there is no express power in the Memorandum of Association of the Tata Bank to effect amalgamation, that there is no amalgamation between the two Banks in the legal sense of the word and as the special resolution purports to effect amalgamation between the two Banks, it is illegal and invalid. It is urged that the resolution does not satisfy the requirements of s. 203 (2) of the Indian Companies Act, in so far as the resolution as to the voluntary winding up of the Company, is mixed up with other matters. The argument is that there should have been separate resolutions for the voluntary winding up and other matters relating to the agreement. Lastly, it is urged that as the special resolution does not in terms comply with the provisions of s. 213 in so far as it does not expressly authorise the liquidators to receive compensation for disposal among the share-holders it is an illegal resolution.

As regards the first objection, it is enough to say that this action is taken under the statutory right, which every limited Company has under s. 213 of effecting such an arrangement, and not under any special power conferred upon the Company by the Memorandum of Association. Though a reference has been made to the express power of this kind contained in the Memorandum of Association of the Central Bank of India, Ltd., I do not think that it is necessary to say more on this point, beyond this that if the Tata Bank and the other Bank were both inclined to give effect to such an arrangement, it was perfectly open to the Tata Bank under s. 213 of the Indian Companies Act to sanction a scheme of this nature.

The next point about the amalgamation is also based upon an incorrect appreciation of the meaning of the word. As regards the meaning of this word it is enough to refer to two cases. In Wall v. London and Northern Assets Corporation (5), the observations of Lindley, M. R., are as follows :—

"No very precise meaning can be given to the word 'amalgamate' when we talk about amalgamating a Company with any persons, Companies, or firms, and I confess that I am not prepared to put any sharp definition upon the word. I have no doubt that it includes the case put by Lord Hatherley in Higg's case, In re Bank of Hindustan, China and Japan (6) and more recently by Lord Davey in New Zealand Gold Co. v. Peacock (7). I do not think it involves the formation of a new Company to carry on the business of an old Company. I have no doubt it includes that; but I do not think it is confined, or understood to be confined, to that. I do not see how a Company as a business transaction can practically amalgamate with persons or Companies carrying on business unless the Company in some way or other sells its assets as a whole—not for money, for that would be a simple sale—but for shares in the purchasing Company."

According to these observations, an arrangement like the one we have in this case can be included within the meaning of the word 'amalgamation.'

In In re South African Supply and Cold Storage Co., Ltd. (8), Buckley, J., says as follows (page 287*) :—

"An amalgamation may take place, it seems to me, either by the transfer of undertakings A and B to a new Corporation, C, or by the continuance of A and B by B upon terms that the share-holders of A shall become share-holders in B. It is not necessary that you should have a new company."

It is clear to my mind, therefore, that the use of the word 'amalgamation' in the resolution is not inaccurate and cannot possibly constitute any illegality.

As regards the objection based upon s. 203 (2), unders. 213 (5) it is provided that a special resolution shall not be invalid for the purpose of this section by reason that it is passed before or concurrently with a resolution for winding up the Company, or for the appointment of liquidators. It has been urged before us that this clause really means that it may be passed at the same meeting, but it cannot be put up in the same resolution. I am unable to accept the contention. I have no doubt that the resolution as framed was a perfectly legal resolution which it was open to the Company to accept if it was disposed to do so.

The last point is that the terms of the resolution are not in accordance with the requirements of s. 213 of the Indian Companies Act. Here again it seems to me that the objection is purely technical. It is conceded that the agreement as drawn up is proper in form, and it is clearly within the scope of s. 213. In fact it was said that it was so cleverly drawn up that appellant No. 1 could not point out any defect in the form of the agreement, so far as the requirements of s. 213 were concerned. Looking to the substance of the resolution it is clear that it was within the authority of the Company to pass it under s. 213. On this point I may refer to the following observations in Imperial Bank of China, India and Japan v. Bank of Hindustan (9) (page 100*):—

"I believe it would have been sufficient if the first notice had gone on and said, 'This is to be carried out under the Act;' or, even short of that, if it had given notice to the parties that it was intended to pass a resolution giving authority to the liquidators to carry out the arrangement."

In the present case we find resolution both in substance and form fulfilling the requirements of s. 213. It is true that in terms there are no words authorising the liquidators to receive compensation and distribute it amongst the share-holders; but the fact is clear, and to my mind the point is without any substance.

The next set of points relate to the meeting of July 19. Four points have been urged with reference to the proceedings at this meeting. First, it is urged that the point of order, Ex. I, was wrongly ruled out of order; secondly, that the amendment moved by the appellant No. 1 (Ex. O) was wrongly disallowed; thirdly, that the appellant No. 1 wanted to speak on the resolution after his amendment was disallowed, but in fact he was prevented by a majority of the share holders from speaking to this resolution, and that as his right of speech is denied to him, the resolution passed at the meeting is vitiated; and, lastly, that the point of order, which he had raised with reference to the validity of the votes, was wrongly disallowed.

As regards the first point, I may mention that the point of order is long enough to puzzle any Chairman. It was a request to the Chairman to hold that the meeting was not competent to consider and confirm the said arrangement, which was ultra vires of the Company. I am not surprised that the Chairman simply ruled it out of order, and, in my opinion, that was the only course which the Chairman could reasonably adopt in dealing with it. It was for the share-holders to consider whether to accept or reject the resolution, and looking at this point of order it might have well formed a speech of decent length against the resolution; but as a point of order it was properly ruled out, and I agree with the learned Trial Judge on this point.

The second point is not so easy. With regard to the amendment which he proposed (Ex. O) the learned Trial Judge has upheld the decision of the Chairman on two grounds: First, according to him on a proper interpretation of s. 81 no amendment could be allowed, if a resolution proposed comes under that section. Secondly, having regard to the nature of the amendment, as it was practically a negative of the resolution, it was properly disallowed. The correctness of both these conclusions is questioned before us. As regards the first point it depends upon the interpretation of s. 81 of the Indian Companies Act. According to the decision in Torbock v. Lord Westbury (10), an amendment may be allowed at the first meeting, and in the case of a special resolution no alteration whatever will be allowed at the confirmatory meeting. The learned Trial Judge has doubted the correctness of this decision; but it seems to me that it is going too far to hold that at the first meeting, when the resolution is to be considered, no amendments could be allowed. It is no doubt a possible view on a strict reading of s. 81 of the Indian Companies Act, which provides that it must be a resolution of which notice specifying the intention to propose the resolution has been duly given. It may be urged that when an amendment is moved, it ceases to be the resolution of which notice is given, and becomes some other proposal than the one contained in the resolution of which the absent share-holders would not have any notice. In spite of this consideration an amendment at the first meeting is allowed under the English Statute. In the absence of any decision to the contrary, I am not prepared to go so far as to say that no amendments could be allowed. It must necessarily depend upon the nature of the resolution and the nature of the amendment, whether it could be or should be allowed by the Chairman. Therefore I proceed to consider the second objection with reference to this point. I have already referred to this amendment. It really asks the share-holders to consider that the proposed amalgamation may be modified so as to require the entire values of the properties and assets and capital and liabilities of this Company as determined on June 30, 1923, by the Managers and Auditors of this Company and the Central Bank of India for the purposes of amalgamation be credited to the capital of the Central Bank of India without any deduction whatsoever and with the further proviso that nothing out of the said values be allowed to be carried by way of premium or otherwise to the reserve fund of the Central Bank of India. This amendment goes beyond the proper scope of an amendment which could be considered with reference to the subject-matter before the meeting. The subject-matter for consideration before the meeting was whether the particular offer made by the Central Bank of India on the conditions contained in the agreement was to be accepted by the Tata Bank or not, and they could either accept that offer or reject it. It was perfectly open to them to adjourn the consideration of this question with a view to further negotiate with the Central Bank and to see whether any counter-offer to be made by the Tata Bank would be accepted by the Central Bank. The amendment though in form an amendment was really a counter-proposal of a different nature and in effect it involved either the adjournment of the consideration of the resolution or the rejection of the resolution proposed before the meeting. Further this amendment required that when the transfer was effected the Central Bank was to act in a particular manner with reference to the assets of the Tata Bank, so that nothing out of the said values be allowed to be carried by way of premium or otherwise to the reserve fund of the Central Bank of India. The amendment required something to be done by the Central Bank when the transfer was effected, and when the whole property of the Tata Bank became the property of the Central Bank. That would be in a sense beyond the powers of the Tata Bank to control. Having regard to the wording of the amendment it is clear that it went so far beyond the scope of the subject-matter of the resolution before the meeting, that it was clearly open to the Chairman to rule it out of order. It could not affect the position of the appellant No. 1 in any way; it was perfectly open to him if the amendment was rejected to point out that the resolution as it was framed should not be passed or that the consideration of it should be adjourned in order that further negotiations on the lines which he desired should take place. That was not rendered impossible to him by this amendment being ruled out and on a consideration of the arguments on both sides of the question, I am satisfied that the amendment was rightly ruled out. It is true that any proper amendment, which is moved by any member at a meeting, should be put to the meeting for consideration and if the Chairman rules out any such amendment, the resolution is liable to be set aside as was decided in Henderson v. Bank of Australasia (4).

The next point relates to the right of speech. The learned Trial Judge has found that after the plaintiff No. 1 was disappointed in his attempt to speak on two occasions, first, as regards the point of order, and, secondly, on the amendment which he moved, he really elected not to speak on the resolution and, therefore, there was no denial of the right of speech. On this point it has been urged before us on behalf of the appellants that the finding that the appellant No. 1 elected not to speak on the resolution is not justified on the evidence in the case. It is urged that having regard to the temper disclosed at the meeting towards him, whether he was in fact prevented forcibly from speaking to the resolution though he attempted to do so, or whether under the circumstances he made a feeble and courteous attempt, which may be interpreted as an election not to speak, in substance he was prevented from speaking on the resolution. On the evidence bearing on this point, which it is not necessary to discuss in detail, I am satisfied that appellant No. 1 was practically prevented from speaking to the resolution. Even if we accept the evidence of the witness for the defendants on this point that plaintiff No. 1 just appealed to the shareholders 'Brother share-holders, will you care to listen to me,' that when they said 'no' he elected not to speak, in substance he was prevented from speaking. Having regard to the incidents that had happened already at the meeting, and to the persistent manner in which the share-holders showed their unwillingness to hear him, it may be inferred that if the appellant No. 1 had thought of speaking he would have been prevented from speaking. I should say that he was practically prevented from speaking to the resolution. On this finding the question arises whether that is sufficient to vitiate the resolution. As regards the right of speech, I may refer to the case of Wall v. London and Northern Assets Corporation, Ltd. (5) to which I have already referred with reference to another point. There the Court of Appeal had to consider the effect of a closure applied by the Chairman of a meeting. With reference to that the observations of the Master of the Rolls and of Chitty, L. J. are practically to the same effect. It is pointed out that the majority must not refuse to listen to the speech of a member in reasonable terms for a reasonable time, and having regard to the circumstances of that case the Court was satisfied that the closure was properly applied and that even if it resulted in negating the right of speech to a particular member, it did not vitiate the resolution. It is difficult to lay down any general rule as to what should be the result where the right of speech is denied to a member in a general meeting of the share-holders. It seems to me that the proper test to lay down is to consider the facts and circumstances of each case and to determine whether the denial of the right of speech is sufficient to vitiate the resolution under the circumstances of that case. I may here pause to point out that those who refuse unnecessarily out of sheer impatience to listen for any reasonable length of time, to any arguments in support of the opposite views incur a grave risk in adopting this attitude of exposing the very resolution, which they may be anxious to adopt, to the scrutiny of the Court and to render it liable to be set aside. The very purpose which they may have in view may be defeated on account of such conduct. It is important that the risk involved in such conduct should be realised by those who resort to it. Apart from that question, however, we have to consider on the circumstances of this case whether the fact that appellant No. 1 was not allowed to speak to this resolution is sufficient to justify our setting aside the resolution. On that point after a consideration of the circumstances I have come to the conclusion that it is not sufficient to justify our setting aside the resolution, and I have been influenced by the following considerations.

In the case of Parshuram Dattaram v. The Tala Industrial Bank Ltd. (11), the question of the right of speech was considered and Mr. Justice Pratt, referring to the English case to which I have referred, held that a share-holder is not entitled to speak at a meeting as much as he pleases, but has a right to be heard in reasonable terms for a reasonable time. In that particular case that view apparently did not help the plaintiff, and the decision was against him. It is to be noted that the plaintiff No. 1 in this case is the same as the plaintiff in that case. It is material to remember that his general attitude with reference to this Bank was known to the share-holders. They were entitled to form their own opinion about his attitude. I am not concerned with the justice of that opinion: but the share-holders knew him as being ready to go against the Bank. At the meeting of July 19, with which we are directly concerned, the first thing that happened was that, after the Chairman delivered his speech and after the resolution was moved, the point of order Ex. L was handed by the appellant No. 1. This point of order, which is referred to in the minutes as extending over seven typed pages, was read at the meeting. Thus the view of the appellant was known to the members and the reasons for his conclusions also were known. Then we have the fact that he moved an amendment, which indicated his attitude with reference to the resolution under consideration at the meeting. That amendment was ruled out. Already one member had spoken in fact against the resolution; and it may be said that having regard to the importance of this subject, it is not unlikely that the share-holders may have informed themselves previously and formed certain opinion of their own with reference to the merits of this resolution. At the time appellant No. 1 rose to speak to the resolution they had ample means of knowing what his views were and what his side thought. Under the circumstances if the share-holders or some of them practically refused to listen to appellant No. 1, I am not prepared to hold that that by itself is sufficient to invalidate the resolution. So far as the circumstances are disclosed on this record I do not think that any speech from the appellant No. 1 could have made any difference in the resolution. No doubt it is a difficult thing to say whether a particular speech will impress the audience in the direction desired by the speaker; but having regard to the definite attitude which the majority of the share-holders maintained at the meeting with reference to appellant No. 1, as also to the fact that all that he could have said, was really said in the first point of order, which was already read to the meeting, I am satisfied that though the right of speech was denied to him at that stage the circumstance could not be accepted as affording a sufficient basis for setting aside a resolution, which represents the ascertained views and wishes of an overwhelming majority of the share-holders.

The next objection with regard to the incidents at this meeting relates to the point of order which he handed in to the Chairman regarding the validity of the votes. That point of order was in these terms:—

"Pursuant to Article 93 of the Articles of Association of the Company I challenge the validity of all the votes tendered for the resolution declared by the Chairman as having been carried and under the circumstances the Chairman do appoint the day and the time for receiving objections as to the validity of every vote tendered." The initial difficulty about this point in the story of the appellants is that it does not appear on the record as to when it was handed in. The minutes of the meeting, which must be taken as prima facie evidence of what happened at the meeting, contain the following statement—

"After the close of the poll the business of the meeting was resumed and the Chairman, before declaring the result of the poll read out to the meeting a further point of order handed to him by Mr. P. D. Samdasani challenging the validity of all the votes tendered for the resolution, etc., and ruled it out of order."

Though I concede in favour of the appellants that this objection was sufficiently referred to in the plaint, I do not think there is any evidence to show that this was handed in before the poll was commenced. It is significant that we have not been referred to any evidence on the point, and it may well be that the point of order was not handed in time, at least not before the Chairman commenced to take the poll. In any case the point is left in ambiguity and assuming that the handing in of such a point of order at the proper time should have prevented the Chairman from declaring the result of the poll, it seems to me that the Court should incline more in favour of the validity of the proceedings than in favour of their invalidity, if the fact which would go to invalidate the proceedings is not established beyond reasonable doubt. I am not satisfied that it was handed in before the Chairman commenced to take the poll, and if it was handed in after that work was nearly finished it would be too late. But there is a fundamental objection to this point of order and I am satisfied that the Chairman was right in disallowing it. The amendment simply says that he objects to all the votes, it does not enable the Chairman to consider the validity of any particular vote. It is too general to be of any effect and no authority has been cited in support of the proposition which the appellant No. 1 has contended for, that the objection in this general form must be investigated and the proceedings of the meeting adjourned. I am quite unable to accept such a view having regard to Article 93 of the Articles of Association of the Bank, which runs as follows:—

"No objection shall be made to the validity of any vote, except at the meeting or poll at which such vote shall be tendered, and every vote, whether given personally or by proxy, not disallowed at such meeting or poll, shall be deemed valid for all purposes of such meeting or poll whatsoever."

If this objection was to be raised, it should have been directed to particular votes. It seems to me that it is futile for any member to raise a general objection, without indicating the nature of the objection, and without any attempt to particularise the votes objected to. It can only be interpreted as a sort of invitation on the part of the member to adjourn the proceedings of the meeting to examine the votes over again. Under the circumstances I am satisfied that this general objection was properly disallowed.

I now come to the confirmatory meeting of August 6. The minutes of this meeting are marked Ex. Q in the case. The resolution which was adopted at the meeting of July 19 was confirmed and there is no objection so far as this confirmation is concerned. But it is urged that the appointment of the liquidators at the meeting is not valid, because there was an irregularity in accepting the final amendment to the proposal. I have already stated that the proposal to appoint two liquidators was subject to two amendments, which were duly proposed and seconded. The second amendment was lost on a show of hands. A poll was demanded. The poll was taken, but before the result of the poll was declared a new amendment was allowed to be proposed, the demand for poll and the other amendments being withdrawn. It seems to me that it was perfectly open to the meeting to adopt that course; and I doubt whether there has been any irregularity in doing so. Even if there was any irregularity it was a matter for the meeting or the Chairman to control and that irregularity has not the slightest effect, in my opinion, upon the validity of the appointment of the liquidators named at that meeting.

It is further urged that even if the appointment of the liquidators be valid the final agreement signed on August 7 is not valid because the Directors of the Central Bank had no authority to enter into such an agreement. The contention in effect is that as there was no resolution of that Company accepting this agreement the Directors would have no authority to enter into such an agreement. It is, in my opinion, an utterly futile objection. From the Memorandum of Association of the Central Bank it is clear that the Bank had authority "to acquire and undertake the whole or any part of the banking and discount business of any person or Company carrying on any business which this Company is authorised to carry on or to amalgamate the Company's business with that of any such person or Company"; and Article 115 of the Articles of Association gives general powers to the Directors, under which it seems to me that it was perfectly open to the Directors to act on behalf of the company.

I would, therefore, confirm the decree of the Trial Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Fawcett, J.—I agree entirely with the judgment just delivered, and I shall only add a few remarks on some of the most important of the numerous objections that have been taken by the appellant to the validity of the proceedings. First of all, as regards the use of the word 'amalgamate' in the resolution and the circular, I may refer to Palmer's Company Precedents, 12th Edition, Part I, at pages 1413 to 1415 as showing that this is a popular term which has been used for many years, and which can properly be used to cover a scheme such as the present one under s. 213 of the Indian Companies Act. Secondly, as regards the form of the resolution I may point out that it follows almost word for word, with a few necessary modifications, the form No. 794 laid down in the same work for such a scheme, and, therefore, it is difficult to hold that this particular form is one that is contrary to the provisions of s. 213, or is otherwise a form open to objection. In fact the only real departure from Palmer's form is that the resolution omits saying that such and such persons are hereby appointed liquidators for the purpose of the winding up, and instead of this the notice says that the confirmatory meeting would among other matters consider the question of appointing liquidators. It seems to me that that is quite a correct change to make because, as is pointed out by the Court of Appeal in In re Trench Tubeless Tyre Co. Ltd., Bethell v. Trench Tubeless Tyre Co. Ltd. (12), the proposed liquidators may be changed at the confirmatory meeting. That is because the appointment of liquidators is not required to be by "special resolution," the latter being necessary only in regard to the proposed voluntary winding up of the Company and amalgamation under s. 213.

I next come to the Chairman's ruling as to the amendment proposed by the appellant No. 1. I think that amendment was rightly ruled out of order, because in effect it merely negatived the proposal before the meeting, viz., that the conditional agreement submitted to the meeting should be approved. It is a well recognised rule that an amendment should be affirmative in form, and not merely negative of something already proposed, and be in such a form that a definite decision can be arrived at: cf. Crew's Procedure at Meetings, 3rd Edition, page 111. Thus in the rules laid down for the conduct of business of the Bombay Legislative Council, r. 37 (2), says: "An amendment may not be moved which has merely the effect of a negative vote." See Bombay Legislative Manual, 1920, at page 204. The proviso proposed to be added to the resolution would necessarily involve a rejection of the conditional agreement submitted to the meeting, because the consent of the Central Bank of India would be necessary to the alterations that were suggested in this proviso, and unless and until that consent were obtained the amendment would have no effective operation. It was not a practical proposition that the agreement should be approved subject to this particular proviso, and there would, therefore, be no definite decision on the matter before the meeting. I may in this connection refer to the case of Wall v. London and Northern Assets Corporation, Ltd. (5). It will be seen from the report at page 472* that a somewhat similar amendment was proposed at a confirmatory meeting in that case, viz., that the following be added to the resolution 'subject to the purchaser agreeing to allow any individual or any body of dissentient share-holders to have their share of the assets agreed to be sold in lieu of the London and Northern Debentures shares due to them.' That amendment involved that the purchaser, as here, should agree to a certain change but the Chairman ruled the amendment out of order and moved that the resolution should be confirmed. This was objected to in the arguments before the Court of Appeal. Lindley, M. R. (at page 480*) summarily dismissed the objection as being a point with which the Court had nothing to do.

Chitty, L. J. (at page 483*) mentions this refusal of the Chairman to put the amendment at the meeting, and says:—"His refusal, in my opinion, was right, because that meeting was called for one purpose only, and that was to confirm or reject the original resolution which had been passed, and any amendment would be wholly irrelevant, because the single purpose of the meeting was to say Aye or Nay, is the original resolution to stand or fall?" I quite recognise that this relates to an amendment proposed at a confirmatory meeting, and not to one proposed at the first meeting, but I think that logically the same reasoning applies to the latter case with some slight alterations, viz., that the one purpose for which this meeting was called was to confirm or reject the particular agreement submitted to the meeting, and an amendment of the kind proposed was inadmissible in view of that particular object. I think that at the most all that could be moved was to adjourn the meeting in order to enable the Directors to enter into further negotiations with a view to the suggested alteration of the conditional arrangement between the two Companies. No doubt in Palmer's Company Precedents, Part I, at pages 668-9 a reference is made to Wright's case, In re London and Mediterranean Bank (13) These remarks at first sight seem to support the propriety of an amendment of this kind, suggesting modifications in the conditional agreement, provided such modifications were not more onerous on the Company; but if the report of this particular case be referred to, it will be clearly seen from pages 338, 339 and 340 that the modifications there referred to were not modifications of the actual agreement that was put to the meeting, but modifications, connected with the agreement but in regard to matters which were entirely independent of the consent of the other party to the agreement, for they referred to the second and third resolutions mentioned in that report, which dealt with certain arrangements dependent merely on the approval of the share-holders of the Company. It seems clear, therefore, that this is not a case, which really supports the contention of the appellants that the amendment was improperly ruled out of order.

(13) (1871) 12 Eq. 331 at p. 341.

No. 1's right of speech at the first extraordinary general meeting. On this point I agree entirely with what has been said by my learned brother. The Court has a discretion as to whether it should, or should not, grant a declaration or an injunction of the kind sought in this suit under ss. 42 and 54 of the Specific Relief Act of 1877, and the plaintiffs are not entitled to such a declaration or injunction merely because of an irregularity of the kind that is under consideration. Of course that discretion must be exercised on accepted judicial principles, but it is a case where we have English decisions to guide us, and these show that the Court should not interfere on the ground of an irregularity in the case of acts which are valid if done with the approval of the majority of share-holders, unless the acts complained of are of a fraudulent character or are ultra vires. In the present case, I think it is important to bear in mind that there are special circumstances, which at any rate give an insight into the point of view of the majority of the share-holders, who refused to hear appellant No. 1. We have his admission, that he used to be in the employ of the Tata Bank and was dismissed by them in 1922. Then we have the case to which appellant No. 1 himself drew our attention, viz., Parshuram Dattaram v. The Tata Industrial Bank, Ltd. (11) from the report of which it appears that the appellant No. 1 brought a suit against the Company in regard to a general meeting held on May 1, 1923, at which he objected to the accounts and the Directors' report submitted to that meeting and wanted to have a committee of inspection appointed to examine them. Then the point of order that he drew up clearly shows that he was objecting to the whole meeting on the ground that it was illegal. It certainly shows a spirit of obstruction and non-co-operation rather than a bona fide effort to help towards a satisfactory solution of the difficulties that confronted the Company; and in these circumstances, the majority of the share-holders may have thought his action was not bona fide and he would thereby waste their time in bringing reckless charges against the Directors and arguing in support of the views contained in his point of order. I think these facts should be taken into consideration in determining whether we should or should not interfere with the resolution on this particular ground. Another point to be borne in mind is that appellant No. 1 might have persisted in trying to speak, and if he had done so might possibly have succeeded. Such a result is not unknown in political meetings. Finally we have the fact that he had a further opportunity of putting forward his objections to this agreement at the confirmatory meeting held in August, but he did not attempt to avail himself of that opportunity. I, therefore, agree with my learned brother that this is not a case where we should hold the resolution invalid because the appellant was prevented from speaking.

As regards the objections to the appointment of the liquidators at the meeting in August, the learned Judge below has held that there was an irregularity on the reasoning of the judgment in Reg. v. Roberts (14) but, if that case is looked at, it will be seen that it contemplates a succession of amendments before the result of the poll is known, so that there would be no finality to the meeting. That is an argument ab inconvenienti which does not apply to the present case, because there was a settlement of the dispute about the persons who should be appointed liquidators, and hence it resulted in finality. The argument based on inconvenience thus falls to the ground, and, in my opinion, there is nothing in law which makes such a compromise illegal or invalid, even at the stage at which it was arrived at in this particular case. The case is analogous to one where the Court is about to deliver judgment, or even in the act of delivering judgment where it is still open to the parties to come to a compromise, at any rate before the judgment is finally delivered. I have already referred to the case of In re Trench Tubeless Tyre Co. Ltd., Bethell v. French Tubeless Tyre Co. Ltd. (12) which is ample authority for the view that the liquidators proposed at the special meeting could be changed or added to, as was done in this case. Under sub-s. (3) of s. 83 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, the appointment of these liquidators is deemed to be valid, until the contrary has been proved. This has not been done, and this objection, therefore, fails.

In conclusion, I would only say that I agree entirely with my learned brother in regard to the objection taken about the poll. As to the objections based on the alleged misconduct of the Directors, I may refer to In re Irrigation Company of France; Ex parte, Fox (15), where it is pointed out that a case of fraud or over-bearing influence is necessary to justify interference by the Court. Here it is quite clear that there is no indication of the Directors getting any secret profit, and the conditional agreement provided for their not getting any compensation for loss of office. I think there is no substance in the objections which the two appellants have raised to the validity of the resolution, and that, therefore, the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Shah, Actg. C. J.—As regards costs, we confirm the order of the lower Court, but we order that there will be only one set of costs in appeal.

Hindu Law—Will—Construction—Brahmins to be fed from income of property—Dedication of corpus—Trust.

Where a Will provided that the testator's nephew "shall enjoy permanently" certain property and with its income shall feed not less than 10 brahmins and that after him his younger brother shall conduct the charity:

Held, that as the word "enjoy" was not restricted to a life-estate, the words "shall permanently enjoy" gave the nephew a fee simple, that there was no dedication of the corpus and that consequently the property was not constituted as trust for the purpose of the charity. [p. 591, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, East Tanjore at Mayavaram, in A. S. No. 30 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Tiruvalur, in O. S. No. 136 of 1919.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for a declaration that a certain mortgage dated 14th December 1903 executed by one Venkatarama Iyer deceased in favour of one Satayyappa Chetti, and the decree in O. S. No. 472 of 1916 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Mayavaram obtained thereon were not binding on the trust properties and for an injunction restraining the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 from executing the said decree against the trust. It is contended that the plaint properties originally belonged to the plaintiff's maternal uncle Panchanadha Iyer and that by his Will dated 8th January 1898 he created a trust. This Will is Ex. A in the case and its construction is the first point raised.

The first defendant contended inter alia that Venkatarama Iyer got the properties as heir and not as trustee under the Will, i.e., that he took the properties as the beneficial owner burdened with a trust to perform the charity therein mentioned. The District Munsif gave the plaintiff the declaration that he asked for. On appeal the Subordinate Judge has held that the suit was barred by limitation, under Art. 134 of the Limitation Act. In this he is clearly wrong and it is argued by both sides that the matter is concluded by the ruling in Mulla Vittil Seeti Kutti v. Kunhi Pathumma (1). On the construction of the Will, both Courts held that the Will is genuine and that the suit properties were not dedicated to charity but only the income thereof. Turning to Ex. A the words are: "Deducting these, the balance of 7 mahs and 25 kuzhis of nanja and punja lands my nephew Venkataraman shall permanently enjoy and with the income derived out of those lands and with the income of the interest of Rs. 500, the capital I have reserved for the purpose the said Venkataraman is to be feeding at least 10 brahmins on each dwadasi in his house at Mayavaram * * * For ever, the said Venkataraman shall by himself get all these done, and after him, Sivaswami, his younger brother should conduct them." This is the important portion of Ex. A and I have had it re-translated by the Chief Interpreter and his translation is as follows:—"Barring these, the remaining wet and dry lands measuring 7 mahs and 45 kulis, my sister's son Venkataraman shall enjoy permanently, and, with the income of the said land and with the interest derivable from the capital amount of Rs. 500 kept by me therefor, the said Venkatarama Iyer shall, on every dwadesi day, feed not less than 10 brahmins, in Mayavaram, at his own house according to his pleasure." In the last sentence the more accurate translation is "For ever the said Venkataramier having by himself get all these done, after him Sivaswami, his younger brother should conduct them."

Mr. Bhashyam Iyengar for the appellant points out that as there is no disposition of the surplus income in this case, that is a strong indication that the whole property was devoted to the trust and that the trust is not merely a charge. He quoted a number of cases, but they really all come down to this that each case must stand on its own footing and on the construction of its own document. He relied among other cases of Vaithinatha Aiyar v. Theyagaraja Aiyar (2) which laid down that a gift of the whole income was equivalent to a gift of the corpus. But I am not satisfied that the whole income is necessarily to be devoted to the charity in this case. He has to feed not less than 10 brahmins at Mayavaram at his own house according to his pleasure supposing the income were sufficient to feed 20 or 30 brahmins the trust would be adequately carried out by his feeding only 10. There would then be a surplus income which I construe Ex. A, would be to do as he likes with as it is said that he shall permanently enjoy the nanja and punja lands. This is a Will; and in Raja Manicka Chettiar v. Manikam Chettiar (3), I had occasion to examine the meaning of the word "enjoy" in a Hindu Will. Of course, as I have already said, each case must stand on its own facts. But it seems to me that there is nothing in the document before me at present to restrict the word "enjoy" to either a life-estate in the lands or to the income thereof. I, therefore, think that the words "shall permanently enjoy" gave what in the English Law we would call a fee simple to Venkatarama Iyer. It is also to be observed that there is no disposition of the corpus after Venkataraman's death and after him Sivaswami, his younger brother, is only to conduct the charities. There is, to my mind, nothing to show, as I have pointed out above, that the whole income of the land is necessarily to be devoted to this feeding and even if this were so, I think the words do not mean a dedication of the corpus. Taking these points into consideration, I am of opinion, that the Subordinate Judge was right in coming to the conclusion that the properties were not constituted as trust for the purpose of the charity. No further question arises in this view of the case. I am, therefore, of opinion that the second appeal must fail and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This is an appeal by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 against a decision of the Second Additional District Judge of Dacca, reversing a decision of the Subordinate Judge of the Fifth Court. The suit was brought to enforce a mortgage executed by one Sarat Kamini Ghose. At the time the suit was brought Sarat Kamini had died and the defendants-appellants are her sons who inherited the estate as reversioners. The mortgage was dated the 29th Sraban 1316, and the principal mortgage sued upon was one for Rs. 857 and 8 annas the claim in the suit with interest amounting to Rs. 1,747. The interest of the mortgagor Sarat Kamini was derived from her mother Barada Sundari. Barada Sundari's husband Brojo Kishore Raha died leaving a Will whereby he provided that his wife Sreemutty Barada Sundari should be the sole proprietor having power of gift and sale of the properties he left behind him after his death and the Will further provides that so long as she would be living no one would have any right but that his daughter and his son-in-law Kedareshwar Ghose, who is described in the Will as ghar-jamai should be maintained in the family. The Will goes on to give a life-interest after the death of Barada Sundari to Sarat Kamini. But the construction put upon the Will by the Courts below is that Barada Sundari got an absolute interest in the properties and consequently the subsequent gifts were of no avail. I am not prepared to say that this construction is wrong though I think that something may be said looking at the Will as a whole for holding that Barada Sundari's interest in the properties was merely for life and that after her death her interest devolved upon Sarat Kamini. Be that as it may, I am not prepared to quarrel with the finding of the Courts below that Barada Sundari's interest was an absolute interest and that consequently, the estate of Sarat Kamini was the estate of a Hindu daughter. The First Court decreed the suit but did not decide the question of legal necessity. The case was remanded for this purpose by the lower Appellate Court and that Court decided that there was no legal necessity and refused, therefore, to pass a mortgage decree and passed a decree only in respect of the money advanced. On appeal to the District Judge, he has passed a mortgage decree holding that there was legal necessity. He says 'I am of opinion, that defence witness No 2 proves beyond question that the money was borrowed for legal necessity and that in fact the respondents profited by the loan. As I have already stated the children of Sarat Kamini were reversioners entitled after her decease.

Three points have been urged before us in this appeal. The first is, that the plaint does not disclose that the estate which Sarat Kamini had was that of a Hindu daughter and, therefore, as the case is based on a mortgage by an absolute owner the suit should fail entirely. Secondly, it is stated that as the learned Judge disbelieved the plaintiffs' evidence as to legal necessity, namely, that the money was advanced to pay arrears of rent and for expenses of the estate he should not have held that legal necessity was established from the evidence of one of the defendants' witnesses and consequently, the suit should have been dismissed on the ground that legal necessity had not been established by the plaintiffs' witnesses. The third point urged is that the money was not in fact advanced for legal necessity. It is stated that on the evidence Rs. 259 was advanced to build a house for Sarat Kamini's husband at Mawa and that that cannot be deemed to be a legal necessity. Then it is stated that a further sum of Rs. 200 was advanced for expenses of the family at Dacca and it is stated that this is not legal necessity....the test being whether there was any obligation on the last absolute owner Barada Sundari to maintain the children of Sarat Kamini and it is stated that as there was no such obligation the advance of Rs. 200 which was expended in maintaining the family does not fall within the doctrine of legal necessity. Thirdly, it is stated that as to Rs. 146 out of the advance this money was used to pay the shradh expenses of the husband of Sarat Kamini. We do not think that this is correct and this money seems to have been expended like the Rs. 200 for the expenses of the family at Dacca.

So far as the first point is concerned, we do not think that the plaintiffs are precluded from succeeding by reason of the fact that they did not state that Sarat Kamini was a limited owner. After all, this was a question to be raised by the defendants in their defence and I cannot say that they have been prejudiced in any way by the plaintiffs' pleading and there does not seem to me any substance in this point.

Then as regards the second point as the learned Judge in the Court below points out it is somewhat difficult for a lender to know the exact extent of the legal necessity in respect of which he advanced the money and different considerations apply in a case of this kind than would be applied in a suit when everything is within the plaintiffs' knowledge. We agree with this view of the learned Judge and we do not think that in this case it is possible to apply the strict test that would be applied if all the facts were necessarily within the plaintiffs' knowledge.

The third point is really the crux of the suit. It appears that out of the advance of Rs. 857 for which the mortgage was executed after several prior mortgages, and which must have included the interest as well, Rs. 346 was expended as expenses of the family at Decca. I am not prepared to say that the expenditure of this amount, provided, as has been found, it was necessary for the maintenance of the children does not come within the doctrine of legal necessity. The learned Advocate who appeared for the defendants set up an extreme position that the children should be allowed to starve because it was not within the doctrine of legal necessity that their mother should maintain them if there was no obligation on the last owner to do so. I do not think that this doctrine is correct. In my opinion, having regard to the findings of the learned Judge and the facts I have already stated the money expended for the family at Dacca and elsewhere comes within the doctrine of legal necessity. But I am not prepared to so hold with regard to the house. It seems to me that it would be a considerable extension of the doctrine to hold even if it was necessary for the purposes of education of the children, that the money advanced for building the house at Mawa falls within the doctrine of legal necessity. It is not necessary to decide and we do not decide whether any educational expenses for the children or money expended for placing them in life come within the doctrine of legal necessity. But we do not think that the money expended for building the house at Mawa, assuming that at the time it was built it was necessitated by educational reasons, comes within the doctrine of legal necessity. We do not think that this portion of the mortgage-decree can stand.

For the reasons, therefore, which we have indicated the appeal succeeds in part and fails in part. We disallow the sum of Rs. 259 expended for building the house at Mawa and the rest of the money advanced on the mortgage will stand. The matter must, therefore, go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that that Court may calculate what portion of the decretal amount represents to interest on Rs. 259 which we have disallowed and when this is done the decree will stand for the balance, that is to say, for the balance less the sum of Rs. 259 and the decretal amount which represents the interest thereon...and so far as Rs. 259 is concerned, the only decree will be a decree against the defendants in respect of any assets of their mother in their hands. I mean by the word 'Assets' assets apart from the money in respect of which she had the interest of a Hindu daughter.

We make no order as to costs in this appeal.

Cuming, J.—I agree.

Let it be known that we, the second party, will have to prepare 1,35,000 (one lakh and thirty-five thousand sleepers of different measurements every year during the nine months from Kartik to Asarh, in accordance with the terms specified above. If, through negligence on the part of us, the second party, we fail to prepare so many sleepers no plea regarding deficiency in the number of sleepers, put forward by us, shall be entertained and we, the second party, shall be held liable to pay on demand, the price of the entire number of one lakh and thirty-five thousand sleepers to the first party. Without paying in full the price of the sleepers that will be got ready every month and obtaining receipt therefor, the second party will not be entitled to cut trees or prepare sleepers in the succeeding month. In that case, on the expiry of the said succeeding month, I, the first party, shall be competent to bring the trees mentioned in the schedule given below in my direct possession and to stop the cutting of the trees, without waiting for the expiry of the term of this agreement." The second party failed to cut 15,000 sleepers during the first month or to pay for them, and the first party terminated the contract. The second party sued for damages:

Held, that the claim must fail, as upon a consideration of all the terms of the contract, the first party was, under the circumstances, within his rights to determine the contract. [p. 600, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Lord Phillimore.—This case turns upon the construction of a contract made between a land-owner in the District of Bhagulpore, the deceased father of the appellants in the main appeal, and two persons interested in the purchase of timber whom it will be convenient to call the contractors.

By this contract, made on the 23rd May 1915, the land-owner sold to the contractors the right of cutting 5 lakhs sleepers to be cut from Sakhua trees in the land-owner's jungle. The sleepers were to be in defined quantities of six different dimensions—the longest 12 feet in length and the shortest 3 feet—with varying differences in breadth and thickness, and valued at separate prices.

The whole were to be cut before June 1919, so that there was a period of four years for performing the contract. But it was in contemplation, as the contract shows, that 15,000 sleepers would be cut each month during the nine dry months of the year and 1,35,000 at least a year, the contractors also undertaking to do their best to cut some sleepers during the three wet months.

The contractors made a deposit of Rs. 6,000 which was about the equivalent of the average cost of 30,000 sleepers or two months' production.

The nine dry months began in the month of Kartik which runs from the 23rd October to the 21st November. Before this month the contractors had cut 187 sleepers, but in the first month instead of cutting 15,000, they only cut 1,055. In the second month they cut 3,432, and the whole number they cut before they were finally stopped was less than 9,000.

The contractors put forward for an excuse for their delay that land-owner had promised to provide a sawing machine, but both Courts decided that this excuse was not established.

On the 22nd December the second month had elapsed, and on the 23rd the land-owner gave notice to determine the contract and stop further cutting.

On the same day the lawyer for the contractors wrote that they were willing to pay the price of 30,000 sleepers, and they followed it up by a letter of the 31st which purported to be a reply to the land-owners' notice of the 23rd.

This attempt of the contractors to put forward their letter of the 24th as containing an offer made before the letter of cancellation reached them, failed in the view which both Courts took of the evidence, and it stands that upon the failure to produce 15,000 sleepers in the course of the first month, the land-owner determined the contract; and the sole question is whether in doing so, he was within his rights.

The contractors insisting that the contract had been improperly determined, brought this action on the 30th April 1916, claiming Rs. 6,17,876 as damages.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the action, but intimated that if the action had lain, the damages in his view would have been Rs. 6,00,000.

The High Court at Patna reversed this judgment and declared that there had been a breach of contract, but considered the damages claimed excessive and awarded Rs. 2,00,000 only. Both parties have appealed from this decision.

The matter turns upon three paragraphs in the contract, Nos. 3, 5 and 6 and the translation of them is as follows:—

"3 We the second party, shall during the term each year from the month of Kartik up to the end of Asarh, get 15,000 sleepers of every measurement prepared every month, and shall, after they are counted according to the contract, pay to the first party the price thereof according to the rates mentioned above, without any objection. To this neither we, the second party, nor our representatives shall raise any objection. If we do so the first party shall be competent to cancel this deed and stop the cutting of the trees in the lands specified below without waiting for the expiry of the term of this agreement. Be it noted that during the term (of the lease) every year from the month of Sravan to the end of Aswin, we, the second party, shall try our best to cause as many sleepers of different measurements prepared as possible and after getting them counted according to the contract pay the price thereof in accordance with the rates mentioned above, to the first party on taking receipt therefor. The second party shall, on no account without sufficient reason willingly stop the preparation of sleepers during these three months. Let it be known that we, the second party, will have to prepare 1,35,000 (one lakh and thirty-five thousand) sleepers of different measurements every year during the nine months from Kartik to Asarh, in accordance with the terms specified above. If, through negligence on the part of us, the second party, we fail to prepare so many sleepers no plea regarding deficiency in the number of sleepers, put forward by us, shall be entertained and we, the second party, shall be held liable to pay on demand, the price of the entire number of one lakh and thirty-five thousand sleepers to the first party.

"5. The sleepers, which we the second party, shall get ready shall be counted every week on behalf of the first party and seals and numbers shall be put on behalf of the first party. If this work cannot be managed to be done every week it should be done every month. But the second party shall, on no account, be entitled to take away the sleepers after they have been counted sealed and numbered, unless they have paid the price thereof. The second party shall obtain receipt for whatever money they pay for the sleepers from the manager of the first party. No plea of payment without receipt shall be entertained. If, through negligence the sleepers may not be counted, sealed and numbered on behalf of the first party the second party shall be at liberty to serve a formal notice on the first party giving two weeks' time, and it shall be incumbent on the first party to get the sleepers counted, sealed and numbered within the period of the notice issued by the second party and the second party shall have to wait till then, but such delay shall not exceed more than two weeks after the expiry of the period fixed under the notice. If this be not done the second party shall then have the power to enter the measurement and number of sleepers in their own papers and take away the same and I, the first party, shall be entitled to get the price of the sleepers according to the entries made in the papers of the second party.

"6. Without paying in full the price of the sleepers that will be got ready every month and obtaining receipt therefor the second party will not be entitled to cut trees or prepare sleepers in the succeeding month. In that case, on the expiry of the said succeeding month, I, the first party, shall be competent to bring the trees mentioned in the schedule given below in my direct possession and to stop the cutting of the trees, without waiting for the expiry of the term of this agreement, and if in such circumstances, I, the first party, be put to any loss through some act on the part of the second party, the second party shall be liable to pay compensation for the loss to me, the first party, and the sum of Rs. 6,000 in deposit will be forfeited."

The early part of cl. 3 would appear at first blush to contain a definite contract by the contractors to cut 15,000 sleepers during each month of the nine obligatory months. Indeed, the contractors in their plaint use the words "the stipulated number of 15,000 sleepers", and again "the stipulated minimum number of sleepers". But it is suggested on behalf of the contractors either that the latter part of the clause shows that there was no such obligation, and that these figures are to be considered as directory only or hortatory only and not compelling or that a breach of this particular covenant would not go to the root of the contract.

It is not quite clear upon which ground the High Court relied in deciding for the contractors. Perhaps the learned Judges relied upon both. The view which they seem to have taken is that the latter part of the clause supersedes the earlier, inasmuch as it substitutes a duty to prepare nine times 15,000 by the end of the year (or at least to pay for them if not prepared) for the duty in the earlier part of the clause to provide 15,000 per month.

The clause is not well drawn, but in their Lordships' view the right way to read it is that the two provisions are cumulative and not mutually exclusive. If for some reason which the land-owner is willing to accept, a month passes without the stipulated tale of sleepers having been cut, he has, though he waives his right for that month, not lost the right to insist that by the end of the nine months the deficiency should be made up.

If then there is a positive obligation on the contractors to cut, to tender for counting, and when counted to pay for 15,000 sleepers a month, what is the land-owner's remedy for a breach of this obligation? To sue for the price of 15,000 sleepers, though they have not been cut? That remedy is reserved for cases where there has been a failure in the nine months total.

Their Lordships have been invited by Counsel for the respondents to put a reasonable construction on the contract, and it would be unreasonable if there were no remedy for the failure to make periodic payments. It would be reasonable if the land-owner could treat such a breach as going to the root of the contract, and this seems to be provided for by cls. 3 and 6 combined.

Reliance was placed by Counsel for the respondents upon the use of the word "objection". It was said that this word conveyed the idea that the contractors must positively refuse to discharge their duty before the land-owner's right to cancel arose. But it had to be admitted that if the contractors refused to pay for cut and counted sleepers, at any rate after a demand for payment, that would be an "objection" which would entitle the land-owner to cancel.

Under cl. 3, therefore, there is a right to cancel for non-payment for the monthly tale of sleepers; but the time within which payment is to be made is not specified. This is provided for by cl. 6, which follows upon the provisions as to counting contained in cl. 5. Each payment is to be made in the "succeeding month". So strict is this provision that the contractors have no permission to cut in the succeeding month till the sleepers of the preceding month have been counted (an operation which need not take long) and paid for.

If in that succeeding month the sleepers of the preceding month have not been paid for, the right to cancel arises.

All this cannot be denied. But it is said that the contractors can avoid all their obligations and keep the contract alive for four years by merely cutting a nominal amount of sleepers every month, tendering them for counting and paying for them when counted.

As to this the Subordinate Judge well observes:—

"The document cannot be construed as meaning that the plaintiffs might prepare 1 lac and odd in the course of the year and pay for the same at the end of it. If this construction were valid, then the words in cl. 6 that the plaintiffs would not be entitled to cut trees and prepare sleepers in a succeeding month without paying for the sleepers of the previous month become meaningless."

Some observations were made by the Judges in the High Court upon the failure of land-owner to respond to the various applications which were made to him to have a count of the sleepers already prepared; but, as each of these applications admitted that the proper number of sleepers had not been prepared, there was no obligation on the land-owner to have a count. The duty of the contractors was to tender the full tale of sleepers due from them, and no count could be required till they were ready with this.

No doubt the land-owner must count before he requires payment; but the first duty lies with the contractors to supply sleepers for counting.

Counsel for the respondents contended that the land-owner was really claiming to treat the failure to cut as the cause of cancellation. To this the land-owner's answer would be that it was immaterial to him whether the sleepers were cut or not, as long as the sleepers were paid for, but that it does not lie in the mouth of the contractors to say that they have not cut the sleepers, inasmuch as they were bound to have cut them.

The sleepers "that will be got ready every month" are the covenanted 15,000. Unless they are tendered for counting and paid for when counted the land-owner can use his remedies under cl. 6; and this is what he did.

Counsel for the respondents boldly said that if the contractors failed to cut, the land-owner had no remedy under cl. 6. This was the necessary result of his argument, but their Lordships cannot accept it.

Upon the whole their Lordships would humbly recommend His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, and the cross-appeals dismissed, and that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge should be restored with costs here and below. The costs of a petition presented on behalf of the respondents should be costs in the appeal.

Receiver—Suit against legal representatives of deceased to recover money—Receiver, whether necessary party—Decree, whether can be granted against Receiver—Procedure.

Where a money suit is filed against the heirs of a deceased person, whose estate is in the hands of a Receiver, the Receiver has nothing to do with the satisfaction of the claim, and all that the Court can do is to pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff against the defendants, as the legal representatives of the deceased. The fact that the plaintiff has obtained an order from the Court which appointed the Receiver granting him leave to add the Receiver as a party to the suit does in no way affect the question whether the Court which hears the suit can grant relief against the Receiver. If the decree obtained by the plaintiff against the heirs of the deceased is not satisfied and the plaintiff wishes to execute it against the estate of the deceased, he must go to the Court which appointed the Receiver for permission to attach the estate of the deceased in the hands of the Receiver. The Receiver is not a necessary party in a suit to decide whether the plaintiff is entitled against the legal representatives of the deceased to recover money which he had advanced to the deceased in his lifetime. [p. 600, col. 2; p. 601, col. 1.]

Application against a decision of the Chief Judge and Judge of the Presidency Court of Small Causes, at Bombay, in Suit No. 3860 of 1923.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision by Mr. Moos, who was appointed Receiver by an order of the High Court for administering the estate of one Kadarbhai Issaji now deceased. The plaintiff filed a suit in the Small Causes Court, Bombay, against the heirs and legal representatives of the deceased owner of the estate. He added the Receiver as a party to the suit and obtained ex parte leave from the High Court to sue the Receiver. It should have been obvious that no relief could have been granted against the Receiver in a suit filed in the Small Causes Court. When the suit came up for hearing the Judge passed a decree against defendants Nos. 2 to 8, who were the heirs of the deceased, and dismissed the suit against the Receiver. The plaintiff then appealed to the Full Court, praying that the dismissal of the suit as against the petitioner might be set aside, and a decree for the amount claimed passed against him. The Full Court delivered judgment setting aside the order of dismissal and passing a decree against the Receiver as prayed.

That would appear at first sight to be a very strange decision on the part of the Full Court. The grounds for passing a decree against the Receiver are as follows:—

“The Receiver was sued with the leave of the Court which appointed him. He was a necessary party as plaintiff wanted the property in his possession, i.e., the assets in his hands to be made available for the satisfaction of his claim. The High Court in granting leave must have considered this aspect of the case, and if he is a necessary party, the suit as against him cannot be dismissed. The two cases of Jatindra Nath v. Sarfraz Miah (1) and Banku Behary Dey v. Harendra Nath Mukherjee (2) are explicit authorities on the point, and they decide that when the Receiver is made a party after leave to sue him has been obtained, the suit as against him cannot be dismissed; the property in his charge is directly sought to be affected.”

Where a money suit is filed against the heirs of a deceased party, whose estate is in the hands of a Receiver, the Receiver has nothing to do with the satisfaction of the claim, and all that the Small Causes Court could do would be to pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff against the defendants, as the legal representatives of the deceased. The fact that the plaintiff obtained an ex parte order from the High Court granting him leave to add the Receiver as a party does not in any way affect the question whether the Court which hears the suit can grant relief against the Receiver. That question would have to be decided on the merits and clearly no decree could be passed against the Receiver. If the decree against the other defendants was not satisfied, and the plaintiff wished to execute against the estate, he would have to go to the High Court for permission to attach the estate of the deceased in the hands of the Receiver.

It is further remarked in the judgment of the Third Judge that—

“the Receiver is the representative for the persons who may ultimately be found legally entitled to the property and as such is a necessary party to the suit. In any event no injustice could be caused to the estate as any decree passed herein would have to be executed against the Receiver only with the leave of the Court that appointed the Receiver.”

That, with all due respect, is an argument vitiated by a very patent fallacy. If a party makes a claim for money due by a person who is dead against his representatives, then he can only get a decree against the representatives, to the extent of the assets in their hands, and if the estate is not in their hands, but in the hands of a Receiver, the plaintiff will have to go to the Court that appointed the Receiver, in order to attach the property in his hands. But by no possible conception could the Receiver be a necessary party in a suit to decide whether the plaintiff was entitled against the legal representatives of the deceased to recover money which he had advanced to the deceased in his lifetime.

The rule, therefore, must be made absolute, and the decree of the Full Court set aside and that of the Trial Court restored with costs throughout. If the Receiver can not recover his costs, then he can apply to have them included in his account.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 12—Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council—Time taken in obtaining copy of judgment to be appealed against, whether may be excluded.

In the case of an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment appealed against is excluded in calculating limitation.

In the case of an application for leave to appeal sub-s. (3) of s. 12 of the Limitation Act really means “when a decree is sought to be appealed from”.

Petitions under O. XLV, r. 2 and under s. 109, cls. (b) and (c) and s. 110, C. P. C., sought to be presented to the High Court, the High Court will be pleased to grant certificates enabling the petitioner herein to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the judgment of the High Court in S. As. Nos. 1356, 1355, 1354, and 1357 of 1921, preferred against the decrees of the District Court, Chingleput, in A. S. Nos. 400, 399, 398, and 401 of 1919, O. S. No. 504, 503, 470 and 505 of 1918, on the file of the Court of the District Munsif, Poonamalle.

Mr. K. S. Sankara Iyer, for the Petitioner.
Mr. K. Gopalratnam, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The question for decision is whether in the case of an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment appealed against may be excluded in calculating limitation.

Section 12 of the Indian Limitation Act is now made applicable by the Privy Council Rules to such applications, but the difficulty is that while sub-s. (2) applies in terms to “an application for leave to appeal,” sub-s. (3) does not. But we think that, though sub-s. (3) does not in terms apply the language used in it really covers the present case. Under sub-s. (2) when an application for leave to appeal is put in, the time requisite for obtaining “a copy of the decree appealed from” may be deducted. Here the phrase quoted really implies “a copy of the decree sought to be appealed from" as the decree cannot strictly be "appealed from" until leave to appeal has been given. There is no reason why the phrase "decree appealed from" when used in sub-s. (3) should be given any different interpretation. Sub-section (3), therefore, in the case of an application for leave to appeal really means "when a decree is sought to be appealed from....." That is the present case and time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment may, therefore, be excluded.

That position is also very reasonable, since a proper application for leave to appeal cannot be drawn up unless the party or his Pleader has before him a copy of the judgment.

Authority on the point is scant. Mahabir Prasad Tewari v. Jamina Singh (1) is direct authority, though the reasons given are not those we have given. The case of Anderson v. Periasami (2) was under the old s. 12 in which applications were limited to applications to appeal in forma pauperis, and, therefore, s. 12 could not be then called in aid at all.

We rule that time requisite for obtaining copy of judgment should be excluded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. The High Court will not in second appeal interfere with the order of a Trial Court refusing to admit a document in evidence which was not produced at the first hearing of the suit in accordance with the provisions of r. 1 of O. XIII of the C. P. C., where no reason is shown for the non-production of the document at such hearing. [p. 602, col. 2.]

Where in a suit for enhancement of rent it appears that there has been a variation in the amount of rent paid by the tenant the burden is on the tenant to explain why there has been such variation and if he cannot give any satisfactory explanation the inference would be that there has been a change in the rate of rent and the presumption arising under s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act would be rebutted. [p. 603, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Additional District Judge, Dinajpur, dated the 13th February 1922, affirming that of the Munsif, Raigunj, dated the 15th January 1921.

Dr. D. N. Mitter (with him Babu Satindra Nath Mukerjee), for the Appellant.

Babu Bimal Chandra Das Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These four appeals arise out of four suits for enhancement of rent of an occupancy holding. The Trial Court held that there was no ground for enhancement and refused the enhancement and this finding was upheld in appeal.

In the appeals before us one point has been taken namely that the plaintiff was not allowed to put in evidence certain collection papers. Admittedly these papers were not filed in the First Court at the first hearing. Order XIII, r. 1 of the C. P. C., provides. "The parties or their Pleaders shall produce at the first hearing of the suit all documentary evidence, etc." As already stated these documents were not produced at the first hearing of the suit. Order XIII, r. 2 of the C. P. C., provides that, "no documentary evidence in the possession or power of any party which should have been but has not been produced in accordance with the requirements of r. 1 shall be received at any subsequent stage of the proceedings unless good cause is shown to the satisfaction of the Court for the non-production thereof; and the Court receiving any such evidence shall record the reasons for so doing."

In this case the Court was not satisfied that there was good reason why these documents were not produced at the first hearing of the suit; and it is impossible for us in second appeal to interfere with the order of the Court rejecting those documents; because, no reason has been shown for their non-production at the time. With regard to this point which is common to all the appeals, therefore, I decide against the plaintiff. The learned Additional District Judge in dealing with the Appeal No. 1980 states as follows:—"Note in the name of Batashu, jama Rs. 6-11-11 $\frac{1}{2}$.

Defendant proves rent at a uniform rate from 1305 to 1319. The plaintiff proves a karcha Ex. 5 showing jama of Rs. 3-4-9 $\frac{1}{2}$ in 1298 and a counterfoil Ex. A-4 for 1302 showing jama of Rs. 6-9-7 $\frac{1}{2}$. The learned Munsif has rejected these. I see no reason to do so. The karchas are, it is true, loose papers tied together but I have examined them carefully I do not think that this alone is sufficient, he should show more definitely how this large change came about."

It seems to us that the learned Judge has wrongly placed the onus on the plaintiff to explain the variations of rents. The onus on the contrary is on the tenants to explain why there had been this large variation of rent and if they could not give any satisfactory explanation the inference would be that there had been a change in the rate of rent. As far as I understand the learned Judge's judgment he does not suggest that this rent of Rs. 3-4-0 odd was for any other jama than the jama the rent of which was allowed to be enhanced.

We must, therefore, set aside the order of the learned Judge in so far as this appeal is concerned. The result is that we allow this appeal and send back the case to the lower Appellate Court in order that the learned Judge may re-hear the appeal considering the case from the point of view indicated, viz., that the onus lies upon the tenants to explain why there has been a variation in the rent. They may explain by showing that there has been a change in the area; but the onus is on the tenants; and if they cannot explain it, the inference will be that there has been a change in the rate of rent and, therefore, the presumption has been rebutted.

APPEALS Nos. 872, 873 AND 874 OF 1923.

With regard to these appeals nothing has been seriously pressed in support of them and, therefore, they are dismissed.

Appeal No. 873 is dismissed without costs as the respondent in this appeal does not appear and Appeals Nos. 872 and 874 are dismissed with costs.

In Appeal No. 1980 costs abide the result.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Return of appeal for presentation to proper Court—Refusal to exercise jurisdiction—Revision—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 35—Joint trees, sale of—Suit for recovery of share—Small Cause Court, jurisdiction of.

An application for revision lies against an order of a Court returning an appeal for presentation to the proper Court, and thus refusing to exercise jurisdiction. [p. 601, col. 1.]

A suit for recovery of his share of the sale-price of trees by one joint owner against the other is cognizable by a Small Cause Court. Article 35 of Sch. II to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act has no application to such a suit. [ibid.]

Revision against an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Sialkot, dated the 6th December 1924.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioners.

Choudhry Zafarulla Khan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1—4 being the sons of the same father owned certain land jointly. On a partition $\frac{1}{4}$ th share was allotted to the plaintiff and $\frac{3}{4}$ ths to defendants Nos. 1—4. As regards the trees standing on the shamilat land the following provision was made in the partition deed:—

"Aur drakhtan har qism waqf arazi shamilat wa milkiyat mushtarikh rahenge."

Defendant No. 1 sold certain trees to defendant No. 5 and some other purchasers. The present suit was instituted by the plaintiff on the allegation that Rs. 800 had been realized by defendant No. 1 by the sale of the trees and that the plaintiff was entitled to Rs. 200 being the $\frac{1}{4}$ th share of the money realized. The suit was resisted on various grounds, but eventually a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff for the amount claimed, the decree being ex parte against defendants other than defendant No. 1 and Gulam Hussain. Defendant No. 5 was released from liability.

Defendants Nos. 1—4 appealed against the decree of the Trial Court which came up for hearing before Mr. Sita Ram, Senior Subordinate Judge, Sialkot. A preliminary objection was taken before him to the effect that the suit not being of the nature of the suits cognizable by a Court of Small Causes the Senior Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain and decide the appeal. This objection was accepted by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge and the memorandum of appeal was returned on the 6th December, 1924, to be presented to the District Judge. It was in fact presented to him on the same date, i. e., the 6th of December, 1924, and the appeal was decided on the 5th of March 1925.

The present petition for revision was made against the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge returning the memorandum of appeal. At the hearing a preliminary objection is taken by Mr. Zafarulla Khan that the order returning the memorandum of appeal to be presented to the District Judge being an interlocutory order a petition for revision cannot be entertained and that inasmuch as the petitioners can appeal against the decision of the District Judge and can raise the question of jurisdiction in that appeal this Court ought not to entertain the present petition for revision. In support of his first contention Mr. Zafarulla Khan has relied upon various rulings in which an order assuming jurisdiction had been treated as an interlocutory order and a petition for revision had been held to be incompetent. Not a single case has been cited wherein an application for revision against an order returning a plaint and thus refusing to exercise jurisdiction has been held not to be revisable. I accordingly disallow the preliminary objection.

As regards the merits the examination of the plaint clearly shows that the suit was of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. Defendant No. 1 having sold certain trees belonging jointly to him and the plaintiff this suit was instituted for the recovery of plaintiffs' share. Article 35 of the Second Schedule to the Small Cause Courts Act has no application to such a suit. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to try the appeal and the memorandum of appeal was wrongly returned by him.

I accordingly accept this petition for revision and setting aside the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge returning the memorandum of appeal, direct that it be now received and the appeal be decided according to law. Costs will abide the result.

Pleader and client—Death of Pleader pending proceeding—Fees, apportionment of.*

By virtue of the provisions of sub-ss. (2) and (3) of s. 19 of the Bombay Pleaders Act, in the absence of any special agreement, a Pleader is not entitled to receive fees allowed on taxation between himself and his clients for his services until the final decree or order in the proceeding is passed. If a Pleader dies before such final decree or order is passed or for any reason the engagement of his services by his clients is put an end to then the Pleader will only be entitled to ask the Court to award him proportionate fees on the basis of a quantum meruit. The Court in assessing the quantum meruit might be guided by the percentages laid down by law for the regulation of costs between party and party but is not bound to adopt that guide where the circumstances of the case would render it unjust to do so. First Class Subordinate Judge at Dhulia, in Small Cause Suit No. 749 of 1922.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was filed by the adopted son of the late Mr. Gopal Balvant Garud to recover certain fees due to his father, who carried on the profession of a Pleader. The original plaintiff having died, the suit was continued by his mother. In the present application we are only concerned with an item of Rs. 109 debited in Mr. Garud's account on June 16, 1920, for his fees in Appeal No. 103 of 1920. The defendant admitted that he had engaged Mr. Garud in that appeal to appear for him, and that he had put in his vakil-patra in that appeal, but defendant denies his liability to pay Rs. 109 as Mr. Garud died before conducting the appeal. The Judge said:—

"This contention is obviously not tenable. Having made his appearance for the defendant in the appeal, Mr. Garud was entitled to get his legal fees. It was no fault of his that he died before the appeal was heard, and the defendant cannot escape from that liability simply because he had to incur further expense by engaging another Pleader."

That finding could only be correct if it could be said that a Pleader as soon as he has been retained, and has filed his cakilpatra, becomes thereby entitled to recover the whole of his fees which are payable for his services until the final decree is passed. There is no support for such a proposition in the Bombay Pleaders Act.

Under s. 17 of the Act:

"Any party employing a Pleader may settle with him by private agreement the terms of his engagement and the fee to be paid to him for his professional services."

It is not suggested in this case that the defendant entered into any private agreement with Mr. Garud.

By s. 19, sub-s. (2):

"Where no fee has been settled under s. 17, the Pleader shall be entitled to receive from his client a fee computed in accordance with the rules in Sch. III, and any further fees which may be allowed on taxation between Pleader and client in pursuance of any rules made in this behalf by the High Court."

Under sub-s. (3):

"The fee which a Pleader is entitled to receive from his client when computed in accordance with the rules in Sch. III, and except when otherwise agreed between the Pleader and the client, the fee which a Pleader is entitled to receive under sub-s. (1), is payable in respect of the Pleader's services until the final decree or order in the proceeding is passed."

In the absence then of any special agreement, a Pleader shall not be entitled to receive fees allowed on taxation between himself and his client for his services until the final decree or order in the proceeding is passed. If a Pleader dies before such final decree or order is passed, or for any reason the engagement of his services by his client is put an end to, then the Pleader will only be entitled to ask the Court to award him certain proportionate fees on the basis of a quantum meruit.

In Keshav Govind Joshi v. Jamsetji Cursetti (1), the plaintiff was a Pleader who had appeared for the defendant in certain proceedings up to a certain stage. Not being paid any fees for his services, he sued the defendant. It was held by the High Court that the Pleader, in the absence of an agreement, was entitled to a quantum meruit. The Court in assessing the quan- tum meruit might be guided by the percentages laid down by law for the regulation of costs between party and party, but was not bound to adopt that guide where circumstances of the case would render it unjust to do so.

The question is then what is the proper remuneration in the circumstances of the case, which would have been paid to Mr. Garud, if the engagement of his services had terminated without his doing anything further than what was done in this case, namely, the filing of the cakilpatra and entering the appearance of his client in the appeal. It is not suggested that Mr. Garud did anything more than that, as the appeal was not ready for hearing and did not come on for hearing till four months later. We think that on a quantum meruit the sum of Rs. 10 would be sufficient remuneration for such services. The order of the Subordinate Judge then must be amended by allowing the plaintiff with regard to that item of Rs. 109, Rs. 10 only. The applicant will be entitled now to the costs of the Rule.

JUDGMENT.

IN S. A. No. 750 OF 1922.

This is an appeal by the 3rd defendant against the decree for specific performance of a contract of sale entered into by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in favour of the plaintiffs. It has been found that the contract was a valid contract and that the 3rd defendant (appellant) purchased property from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 with notice of the contract. The only question argued in the appeal is that the contract is not one of which performance can be enforced by virtue of s. 21 of the Specific Relief Act I of 1877, because it is a contract for the non-performance of which compensation in money is an adequate relief. Under s. 12 of the Act "unless and until the contrary is proved, the Court shall presume that a breach of a contract to transfer immoveable property cannot be adequately relieved by compensation in money." This rule would prima facie apply here, but it is argued that, as there is a condition in the contract for the payment of damages in default of performance whether by the vendor or by the vendee, it must be held that the parties considered that the enforcement of these damages would be adequate in case the contract is not performed. So far as the default on the purchaser's side is concerned, it is not suggested that the provisions for default can be treated otherwise than as furnishing security for performance. There is really nothing to show that the clause with reference to the default on the part of the vendor was for any other purpose. It is suggested that as the amount fixed as damages was high, such damages must be deemed to be adequate relief, but as the amount is only Rs. 37-8-0 it does not seem to me a tenable contention. There are no other circumstances to prove that in this case money compensation is adequate. Consequently this plea must be rejected. The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

IN C. R. P. No. 442 OF 1923 AND C. M. P. No. 258 OF 1923.

Before the appeal was filed, the plaintiff failed to deposit money in accordance with the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and it has been held by that Court that it had no power to alter its order giving three months' time for the payment and it dismissed the petition, put in by the plaintiff for extension of time and also the petition put in for amendment of the decree. The plaintiff has filed a civil revision petition against this order and has also put in a petition in this Court asking for extension of time to be granted in case the second appeal is dismissed. So far as the revision petition is concerned it appears to me that in accordance with the principles laid down in Abdul Shaker Sahib v. Abdul Rahiman Sahib (1), the lower Court had power to extend the time. It is argued that that decision relates only to the order of an original Court, but as it is based on the fact that an order for specific performance of this nature is in the nature of a preliminary decree and that the Court does retain power to make any stipulation it thinks fit with reference to the performance, I think that the power must rest in the Court which actually passes the order for specific performance and the language of the judgments in the case support this view—both the judgments of the late learned Chief Justice and Wallace, J. From the fact that the Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's petition without making any order as to costs, it would appear that he thought that there was ground for extending time, but that because it was not competent to review its own order, the request could not be granted. In considering whether time should be granted, it has to be remembered that the delay need not be explained so minutely in a case of this sort as in a case for instance, under the Limitation Act where it is sought to excuse a bar of limitation. In the latter the applicant is seeking to revive a right which he has lost and it is necessary for him to show that he has not lost it by his negligence. Here it is a question of destroying a right which plaintiff had to enforce under a contract and it does not necessarily follow that because he has been guilty of some delay in enforcing the contract, that that fact alone should deprive him of a right which undoubtedly is his. Consequently I think that the delay in such a case should be looked at more leniently than in a case of limitation. In the present case the plaintiff states that he was not aware of the provisions in the decree until the time for payment had passed, and if that is so, there were very good reasons for his not making the payment in time. The main cause for the delay appears to be the inordinate time taken by the lower Appellate Court in granting a copy of its decree. The copy was applied for on the 14th October 1921 and the copy was not ready until the 5th January 1922; and for other reasons the plaintiff did not receive the copy till the 17th January. It is this delay by the officers of the Court that has been mainly responsible for the delay. I think that it should be excused, and consequently I order that the time for payment be extended till the date on which the plaintiff deposited money, or if the deposit has been withdrawn till one month from this date.

I pass no order as to costs of the revision petition.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Carson.—This is a consolidated appeal by special leave from one judgment and 18 decrees dated the 27th February, 1922, of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal. Each of the 18 decrees though relating to a distinct subject-matter, raises the same question for decision. Each suit was a suit to recover possession from the defendant (who is the present appellant) the zemindar of certain villages in putni settlement of chaukidari chakran lands which had been resumed by the Government under the provisions of Bengal Act VI of 1870, and were transferred to the zemindar subject to the payment of rent assessed on the lands in accordance with s. 51 of the Act. The plaintiffs (respondents) alleged that by a pottah dated 13th November, 1853, the predecessors-in-title of the appellant zemindar granted five villages in putni settlement at the annual rent of Rs. 4,589 to one Krishna Chandra, from whom the plaintiffs derived title. It was further alleged by the plaintiffs, and it is not now in dispute that at the time of the putni settlement there were certain lands in every village which were chaukidari chakaran lands, and were held and enjoyed by the chaukidars in lieu of their salaries, and that such lands which had been transferred as aforesaid by the Collector form part of the lands of the putnidar under the said pottah of 13th November, 1853. The appellant, on the other hand, denied that under the terms of the said pottah the plaintiffs had any title to the chaukidari chakran lands released by the Government, and that in any event the plaintiffs were not entitled to get possession thereof without paying some rent in addition to the annual rent of Rs. 4,589 fixed in the pottah.

All the suits were tried by the Munsif of Rampurhat, who by his judgment dated 30th September 1910, held that the disputed property was included in putni settlement, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to obtain khas or actual possession of the lands in suit, but that they could not do so without paying an additional rent to the zemindar and he concluded his judgment in the following terms:—

“The plaintiffs’ putni lease appears to cover all the lands within the boundaries of the mahals, but the profits of the choukidari lands were not taken into account in determining the rent payable by the putnidar. The plaintiffs must be held to pay a higher amount for the resumed lands than that which has been assessed for chaukidari purposes on these lands by the Collector as by the resumption the lands were enfranchised and the putnidars would get the land free from the burden of the public service. The principle has been laid down in Hari Narain Majumdar v. Mukand Lal Mandal (1), the putnidar is bound to pay to the zemindar such a rent for these lands as corresponds to the proportion between the gross collection and the putni rent formerly payable by him.”

On an appeal and cross-appeal to the District Judge of Birbhum the decree and order of the Munsif was by a judgment of 13th September 1919, affirmed. The plaintiff, now respondent, appealed to the High Court of Judicature against so much of the order as adjudged that the plaintiff should pay to the defendant No. 1 such increased putni rent over the doul jumma as may be proportionate to the increase of the present collection over what it had been at the time at which the putni mahal was created. The learned Judges of the High Court allowed the appeals of the plaintiff and made decrees setting aside that part of the decision of the District Judge which declared the zemindar entitled to obtain additional rents from the plaintiff, and the only question to be considered on the present appeal by the appellant zemindar against the said order is as to whether such increased rent is or is not payable. It has not been disputed, and indeed it was so stated by the judgment of the High Court that by a long series of decisions the zemindar's right to a share of the rents and profits in addition to the amount payable to the chaukidari fund under the provisions of Act VI of 1870 was established:—

“These decisions”, say the learned Judges, “have recently been considered and followed in the case of Bejoy Chand v. Krishna Chandra (2) which was decided in December, 1920, and no useful purpose would, we think, be served by going through them again. They undoubtedly do support the contention urged before us on behalf of the zemindar respondent and it is useless to suggest that they are in the main distinguishable from the cases before us."

(1) 4 C. W. N. 814.

The learned Judges, however, held that the series of decisions laying down this principle could no longer be supported having regard to the decisions of this Board in two cases, viz., Ranjit Singh v. Kali Dasi Debi (3) and Ranjit Singh v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (4). Their Lordships cannot agree with the Appellate Court that either of the cases referred to has the effect attributed to it by the learned Judges. In the first of these cases where it is to be observed the order was in substantially the same form as in the present case, all that this Board decided was that a putni grant by a zemindar of his interest in lands includes his interest in chaukidari chakran lands within the boundaries of the grant, and that upon their being resumed and transferred to the zemindar under the Bengal Act VI of 1870, the putnidar or darputnidar holding from him is entitled under s. 51 of that Act to possession. The putnidar did not in that case challenge the validity of so much of the order appealed from as rendered the decrees for possession subject to the fixing of a fair and reasonable assessment. In giving the judgment of the Board, Lord Parker of Waddington added: "It is a satisfaction to find that the view above expressed is that hitherto universally adopted in the Indian Courts."

In the second of the above-mentioned cases referred to by the Judges of the Appellate Court, the only point decided was that upon the transfer of chaukidari chakran lands situated within the villages to the zemindar an action by the putnidars for declarations that such lands formed parcel of the putni mahal, and that they were entitled to a settlement and khas possession was not an action for specific performance of contract within Art. 113 of Sch. II of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, but a suit for possession of immoveable property within Art. 114. Their Lordships can find nothing in the judgment in any wise affecting the point raised upon the present appeal. The Board has examined the record in that case, and it is to be observed that the order appealed from as in the former case, recognised the right of the zemindar to have a rent fixed for the chaukidari chakran lands in question, and that this part of the order was not questioned or appealed from in the case before the Board, and the judgment appealed from was in their Lordships' opinion correct.

In a case decided by the High Court of Calcutta in 1924 Pryambada Debi v. Monohar Mukhopadhyaya (5), the learned Judges refused to follow the decision appealed from in the present case, holding that the Appellate Court had misread or had not appreciated the two judgments of the Privy Council on which they had based their decisions. Their Lordships agree with this view, and are of opinion that the Court below was in error in holding that the cases referred to before the Privy Council made any change in the law as to the right of the zemindar to have a rent fixed under the circumstances existing in present case. It was, however, argued in the present case before the Board that under s. 51 of Act VI of 1870 the putnidar is entitled to hold the lands rent free, or without paying additional rent for them. Their Lordships cannot accept this view. The peculiar character of chaukidari chakran lands, and how they came to be included, without paying rent, in the various putni pottas, as is found in the present case, has been frequently discussed before the Board as in the cases referred to and others and as Lord Buckmaster says in Ranjit Singh v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (4):—

"It does not follow that because the rights originally arose by virtue of a grant declared to be a contract within the meaning of s. 51 they are, therefore, rights, contractual in the sense that contract by its terms creates and regulates the personal obligations and duties of the grantor in the circumstances that have arisen. At the time when the putni grants were made the resumption of the chaukidari chakran lands was not even contemplated and the grant necessarily contains no reference whatever to the circumstances that would arise and the relationships that would exist

Their Lordships, therefore, see no reason for interfering with the long series of authorities commencing as far back as the year 1900 which have established the right of the zemindar to have an additional rent fixed for such lands, nor can their Lordships overlook the fact that in the cases already referred to before this Board no exception was taken by the putnidar to the fixing of such rents as a condition of being put into possession.

Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that this appeal should be allowed, that the decrees appealed from should be set aside, except so far as they confirm the decrees of the lower Appellate Court, and that such last mentioned decrees should be restored. The respondent should pay the costs of this appeal and of the appeals in the High Court. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

It is not open to him to apply under r. 1, O. XLVII of the Code for a review of the order dismissing his suit. [p. 611, col. 1.]

Section 5 of the Limitation Act is not applicable to an application under O. IX, r. 9 of the C. P. C. to set aside an order dismissing a suit for default and a Court has therefore, no jurisdiction to admit an application under r. 9 on the ground that the applicant had sufficient cause for not preferring his application within the time prescribed. [p. 610, col. 2.]

Application against a decision of the Subordinate Judge at Mahad, in Miscellaneous Application No. 62 of 1922.

Mr. V. B. Virkar, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under s. 115, C. P. C. The opponent having filed Suit No. 139 of 1921, in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Mahad, the suit was dismissed for default under O. IX, r. 8, C. P. C., on October 30, 1922. He was then entitled under r. 9 to apply for an order to set the dismissal aside, and if he could satisfy the Court that there was sufficient cause for his non-appearance when the suit was called on for hearing, the Court could make an order setting aside the dismissal. But under Art. 163 of the Indian Limitation Act, the period of limitation for making such an application under r. 9 is thirty days. The opponent made his application on the 31st day, and was, therefore, clearly out of time. Section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act has not been made applicable by any enactment or rule to an application under O. IX, r. 9, and, therefore, the Court had no jurisdiction to admit the application on the ground that the opponent had sufficient cause for not preferring his application within the time prescribed. The Judge, however, said:—

"The question is whether the delay can be excused within the Court's discretion. The applicant is not to be blamed for sending the papers duly signed to his friend who was in business here. There is no negligence attributable to him on that score. If the mistake arose it arose with the mistaken view of that friend and hence I think the delay of one day should be excused properly in this case. Justice requires the exercise of discretion in that direction. To do otherwise would be clearly technical. Further, if I were not to excuse the delay there is nothing to prevent me from treating these two applications as for review and in that case they are clearly in time. When a case is dismissed purely for a default the plaintiff has two remedies generally, viz., one to apply to have the suit restored to file and the other is by way of review. The second course is clearly open to the plaintiff and the Court, and hence I do not think that in the present application the delay of one day should not be excused. I excuse the delay and I hold the application to be in time."

The argument discloses an unfortunate confusion of thought. If the Judge had said "I treat this application as one for review, and, therefore, pass an order setting aside the order of dismissal," then it is possible he might have been justified in making such an order. But he treated the application as one made under O. IX, r. 9, and excused the delay which he had no power to do. If, as a matter of fact, the opponent was entitled to apply for a review, we might not have been inclined to interfere with the decision of the Judge. But since the decision of the Privy Council in Chajju Ram v. Neki (1), we must take it that a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed for want of appearance under O. IX, r. 8, has no remedy by way of review, because the grounds on which a review can be granted are specified in O. XLVII, r. 1. The words "any other sufficient reason" in sub-s. (1) mean a reason sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those specified in the rule. Now, the grounds specified in the rule are as follows:—The discovery of new and important matter or evidence, which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within the party's knowledge, or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made, or on account of some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record. The fact that the opponent was absent when the suit was called on, would not be a ground for review specified in O. XLVII, r. 1, sub-r. (1), nor could it be a ground analogous to any of those specified in the rule.

It seems to us, therefore, that the only remedy open to a party whose suit has been dismissed for default under O. IX, r. 8, is to apply under r. 9 to set aside the order of dismissal, and it is no longer open to him to apply for a review of the order under O. XLVII, r. 1. That being our opinion, it was not open to the Subordinate Judge to entertain an application for review from the opponent, and as he had no power under the Indian Limitation Act to excuse the delay he ought to have dismissed the application. We must, therefore, make the Rule absolute with costs.

Where an application is made to a Court for temporary custody of the property of a minor under s. 12 of the Guardians and Wards Act, it may appoint a guardian temporarily. Another course open to the Court is to appoint a Receiver under the provisions of the C. P. C. When the Court adopts the latter course and appoints a Receiver the order is appealable. Miscellaneous first appeal against an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Ambala, dated the 9th January 1925.

Mr. Sardha Ram, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Shamair Chand and Badri Dass, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order appointing a Receiver temporarily. The facts giving rise to these proceedings may be briefly summarised as below:—

One Jagadhar Mal had three sons, Jhandoo Lal, Devi Chand and Joti Pershad. Jhandoo Mal had two sons, Ram Lal and Jagan Nath Singh. Debi Chand's son was Lachhmi Narain who had married two wives. By one wife he had two children, Mahabir Pershad a son and Musammât Ralla Wati a daughter. By his second wife Musammât Chandra Wati he had two sons Bal Kishan and Ram Kishan. Lachhmi Narain having died in July 1924, Jagan Nath Singh, the son of Jhandoo Mal, made an application on the 23rd December 1924 to the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge at Ambala to be appointed guardian of both the property and person of Mahabir Pershad and Musammât Ralla Wati, the children of Lachhmi Narain by his first wife who is admittedly dead. He also applied for the appointment of the guardian of the property of the children of Musammatt Chandra Wati. The date fixed of the first hearing was the 13th February 1925. Before the arrival of that date Jagan Nath Singh made an application purporting to be one under s. 12 of the Guardians and Wards Act asking the Court to appoint a Receiver to take possession of the property and shops belonging to the deceased Lachhmi Narain and he suggested in that application that preferably he himself be appointed a Receiver. The Subordinate Judge made an ad interim order appointing Jagan Nath Singh Receiver of the property then and there. Thereupon Musammatt Chandra Wati applied on the 15th January 1925 asking the Court to withdraw the order appointing Jagan Nath Singh temporarily a Receiver. In that application serious allegations were made against Jagan Nath Singh but the Court disposed it of summarily remarking ke fil hal main apna hukm muarkha 9 January 1925 men tarmeem karne ke liye taiyar nahin hua. The present appeal was lodged against the order of the 9th January 1925. When this appeal came on for hearing Mr. Badri Dass, Counsel for Jagan Nath Singh raised a preliminary objection to the effect that the order appointing his client a Receiver was made under s. 12 of the Guardians and Wards Act and that no appeal was provided against such an order under any of the clauses of s. 47 of the Act. Mr. Sardha Ram the learned Counsel for Musammatt Chandra Wati, on the other hand, contended that the order appointing a Receiver was made under O. XL, r. 1 of the C. P. C., and as such was appealable under cl. (s) of r. 1 of O. XLIII of the C. P. C. In support of his contention he relied upon the decision In re Bai Jamnabai (1). An objection was taken in that case that in cases coming under the Guardians and Wards Act the Court had no power to appoint a Receiver. Mr. Justice Robertson held that by reason of s. 141 of the C. P. C., the provisions of O. XL, r. 1 could be utilized for the purpose of appointing a Receiver. I agree in the view expressed by the learned Judge of the Bombay High Court and I hold that the Judge before whom the application for the appointment of a guardian was pending had power to appoint a Receiver according to the provisions of the C. P. C. Mr. Badri Dass, however, has contended that a right of appeal is the creation of a Statute and as no right of appeal against an order passed under s. 12 of the Guardians and Wards Act has been given this appeal is not competent. Section 12 of the Guardians and Wards Act empowers a Court "to make such an order for the temporary custody and protection of the person or property of the minor as it thinks proper." The Court may appoint a guardian temporarily and another course open to the Court is to appoint a Receiver under the provisions of the C. P. C. If the Court chooses to appoint a Receiver it has power to do so according to the rules laid down under the C. P. C. Evidently the order in this case was made according to the provisions of that Code and it is clear that an appeal is allowed from an order appointing a Receiver. I, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection and proceed to dispose of the appeal on the merits.

As regards the merits it is unnecessary to say much because on the face of it, it appears to me that it was highly improper to appoint Jagan Nath Singh the Receiver of the property of the minor. Jagan Nath Singh is himself the applicant for the guardianship. Serious objections have been raised as regards his past conduct and he as it were, is on his trial and it is yet to be seen whether he is a fit person to be appointed a guardian. Musammatt Chandra Wati in her application to the Court below has made certain allegations which, if true, would make Jagan Nath Singh wholly unfit for the position of a Receiver. It is not my intention to pre-judge the case of Jagan Nath Singh and it is quite possible that after a thorough inquiry the Court may consider that it is in the interest of the minors that Jagan Nath Singh should be appointed the guardian of the person and property of the minors. What I am concerned with at present is whether Jagan Nath Singh should have been appointed a Receiver in this case. Having regard to all the surrounding circumstances I am clearly of opinion that the Court has not acted properly in appointing Jagan Nath Singh a Receiver. I am not prepared to hold at this stage that this is not a case where a Receiver should not be appointed. Possibly the application of Jagan Nath Singh is quite bona fide and it may be in the interest of the minors that a Receiver should be appointed in the case.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the order appointing Jagan Nath Singh as Receiver remand the case to the Court in order that it may on proper material come to a decision whether it is a fit case in which a Receiver should be appointed. Costs will abide the result.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 60, 61, 62—Mortgages, several—Redemption—Consolidation—Burden of proof.

The principle established by ss. 60 and 62 of the Transfer of Property Act is that redemption of every separate mortgage should be permitted unless there is clear and unequivocal evidence to prove a contract between the parties to the contrary. There is a heavy burden cast on a mortgagee who wishes to prove a contract between him and the mortgagor to prevent such a redemption enjoined by law. [p. 614, cols. 1 & 2.]

There is no authority for the proposition that a mortgagor not otherwise bound by contract, cannot redeem one or two or more mortgages held by his mortgagee over the same property without redeeming another or the others. If a mortgagee wishes to lend money or to make further advances on the term that one mortgage of the property shall not be redeemed until the money due on another mortgage is paid he should effect that object by making it expressly part of his contract with the mortgagor. [p. 613, col. 2.]

Second appeal against an order of the First Additional Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 22nd May 1924, confirming that of the Munsif, Tarabganj, dated the 30th January 1924.

Mr. Bisheshar Nath, for the Appellants.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-mortgagor sued for redemption of his usufructary mortgage of 9th June 1882 and the defence was that it could not be redeemed unless the money due on a simple mortgage of 23rd December 1886 was paid at the same time. Both the Subordinate Courts held that there was no consolidation of the two mortgages and decreed the suit for redemption as prayed for in the plaint.

In second appeal here it is argued that the terms of the second deed of 23rd December 1886 indicated a consolidation of that mortgage with the former mortgage. I think the principles to be observed in considering such a question are indicated in the case of Tajjo Bibi v. Bhagwan Prasad (1). The learned Chief Justice who was a party to that ruling is now one of their Lordships of the Privy Council. There the codification of the Transfer of Property Act of 1882 was explained. Their Lordships observed: "Section 61 of Act No. IV of 1882, it appears to us, was enacted with the object not of indicating that there might be some other restriction on the rights of a mortgagor, but of prohibiting the application of the principle of consolidation to this country, except where the parties had by contract agreed that such consolidation should take place" Their Lordships then explained how the doctrine of consolidation had been elaborated in the Courts of Equity in England and that the principle of tacking and consolidation was not applicable to India because there was no analogy between the usufructuary mortgage in this country and the ordinary forms of mortgage with reference to which the English principle of tacking and consolidation arose. They laid down the principle that there was no authority for holding that in these provinces a mortgagor not otherwise bound by contract, cannot redeem one or two or more mortgages held by his mortgagee over the same property without redeeming another or the others. If parties wish to lend their money or make further advances on the terms that one mortgage of the property shall not be redeemed until the money due on another mortgage is paid they can easily effect that object by making it expressly part of their contract.

The contract of consolidation, therefore, has to be strictly construed in the present case. What the mortgagor stated in the second mortgage was that he would pay the money borrowed under the second mortgage in 15½ years according to the promise contained in the previous mortgage of 9th June 1882. He further promised to pay the money due on the second mortgage when he paid the money due on the first mortgage. Finally the second deed was described as a rahen nama kotli, meaning a deed of further charge.

There can be no doubt that the second deed was by way of a charge on the same property which had been previously mortgaged under the usufructuary mortgage but the question which we are considering at present is a different one of consolidation. It is obvious that the mortgagor had the privilege of paying off the second mortgage without paying the usufructuary mortgage. Under these circumstances the question will arise whether he was prevented from paying off the first mortgage without paying the usufructuary mortgage. Under the law enunciated in the Transfer of Property Act there are no limitations for the redemption of any one mortgage separately and limitation can only be devised by contract between the parties. In the present case there is no definite term in the second mortgage that the prior usufructuary mortgage shall not be redeemed until the second mortgage is paid. In Bhartu v. Dalip (2), a Bench of the Allahabad High Court observed at page 674* of the report: "The parties contemplated that the mortgagor should be at liberty to redeem the later mortgage on payment of the two sums secured by it, namely, Rs. 1,500. If he was so at liberty to redeem that mortgage at any time, there is no reason why he should be precluded from redeeming the earlier mortgage by payment of the amount secured by it. It may be that the parties intended to consolidate the two mortgages but they have not expressed their intention with sufficient clearness so as to enable the Court to say that they had done so and prevent full operation being given to the provisions of ss. 60 and 62 of the Transfer of Property Act."

In that decision also their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court held that the provisions of ss. 60 and 62 as to redemption of any particular mortgage were imperative and a heavy burden was cast on the mortgagee to prove any contract between him and the mortgagor to prevent such a redemption enjoined by law.

In Abhai Narain v. Matu Prasad (3), Mr. Daniels (now Mr. Justice Daniels) had before him a case in which there was a definite and unmistakeable clause in the second contract which prevented the redemption of the first mortgage without payment of the money due on the second mortgage. In such a case he rightly observed at page 243* of the report: "On the other hand there are a number of cases which lay down that where subsequent advances are charged on the property covered by a previous mortgage, a covenant that the mortgagor shall not be permitted to redeem the former deed without redeeming the earlier one is valid and enforceable."

On a consideration of the different rulings produced by learned Counsel in this Court (the Court was fortunate in having very able Counsel to argue this appeal) the principle established appears to me to be that redemption of every separate mortgage should be permitted unless there is clear and unequivocal evidence to prove a contract between the parties to the contrary. In my opinion there is no such contract in this case.

I dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—This action was instituted by the plaintiffs to recover possession, together with mesne profits and costs, of the land in dispute from the defendants alleging that the land belonged to the father of defendant No. 3 who agreed to look after the trees, plant new trees and pay rent equal to the assessment, and that defendant No. 3 having denied their title they were entitled to take possession without giving any notice to quit.

The learned Trial Judge found all the allegations of the plaintiffs proved, but thought that notice to quit was necessary and on that ground he dismissed the plaintiffs' claim for possession.

The Appellate Judge having referred to various decisions said :—

"From the rulings cited above it is clear that a disclaimer of the landlord's title works forfeiture. The fact that there has been a disclaimer is not disputed. I, therefore, hold that no notice to quit is necessary in this case."

Accordingly the decree of the Trial Court was set aside and a decree was passed for possession.

In Venkaji Krishna Nadkarni v. Lakshman Devji Kandar (1), the following question was referred for decision of the Full Bench.

Whether in this Presidency a disclaimer of the lessor's title by the annual tenant of a holding to which s. 84 of the Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879) applies, is, if made prior to suit, a sufficient cause of action to enable the lessor to recover possession without proof of notice to quit.

Sir Charles Sargent in giving judgment of the Full Bench said (page 361*) :—

"The object of s. 84 is to define the nature of the contract creating an annual tenancy, which, it is to be remarked, may be for agricultural or other purposes both as regards the period during which it runs and the landlord's power of determining it. The landlord's right of forfeiture, however, arising from disclaimer of his title, although it is treated as determining the tenancy at his election, is no part of the contract of tenancy, but is a right which the law implies in all cases from the relationship of landlord and tenant. Had it been the intention of the Legislature to exclude the right of forfeiture in the case of all annual tenancies, we should have expected to find it expressly provided for. Section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), which gives the right of forfeiture, is, in common with all the provisions of Ch. V of the Act, declared to be inapplicable by s. 117 of the Act in the case of all leases for agricultural purposes, except so far as the Local Government may have otherwise declared. That Act, however, did not become the law of this Presidency before January, 1893, subsequent to the institution of this suit. In Vithu v. Dhondi (2) which was a case in which it was assumed that notice was required by s. 84 of the Land Revenue Code, it was not contended that the right of forfeiture had been taken away by the section. We think, therefore, that the first question should be answered in the affirmative assuming the case not to be governed by s. 117 of the Transfer of Property Act."

The tenancy in this case commenced before 1878, so that the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act would not apply.

In Ochhavalal v. Gopal (3), the question arose whether an annual tenancy to which the Bombay Land Revenue Code applied could be determined without a notice in writing by the landlord. It was urged before the Court that it could be so determined, because there was a repudiation of the landlord's title. As a matter of fact in that case, there was no repudiation of the landlord's title by the tenant. Apart from that, the Court considered that effect must be given to the express provisions of the Bombay Land Revenue Code. As no such notice was given the annual tenancy had not been determined. But in that case the defendant tenant did not disclaim the landlord's title, but merely contended that the plaintiffs had no right to expect payment of rent on a fixed date. Therefore, the relationship of landlord and tenant still existed.

The facts are somewhat similar in the case of Rama Ranchhod v. Abdul Rahim (4), where it was held that the setting up of a permanent tenancy by a yearly tenant is not tantamount to disclaimer of the landlord's title. Such a tenant is, therefore, entitled to a notice to quit before he can be evicted by the landlord.

It must be noted that in the case of Ochhavalal v. Gopal (3), the Full Bench decision in Venkaji Krishna Nadkarni v. Lakshman Devji Kandar (1) was not referred to.

In Maharaja of Jeypore v. Rukmini Pattamahadevi (5) it was said in the judgment of the Privy Council: The repudiation of a landlord's title by the tenant will in certain circumstances work a forfeiture. This is not the ancient Indian law, but has been adopted by the Courts from the Law of England, and is now embodied in the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, s. 3 of which merely gives statutory form to a rule already in force. The denial which operates forfeiture must—now—be by matter of record before institution of any suit for forfeiture, and must be in clear and unmistakeable terms.

It may also be noticed that in Rama Ranchhod v. Abdul Rahim (4), Mr. Justice Fawcett said (page 1220*):—

"In the case of an agricultural lease such as the present, s. 84 of the Land Revenue Code lays down that in the absence of any special agreement in writing to the contrary an annual tenancy shall require for its termination a notice given in writing in a certain form. Therefore, even where there has been a disclaimer of the landlord's title, such notice is necessary to determine an annual agricultural tenancy in this Presidency."

His Lordship referred to Vithu v. Dhondi (2) and Ochhavalal v. Gopal (3).

But in the first place, that particular question was not before the Court. Secondly, no reference was made to the Full Bench decision in Venkaji Krishna Nadkarni v. Lakshman Devji Kandar (1). We think then that this case comes within the purview of the Full Bench decision, and that no notice was required to determine the tenancy, once the tenant had disclaimed the landlord's title. We, therefore, confirm the decision of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Under the Madras Civil Rules of Practice, Appendix A, on an application for the emergent issue of process for the arrest of the judgment-debtor, the fee payable is the ordinary fee and half as much again, and ordinary fee includes the extra amount that has to be paid for any further detention beyond the three days under sub-cl. (e) and (f) of cl. II of the rules in the Appendix. [p. 617, col. 1.]

The additional fee for detention beyond three days is as much a portion of the ordinary fee on an ordinary application for arrest of a person as the original fee itself is. [p. 617, col. 2.]

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the District Munsif, Mannargudi, dated the 10th December 1924, in E.P. No. 7 (E. P. No. 871 of 1924), in O. S. No. 166 of 1922, on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, West Tanjore.

Mr. G. Lakshman, for the Petitioner.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise an order passed by the District Munsif of Mannargudi on an emergent application for execution by the arrest of the judgment-debtor. The application asked for the issue of an emergent process with detention for five days and on the application, a fee of Rs. 2-6-0 was paid for process fee and 12-annas in cash for subsistence allowance. We are not concerned in this case with the subsistence allowance; but the application was returned on the ground that the process fee paid was deficient by 7-annas. The way in which the fee for the process was calculated is this: According to the schedule of process fees in Appendix A to the Civil Rules of Practice, for a warrant of arrest in respect of one person to be arrested, the rate of fee is Re. 1 and this includes detention for three days. When the decreeholder wants a further detention for five days, he has to pay at the rate of 6-annas per day under sub-cl. (a) of cl. II of the Schedule of process-fees already referred to. He also paid 8-annas as extra fee for the urgent application, in all Rs. 2-6-0. The office calculated the fee thus: For five days Rs. 1-14-0; half of that for the emergent application Re. 0-15-0; total Rs. 2-13-0; and hence the lower Court noted that there was a deficiency of 7-annas in the fee paid.

The contention before me is that, in an application for the emergent issue of process in the Munsif's Court the half fee that has to be calculated under Note 2 of Appendix A is only half of one rupee which it is contended, is "the ordinary fee". Note 2 to Appendix A reads thus: "For processes applied for and ordered to be executed as emergent, the fee will be the ordinary fee and half as much again". The Government Pleader, on the other hand, contends that the ordinary fee mentioned therein is not the Re. 1 but, that plus the extra amount that has to be paid for any further detention beyond the three days under sub-cl. (e) and (f) of cl. II. It is between these two contentions I have to decide.

I am inclined to think that the Government Pleader is correct. I think the words "ordinary fee" in the note are really used in contradistinction to what may be called the emergent fee. The ordinary fee payable in respect of a warrant for arrest if the detention was for three days is Re. 1 but if it was for more than three days an extra amount has to be added and the whole amount is the ordinary fee. For example, if a man applies for the issue of an ordinary process of arrest and wants that the warrant should be kept alive for ten days and wants that the warrant should be executed by an amin, he would have to pay Rs. 3-10-0 in all. That is the ordinary fee upon an application for arrest with ten days detention. If that very same thing has to be executed emergently he will have to pay half as much again under Note 2. It is clear that there is nothing wrong in adding the detention fee, when detention for more than three days is asked for to the fee payable for three days and treating the whole as "ordinary fee" for the purpose of ascertaining the emergent fee, because the applicant gets the benefit not only of the issue of the process urgently in the office and the sending of it to the central or Deputy Nazir for entry in his B register but also the benefit of its emergent execution by the amin who has to give preference to emergent applications over the ordinary applications in his hand, and there is no reason why the amin's fee should not also be increased by 50 per cent. in the case of emergent applications. The notification published on October 7, 1924, in Part II of the Fort St. George Gazette at page 1801 shows what the benefits are that a person, who gets an emergent process issued, gets. It says: "The processes shall be prepared urgently under the supervision of the Chief Ministerial Officer of the Court, and the process memos with the processes shall then be transferred urgently to the central or Deputy Nazir for entry in his B register and emergent execution of the processes". It is suggested that the words 'ordinary fee' used in Note 2 to application A are used to distinguish it from the additional fee which is spoken of in cl. II. I do not agree with this view. I think the words: "Ordinary fee" in Note 2 are used to distinguish it from the emergent fee and not to exclude the additional fee talked of in the beginning. The additional fee is as much a portion of the ordinary fee on an ordinary application for arrest of a person as the original fee itself is.

In these circumstances I think the order of the District Munsif calling for a further payment of 7-annas on the application before him was correct. The petition, therefore, fails and is dismissed. No costs.

Adverse possession—Landlord and tenant—Assertion of title by tenant—Re-entry, right of, absence of—Landlord, whether affected by assertion—Ejectment suit—Tenancy, plea of, whether bar to plea of adverse possession.

Where a tenant is in possession of land and the landlord has not the immediate right of re-entry, any assertion of title by the tenant would not make time run against the landlord, for the reason that the landlord cannot claim any redress so long as he is not entitled to get possession of the land. The real fact which makes the Law of Limitation run against the landlord is that he is entitled to immediate possession. [p. 619, col. 1.]

In a suit for possession of land, a mere assertion of tenancy does not deprive the tenant from pleading limitation and it is open to him in the first place, to plead that the land was comprised in his tenancy, and, in the second place to assert that if the tenancy is not established, as he has held possession of the land for more than 12 years, the right of the plaintiff to recover possession has been extinguished by the Law of Limitation. [p. 619, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Dinajpur, dated the 24th of March 1922, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 18th of February 1921.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak, Moulvi Nuruddin Ahmed and Babu Kali Kinkar Chakravarti, for the Appellants.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Peary Mohan Chatterjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment of the purchaser of a jote by the landlord. The plaintiff's case was that one Trailakhya Nath Chaudhury was the former tenant of the jote, that the defendants were in possession as purchasers of the whole mouza and as Trailakhya or his heirs were not in possession of any portion of the jote the defendants were trespassers although they purported to purchase the jote which was an ordinary non-occupancy holding or a non-permanent tenure which is not transferable. The defence was that the jama was a permanent tenure, that the son of Trailakhya had mortgaged it to the defendant's predecessor Khetshi Das who bought and obtained possession of the property in execution of the mortgage-decree in 1903 and that the defendants purchased the jama from Khetshi in 1907 and had been in possession since then. Both the Courts below on this pleading and the evidence in the case have found that the plaintiffs have lost their right to recover possession by lapse of time and that the defendants by asserting permanent right in the jote have acquired the right adversely to the plaintiffs. This finding recorded by the learned Judge is in the following words: "We thus have that since 1903 Khetshi Das, and subsequently the defendants have been holding this tenure asserting it to be a permanent tenure to the knowledge of the landlord." This finding of fact, in our judgment, concludes the case. Three points have been argued in appeal by the learned Advocate for the appellants.

The first is that there being no case set up by the defendants as to the acquisition of any title by adverse possession, the lower Appellate Court is wrong in holding that the defendants have acquired a permanent right by adverse possession. In order to understand this objection, it is necessary to refer to the pleadings in the case. The plaintiff's case as made out in the plaint is that as the heir of Trailakhya gave up possession of the jote without making any arrangement for payment of rent, the same should be regarded as having come into possession of the plaintiffs and the defendants should, therefore, be regarded as trespassers illegally possessing the land; and, further, that as the jote was either a non-transferable occupancy or non-transferable non-permanent tenure, the heir of Trailakhya having transferred the same without the consent of the plaintiffs and against their will, the defendants acquired no right or title to the disputed land and they were, therefore, trespassers. The defendants, on the other hand, pleaded that they had purchased an istamrari mokarrari tenure from Trailakhya's heir and thus they and their predecessor have been in possession of the disputed land for more than 20 years by virtue of such purchase and under assertion of such right. The Courts cannot, therefore, be said to be wrong in holding that the defendants and their predecessors have been holding it for more than 12 years with adverse possession of a limited interest, and as they claim to hold the land as a permanent tenure, the suit of the plaintiffs for ejectment is barred by limitation. Reference has been made on behalf of the appellants to the case of Madhavrao Waman v. Raghunath Venkatesh Deshpande (1) and it is argued on the authority of the pronouncement of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee that the defendants could not acquire any title by adverse possession as against the plaintiffs landlords. The case referred to has no bearing on the present question.

(1) 74 Ind. Cas. 362; 50 I. A. 255; 47 B. 798; 25 Bom. L. R. 1005; (1923) M. W. N. 689; (1923) A. I. R. (P. C.) 205; 33 M. L. T. 389; 28 C. W. N. 857; 20 L. W. 248; 47 M. L. J. 248 (P. C.).

There their Lordships held that persons in possession who had a limited right cannot acquire a permanent right by adverse possession. The case of Beni Pershad Koeri v. Dudhnath Roy (2) is next relied upon. That case too has no bearing on the present question. There it was held that a life-tenant cannot acquire a higher title by adverse possession; or to put more broadly, a tenant who is in possession of land under a certain right cannot acquire a higher right by merely asserting that he is a tenant of a superior chur or possessing rights higher than what he already had in the land. This view of the law cannot be disputed. If a tenant is in possession of land and the landlord has not the immediate right of re-entry, any assertion by the tenant would not make time run against the landlord for the reason that the landlord cannot claim any redress so long as he is not entitled to get possession of the land. To hold that whenever the tenant asserts a right which he did not possess, it is the duty of the landlord to repudiate such right would be to drive the landlord to have recourse to Courts of Law almost every day, merely because the tenant has chosen to assert a right which he does not possess. The real circumstances which makes the Law of Limitation run against the landlord is that he is entitled to possession. This principle has been enunciated in the case of Birendra Kishore Manikya v. Fuljan Bibi (3), when it is said that while a contract of tenancy is in force, either party cannot practically obtain a variation thereof by persisting for a long period in his assertion that the term is otherwise than what it really is.

It is next argued that the defendants are not competent to claim any title by adverse possession as they stand in the shoes of Surendra or Trailakhya the nature of whose tenancy has not been investigated by the Courts below. The contention is that Surendra's tenancy was a temporary one and, therefore, the defendants who have purchased his tenure cannot claim a higher right than that possessed by Surendra. The question is whether the defendants really claim such right and whether the Courts below are wrong for not enquiring into the nature and the character of Surendra's tenancy. The Courts below have held that the defendants as purchasers purchased the property as a permanent tenure and they have been holding it since their purchase as a permanent tenure to the knowledge of the plaintiff. This fact gives rise to the claim of adverse possession in favour of the defendants.

The third contention is that the learned Judge is wrong in holding that the plaintiffs had knowledge of the possession of Khetsi Das in 1903 merely on the fact that Khetsi Das deposited rent in that year under s. 61, Bengal Tenancy Act. This is a question of fact which we cannot deal with in second appeal. Under s. 63, Bengal Tenancy Act, notices must have been served upon the plaintiffs of the deposit and knowledge must be presumed therefrom. It may also be presumed that the Court did what the law required it to do for the purpose, and that the plaintiffs were informed of the deposit of rent by Khetsi. At any rate, it is not the plaintiffs' case that he looked to some body else for rent. The finding of the lower Appellate Court, therefore, that the defendants have acquired a permanent right in the tenure by adverse possession is based on considerations of facts and the evidence of the case. But it is not necessary to go so far in the present case in order to determine the plaintiffs' right to eject the defendants. The case may be disposed of on the simple ground of limitation apart from adverse possession. The defendants claim to be in possession of the land as tenants for more than 12 years with the knowledge of the plaintiffs and, therefore, the latter's claim for ejectment must be taken to be barred according to the principles laid down in the case of Raktoo Singh v. Sudhram Ahir (4), where it is held on the authority of the case of Dino Monee Debia v. Doorga Pershad Mojoomdar (5) that in a suit for possession of land a mere assertion of tenancy does not deprive the tenant from pleading limitation and that it is open to the defendants, in the first place, to plead that the lands were comprised in their tenancy and the second place to assert that if the tenancy was not established as they had held possession for more than 12 years the right of the plaintiffs to recover possession was extinguished by the Law of Limitation.

(2) 26 I. A. 216; 27 C. 156; 4 C. W. N. 274; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 580; 14 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 103 (P. C.).

(3) 38 Ind. Cas. 469; 25 C. L. J. 467.

It is further argued on behalf of the appellants that if the defendants had acquired the rights of a tenant by adverse possession, their tenancy has been determined by the plaintiffs by service of notice. This question in fact is covered by the point we have dealt with above. The defendants have acquired by adverse possession the right to remain on the land as against the plaintiffs whose right to eject the defendant has been extinguished under the Law of Limitation. Moreover the plaintiffs came to Court on the allegation that the defendants were trespassers. They, therefore, cannot now set up a different case. On all these considerations we think that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is correct and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 64—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 19 (1)—Letters of Administration for portion of property, application for—Stamp duty payable—Inventory of entire property, whether necessary.

An application for the grant of Letters of Administration with the Will annexed in respect of a portion of the property covered by the Will need not contain an inventory of the entire property.

Letters of Administration can be granted in respect of a part of the property covered by a Will. In such a case the petition is leviable with stamp duty only on the value of the property claimed, and not on the value of the entire property.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 29th October 1924.

Mr. K. J. Rustomji, for the Appellant.

Pandit Sheo Narain and Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—By a Will, dated the 18th of May 1923, Hakim Singh devised his entire property in the following manner—

1. the self-acquired moveable property was left to Musammât Satwant Kaur, one of his widows, while the ancestral moveable and immoveable property was to be shared equally by Musammât Satwant Kaur and Musammât Gurbachan Kaur, her co-widow. Musammât Satwant Kaur was given the right of the monies deposited in the Banks or due from the Post Office and other debtors. An application was made by Musammât Satwant Kaur for the grant of Letters of Administration with the Will annexed in respect of a sum of Rs. 3,000 which was deposited in the National Bank of India, Amritsar Branch. The application was opposed by Musammât Gurbachan Kaur and Gujar Singh, the brother of the deceased. On the pleadings, four issues arose. Two of those issues were:—

(2) Whether the application was in proper form, and

(3) whether the petitioner could apply for grant of Letters of Administration in respect of the part of the property of the deceased covered by the Will.

Issue No. 1 related to the question of jurisdiction, and issue No. 4 raised the question whether the Will had been executed by Hakim Singh and whether he had a disposing mind at the time he executed the Will. All these issues were decided by the District Judge against the objectors, who granted under s. 77 of Act V of 1881, Letters of Administration with a copy of the Will annexed with regard to the realising the sum of Rs. 3,000 and interest from the National Bank of India.

In the argument before me the findings on issues Nos. 1 and 4 are not challenged. The only questions that have been argued before me are those covered by issues Nos. 2 and 3. Mr. Rustomji has contended that the application was not in proper form, inasmuch as an inventory of the entire property covered by the Will was not annexed to the application. The application related to only one particular item and Mr. Rustomji has not shown any authority that even in such a case it was necessary to give an inventory of the entire property.

The other contention put forward before me is that Letters of Administration cannot be granted in respect of part of the property covered by the Will. He has been unable to draw my attention to any provision in the Act prohibiting the grant of Letters of Administration for part of the property only. He has, however, relied upon s. 19(1) and Schedule III of the Court Fees Act and has contended that stamp duty should have been paid on the value of the entire property covered by the Will. I cannot hold that the provisions of the Probate and Administration Act are in any way controlled by the Court Fees Act. Stamp duty has been paid in respect of the amount claimed. As remarked by the District Judge the words "The amount of assets which are likely to come into the petitioner's hand occurring in s. 61" indicate in a way that the Legislature did contemplate that a case may occur in which it may be necessary to make an application for the grant of administration for part of the property only. The learned Counsel has not been able to cite any direct or indirect authority in support of his contention.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Cess Act (IX B. C. of 1880), ss. 41, 93, 107—Landlord and tenant—Liability to pay cess, determination of—Cess valuation statement, entries in, value of—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts.

The meaning of the provision contained in s. 107 of the Cess Act is that what is done under the Act is done only for the purposes of the Act and has no other effect on the rights of the parties. The section does not in any way modify the conclusive effect given by s. 93 of the Act to the cess valuation. [p. 622, col. 1.]

The question as to the liability of a tenant to pay cess has to be determined under s. 42 of the Cess Act and involves the question of the tenant's status. It is not, however, his status under the Bengal Tenancy Act that is in question, but his status under the Cess Act and his liability under s. 41 of the latter Act must be determined according to the entries in the cess valuation statement and not with reference to the entries in the Record of Rights. A Civil Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with the entries in the cess valuation statement. [p. 622, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Arrah, dated the 18th of September 1922, modifying that of the Munsif, Buxar, dated the 28th of April 1922.

Mr. L. N. Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Arrah, varying a decree passed by the Munsif of Buxar. The plaintiff is the appellant. He sued the defendants for rent and cess for 1325 to 1328 and the only question is as to the amount of cess legally payable by the defendants.

The plaintiff's case was that the defendants were tenure-holders within the meaning of the Cess Act, that the annual value of their holding was Rs. 95-4-0 as entered in the cess valuation papers; that the rent of their holding as entered in the Record of Rights was Rs. 31-0-6, and that consequently under s. 41, cl. (2) of the Cess Act the defendants were liable to pay cess at the rate of one anna in the rupee calculated on the annual value of the holding, namely, Rs. 95-4-0, less half an anna in the rupee on the rent of the holding Rs. 31-0-6. The defence was that the defendants were cultivating *raiya*ts within the meaning of the Cess Act, and that they were liable only to pay cess under s. 41, cl. (3) at the rate of half an anna in the rupee upon the rent of their holding Rs. 31-0-6.

The Munsif held that the defendants were liable to pay cess at half an anna in the rupee on the annual value of their holding which was Rs. 95-4-0. There was an appeal by the plaintiff and a cross-appeal by the defendants. The plaintiff's appeal was dismissed and the cross-appeal was allowed and it was held by the Subordinate Judge that the defendants were liable to pay cess at half an anna in the rupee on Rs. 31-0-6. The plaintiff has come up to this Court in second appeal.

The argument on behalf of the appellant is that under s. 93 of the Cess Act the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to question the cess valuation. Section 93 provides that "Every valuation under this Part shall be open to revision by the Commissioner or Board of Revenue, and not otherwise." Now the cess valuation statement shows the names of the defendants in column 1 which is headed: "Name of zemindars, tenure-holders and sub-tenure-holders" In column 2 of which the heading is "Nij-jote and other assessed areas of landlords" is entered Rs. 63-3-0. In column 3 which is headed "*raiya*twari lands" is entered Rs. 32-1-0. The total valuation is given in column 7 as Rs. 95-4-0 and that is the total of columns 2 and 3. Column 8 which is headed "Revenue or rent on which deduction under s. 41 is allowable" shows an entry of Rs. 31-0-6. The appellant contends that, on this document, it must be taken for the purposes of the Cess Act that the defendants are tenure-holders, that the annual value of their holding is Rs. 95-4-0 and that deduction is allowable under s. 41 on the rental of Rs. 31-0-6, in other words, that this document establishes the plaintiff's claim.

The argument on behalf of the respondents is that the defendants are accorded in the Record of Rights as tenants at fixed rates at a rental of Rs. 31-0-6 and that they must, therefore, be assessed as cultivating *raiya*s, and that their liability is determined by s. 41, cl. (3). The argument based on s. 93 is sought to be answered by a reference to s. 107 which says: "Nothing in this Part contained, and nothing done in accordance with this Act, shall be deemed to affect the rights of any person in respect of any immovable property or of any interest therein except as otherwise expressly provided in this Act." Now the meaning of this section is clear, namely, that what is done under the Cess Act is done only for the purposes of that Act and has no other effect on the rights of persons. It does not in any way modify the conclusive effect given by s. 93 to the cess valuation. The fact that the defendants are recorded in the Record of Rights as tenants at fixed rates is strictly irrelevant to the present question. The question is not as to the status of the defendants under the Bengal Tenancy Act; the question is as to their status and liability for the purposes of the Cess Act. The Revenue Authorities have determined that the defendants are tenure-holders and that the annual value of their holding is Rs. 95-4-0 of which Rs. 63 3-0 is in respect of lands held by themselves and Rs. 32-1-0 is in respect of lands let out to tenants.

It is argued for the respondents that the question in the suit is as to the defendants' liability to pay and that this has to be determined under s. 41 and involves the question of the defendants' status. But it is not their status under the Bengal Tenancy Act that is in question, but their status under the Cess Act and their liability under s. 41 must be determined according to the entries in the cess valuation statement. This statement was compiled in the presence of the defendants; and, if they were aggrieved at the entry, they ought to have appealed to the Commissioner or to the Board of Revenue as provided by s. 93. Not having done so, they are concluded by the entry in the valuation statement.

It is obvious that a great injustice would be done to the plaintiff if the defendants' contention were to prevail. The plaintiff has been made liable for cess on a valuation of which one of the items is the annual value of the defendants' tenure. If it were now held that the defendants were not tenure-holders, then the liability for this cess will fall on the plaintiff alone through no fault of his, but because the defendants had failed to contest the entry. In my opinion it was for the Revenue Authorities to decide whether the defendants were tenure-holders of cultivating *raiya*s for the purposes of the Cess Act and in this matter the entry in the Record of Rights is wholly irrelevant. The status of the defendants under the Bengal Tenancy Act is in no way affected by this valuation which stands by itself and the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to interfere with it.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal with costs and decree the plaintiff's suit in full. The plaintiff is entitled to his costs in all the Courts.

A usufructuary mortgagee who had been dispossessed from the land mortgaged brought a suit for recovery of possession but the suit was dismissed on the ground that the property mortgaged was joint family property and that all the members of the family had not joined in the mortgage. It was found that the mortgage was genuine and that consideration had passed but that there was no legal necessity for the mortgage. The Court also stated in its judgment that a money-decree could not be passed in favour of the plaintiff as he had made no prayer for such a decree. Against that decree the defendants filed an appeal attacking the finding as to the genuineness of the mortgage and there was a cross-appeal by the plaintiff asking for a money-decree. The cross-appeal was dismissed on the ground that it was not sufficiently stamped and the appeal was dismissed on the ground that although no consideration had passed the appeal was not competent inasmuch as the suit had been dismissed in the lower Court. The plaintiff subsequently brought a money suit to recover the amount due under the mortgage-bond:

Held, (1) that it was open to the plaintiff in the previous suit to sue for the mortgage money under the provisions of s. 68 (b) of the Transfer of Property Act and that plaintiff having failed to ask for that relief in the previous suit the present suit was barred under the provisions of O. II of r. 2 of the C. P. C.; [p. 624, cols. 1 & 2.]

(2) that the finding by the Appellate Court in the previous suit that no consideration had passed in respect of the mortgage-bond operated as res judicata between the parties and that the present suit must, therefore, fail on that account also. [p. 624, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Adami, J.—The plaintiff in the case out of which this second appeal comes to us took a mortgage from Basudeo Rai and Shankar Dayal Rai in consideration of an advance of Rs. 950. He was to take possession of 3 bighas of raiya land and to enjoy the usufruct in lieu of interest; no date was fixed for re-payment, but the mortgagor was to be entitled to recover possession by payment of the amount advanced on the 30th Jeth in any year. The usufructuary mortgage bond was executed on August 11th 1914. In 1919 a dispute arose regarding the possession of the land which resulted in proceedings under s. 145, Cr. P. C. In those proceedings it was decided that the plaintiff mortgagee and his lessee were out of possession. Thereupon the plaintiff instituted a suit for recovery of possession on the strength of his mortgage-bond. His only prayer in the plaint was for recovery of possession. After the close of the case, however, he put in a petition that he might amend the plaint by an alternative prayer for recovery of the mortgage debt. The learned Munsif rejected this petition and thereafter dismissed the suit on the ground that the property mortgaged was joint family property and that the defendant No. 3 had not joined in the mortgage and that the plaintiff had failed to prove any legal necessity. The Munsif held that the mortgage was genuine and consideration had passed. In his judgment the learned Munsif stated that a money-decree could not be allowed as there had been no prayer for it; he said that he left the point open and plaintiffs may seek their remedy, if so advised, against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for the money actually advanced.

Against this judgment and decree an appeal was filed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 against the decision that the mortgage-bond was genuine. There was a cross-appeal by the plaintiff asking for a money-decree. This cross-appeal was dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge because the cross-appeal was not sufficiently stamped. As to the appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge held that no consideration had passed, but he proceeded to find that no appeal lay because the defendants had been successful in the Court below and, therefore, there was nothing to appeal against.

The present plaintiffs, on the basis of the statement made by the Munsif that they might seek their remedy for the money actually advanced, instituted the present suit on the 17th August 1921, praying for recovery of the debt under the bond of 1914.

The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, first, on the ground that a money-decree had been asked for in the previous suit and refused and that the provisions of s. 11 of the C. P. C. barred the present suit, and secondly on the ground that as the plaintiff has the opportunity in the previous suit of asking for the relief and had not taken that opportunity, O. II, r. 2 of the C. P. C. precluded him from suing for the relief.

On appeal the learned District Judge has upheld the finding of the Subordinate Judge.

Before us Mr. Das takes up the point that s. 11 of the C. P. C. cannot operate because, though the Subordinate Judge on appeal held that no consideration passed, that finding can have no strength as res judicata since the Subordinate Judge found that no appeal lay and dismissed the appeal.

The second point taken by Mr. Das is that the lower Courts are mistaken in thinking that O. II, r. 2 will operate. His contention is that the cause of action in the previous suit and the cause of action in the present suit are wholly different. He says that in the previous suit the cause of action was the dispossession of the plaintiffs and the prayer was only for recovery of possession, whereas in the present suit the plaintiff is merely asking for the re-payment of a debt incurred under the bond. He contends that it cannot be argued that in the previous suit the plaintiff could have asked for a money decree on the basis of s 68 cl. (b) of the Transfer of Property Act, because it was found in that suit that there was no mortgage, and in fact the Court in the previous suit, having come to that finding, could not have given relief under s. 68, cl. (b).

I will deal with the second contention of Mr. Das first. It is quite plain that when the plaintiff instituted his first suit claiming the bond to be a mortgage-bond and asking for recovery of possession, it was open to him to claim for the re-payment of the mortgage money under s. 68, cl. (b). That relief was open to him and he did not claim it. His prayer for an amendment of the plaint was rejected and the remark of the Munsif in his judgment can hardly be held to amount to the grant of leave to institute a suit for money. It is quite true that the Munsif having found that there was no valid mortgage would be unable to grant a decree under s. 68, cl. (b). It is true too that the cause of action for recovery of the money as a debt due under the bond would be different from the cause of action in the mortgage suit asking for recovery of possession, for the facts to be proved would not be similar in the two cases. In both, however, the bond would have to be relied on. The trouble to my mind is, if Mr. Dass' arguments are accepted and it is held that the present suit is merely a suit for a debt due on the bond, limitation will come in, for the bond was executed on the 11th August 1914 and the suit was not instituted till the 17th August 1921 and the suit would be barred. There is no doubt in my mind that in the previous suit the plaintiff should have asked for the relief allowed by s. 68, cl. (b) of the Transfer of Property Act. He certainly cannot ask for that relief now.

With regard to s. 11 of the C. P. C. the learned Subordinate Judge came to a direct finding on an issue between the parties that consideration did not pass in 1914. The reason given by the learned Subordinate Judge for dismissing the appeal was not altogether a good reason. It was necessary to decide the point whether consideration passed between the parties and the learned Munsif came to a decision on that point which was against the interest of the defendants. If no appeal had been brought the finding of the Munsif would have operated as res judicata against the defendants, and, therefore, as decided by Mullick, J., in the case of Raghunath Kurmi v. Deonarain Rai (Second Appeal No. 1419 of 1916), the defendants had a right of appeal although the suit against them had been dismissed. I think, therefore, that s. 11 of the C. P. C. will operate and bar this second suit, it having been found that no consideration passed on the bond of 1914.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Sen, J.—I agree.

AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, paras. 14, 20—Partition suit—Compromise referring certain matters to arbitration—Arbitration, nature of—Arbitrator proceeding ex parte after due notice, legality of—Finding that no material has been produced by parties with regard to certain items, effect of—Award, validity of—Appeal—Oral evidence, appreciation of—Trial Judge, opinion of, value of.

A partition suit was compromised and a decree was passed in accordance with the compromise. The compromise provided that certain preliminary matters had been settled in a certain way between the parties.

and that certain properties which were the subject of the suit should be treated as joint properties and should be divided among the parties by a named arbitrator according to the shares of the parties, taking into consideration the conveniences and inconveniences. The compromise also contained a clause that if the arbitrator "fails or becomes unable to make the divisions and partition of all these properties that are settled as ijmali and to adjust and settle the account relating to such of the karbars as to which accounts have to be taken, in such a case, any of the parties shall have power to enforce such divisions and partition and the taking of such accounts by executing this decree and upon such adjustment and settlement of accounts each party shall get a decree for the amounts that may be found due to him or her thereby":

Held, that the parties intended that no further steps should be taken in Court and that the arbitration should be an arbitration without the intervention of the Court and that the rules contained in the Second Schedule to the C. P. C. relating to such arbitrations were applicable to the case. [p. 626, col. 1.]

Where an arbitrator is authorised to proceed in the absence of a party who fails to appear in spite of the notice of the date of hearing being given to him, the award made by the arbitrator cannot be objected to on the ground that the arbitrator carried on an ex parte enquiry owing to the failure of one of the parties to the reference to appear before him after proper notice. [p. 626, col. 2; p. 627, col. 1.]

Where with reference to certain items in dispute between the parties, no material is produced before the arbitrator on which he can decide that there is any liability from one party to another, the award of the arbitrator cannot be objected to on the ground that it fails to determine some of the points in dispute between the parties. The effect of the award is that no party can make any claim against any other party in respect of such items, and the award is final for all time settling the dispute between the parties relating to such items. [p. 629, col. 1.]

Where there is direct conflict of oral evidence with regard to any point, an Appellate Court must give weight to the impression that the witnesses made on the Judge in whose presence they gave evidence. [p. 627, col. 2.]

Appeals against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Burdwan, dated the 20th February 1922.

Babus Brojo Lal Chakravarti, Baranashibashi Mookerjee and Pyari Mohan Chatterji, for the Appellants.

Babus Rupendra Coomar Mitra and Rama Prasad Mukhopadhaya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals are both preferred against the same order of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 20th February 1922, by which he directs that a certain award be filed. The parties to this case are members of a joint family being the descendants of one Hira Lal Kundu. The appellants in Appeal No. 133 of 1922 represent all the members of one branch of the family, being Hem Chandra Kundu the son of Hira Lal's son Trilochan, Srimati Madhabi Sundari Dasi, the mother of Hem Chandra and Srimati Bhuvati Sundari Dasi his wife. The other parties to this litigation are Kumud Kamini Dasi, widow of Hira Lal's son, Gour Mohan Kundu, and the descendants of Gour Mohan. The appellant in Appeal No. 210 is Atulashi Dasi widow of Rampada Kundu son of Gour Mohan. In 1915 Bibhuti Bhusan Kundu grandson of Gour Mohan instituted a suit for partition of the family property. That suit was decreed on compromise on the 21st December 1916. The solehnama which was filed on behalf of all the parties was made part of the decree, and in that decree Radha Kishore Ta was appointed arbitrator. He pronounced the award on the 20th December 1919 and Jnanendra Chandra Kundu the youngest son of Gour Mohan applied to the Court for an order directing that the award be filed. This application has been contested by all the members of the family except Jnanendra's mother.

Before us objection has been taken to the award on several grounds which we will deal with in order. The first ground taken is that the reference was one in a pending suit and that, therefore, the award cannot be filed in accordance with the procedure laid down in the Second Schedule of the C. P. C. from para. 20 onwards which relate to arbitration without the intervention of a Court. This point depends on the effect of the decree which was passed in the original title suit of 1915. In form that decree appears to be a final decree which terminated the litigation and not a preliminary decree which required further direction by the Court before effect could be given to it. The decree after setting out the claim goes on to state that this suit coming up on the 22nd December 1916 for final disposal it is ordered and decreed that this suit be decreed in the terms of the solehnama and the solehnama provides that certain preliminary matters relating to certain deeds of release have been settled in a certain way between the parties and that the remaining properties which were the subject of the suit shall be treated as joint properties and shall be divided by the arbitrator according to the shares of the parties taking into consideration the conveniences and inconveniences. It further provides that the arbitrator shall examine the accounts of various business and other matters and settle those accounts between the parties. There is further a provision regarding other matters which are not of importance with reference to this appeal. The important clause with reference to the present argument is cl. 9 of the solehnama which is in the following terms: "If Radha Kishore Ta fails or becomes unable to make the divisions and partition of all these properties that are settled as ijmali and to adjust and settle the account relating to such of the karbars as to which accounts have to be taken, in such a case, any of the parties shall have power to enforce such divisions and partition and the taking of such accounts by executing this decree and upon such adjustment and settlement of accounts each party shall get a decree for the amounts that may be found due to him or her thereby". That is the only clause in the decree which provides for any further action by the Court. But action can only be taken under this clause in the event of the arbitrator failing to perform his duty. If there has been compliance by the arbitrator with the conditions of the solehnama as regards dividing the properties and settling accounts nothing remains to be done by the Court. In the present case it is not necessary to decide what action can be taken under this clause in the event of such failure on the part of the arbitrator. If he has failed to make a binding award which can be filed, this suit would be dismissed. If the award is held to be a proper award this cl. 9 will not come into operation. In our opinion cl. 9 is in favour of the respondents' case that the parties intended that no further steps should be taken in Court and that the arbitration should be an arbitration without the intervention of the Court and that this is the effect of the decree in which the solehnama is embodied.

The next point urged is that if there was a valid submission to arbitration it was revoked for good cause. On this point we are in agreement that the findings of the lower Court that the revocation either by Hem Chandra Kundu or by Hrishikesb, the brother and am muktear of Atulashi Dasi, has not been proved. It is not necessary to deal with this point at great length because it is dependent on the question as to whether there has been misconduct by the arbitrator. The connection is two-fold. Whether there was actual revocation or not is a question of fact on which there is contradictory evidence and we shall have to deal with the credibility of the evidence in dealing with the question of misconduct. Further even if there were revocation it would not be effective unless it was for just cause, and unless we hold that there has been misconduct on the part of the arbitrator we could not give effect to the contention of the appellant that there was revocation of the arbitrator's authority.

As regards the question of misconduct the strongest case is made on behalf of the appellants in Appeal No. 133 of Hem Chandra Kundu. The case on this point as put forward on his behalf is as follows: The dispute was referred to the arbitrator towards the end of December 1916. The arbitrator sat in January 1917 and March 1917, but practically nothing was done. Then for 2 years and 8 months nothing more was heard of the arbitration. In December 1919 the arbitrator was advised and he believed that he must decide the case within three years from the date of the order of reference. On the 2nd December he fixed the 10th of December as the date of hearing the parties. On receiving notice of this date Hem Chandra Kundu wired that he could not come on the ground that his son was ill, and on this information the arbitrator postponed the sitting till the 20th December. On that date Hem Chandra appeared with certain *khata*s which he wished the arbitrator to examine. In the meantime in the absence of Hem Chandra the arbitrator had been holding his enquiry and had really finished it on the 19th. The drafting of the report continued on the 19th and the morning of the 20th December. The draft report was then fair copied and pronounced, and Hem Chandra's application that his *khata*s should be examined was refused. If these facts had been established there can be no doubt that the arbitrator would have been guilty of legal misconduct. On examination of the evidence we find that this case has not been established. In the first place Hem Chandra's application for adjournment did not reach the arbitrator until the 11th December. He had given due notice that he would proceed with the arbitration on the 10th and the solehnama expressly provides that if the parties do not appear after due notice the arbitrator can proceed ex parte. Consequently on the 10th when Hem Chandra did not appear the arbitrator was justified in proceeding with the arbitration in his absence as he did. Then further it is not shown that Hem Chandra was led to believe that the arbitration proceedings were postponed till the 20th December. Admittedly the arbitrator wrote a letter to Hem Chandra as regards his appearance on the 20th. That letter has not been put before us. It is not clear whether or not it was put in evidence before the lower Court. If it was it has not been printed in the paper-book; consequently there is nothing to rebut the arbitrator's story as to what actually happened in this connexion. This will be found set out in the commencement of the award. There it is stated that after issue of notice on the 2nd December Hem Chandra on obtaining notice appeared before the arbitrator at Burdwan and asked for time and it was settled that the arbitration proceeding would commence from the 10th December. The arbitrator understanding that he was trying to waste time for nothing sent him a telegram on the 10th December. But notwithstanding he failed to appear. On the 11th December the arbitrator received a registered letter from him asking for adjournment. But he had already commenced taking accounts. Then having perceived that on settlement of accounts Hem Chandra would become liable for a large amount he again sent a telegram on the 12th December and also a letter through a messenger not only to Hem Chandra but also to his mother and wife who have joined with him in this appeal, for the purpose of enabling them to appear and produce if they so liked evidence on their behalf on the 20th December at 8 A.M., in the morning. It would thus appear that Hem Chandra had no reason to think that the enquiry would be postponed to the 20th December. He was aware that the arbitrator would proceed in his absence. All that the arbitrator undertook was that he would not finally pronounce his award without giving Hem Chandra and the other members of his branch of the family an opportunity of being heard on the 20th December. As regards what happened on the 20th December there is direct contradiction in the evidence. According to the arbitrator Hem Chandra appeared and he heard all that he had to say. That statement he makes in para. 1 of his award a contemporaneous record written on that very day. According to Hem Chandra the arbitrator refused to look at the accounts he had produced or hear him at all. In our opinion the probabilities are in favour of the arbitrator's version. He was an independent person selected for the office of arbitrator by consent of all parties. When he had specially fixed the 20th December for hearing what Hem Chandra had to say it seems unlikely that he would not have listened to him. Further where there is direct conflict of evidence we must give weight to the impression that the witnesses made on the Judge in whose presence they gave evidence. Here the learned Subordinate Judge was evidently most favourably impressed by the manner in which Radha Kishore gave his evidence and took the contrary view as to the value of the evidence of Hem Chandra, Harishikesh and the other witnesses who supported them on this point. As regards Harishikesh we certainly agree that his evidence is most unsatisfactory. He has not given any reason for his absence during the arbitration proceedings. He has admitted that the arbitration proceedings were going on for three or four months before the 20th December and he cannot be heard to say that he was in ignorance of the proceeding that was going on. But he has given no explanation of his absence from the 10th to the 19th December. That there was a quarrel between him and the arbitrator on the 20th is admitted. But it would appear from the evidence that it had nothing to do with the arbitrator's conduct in connexion with the arbitration proceedings but arose out of a dispute in consequence of Harishikesh having entered Radha Kishore's house under circumstances which Radha Kishore thought improper. We have no hesitation in accepting the evidence on the plaintiff's side that this quarrel took place after delivery of the award and not before.

Another point that has been urged as regards the case of Hem Chandra relating to the refusal to examine the *khata*s is that Hem Chandra in cross-examination stated that he filed all the *khata*s he had before Salis. If he had done this he could not have had any khata to produce before him on the 20th December. No question was put to him in re-examination to enable him to explain this damaging admission. We hold, therefore, that the contention that the arbitrator refused to admit evidence produced before him or to hear the parties when they appeared has not been sustained and that the proceedings were properly held ex parte after due notice to all parties concerned in accordance with the terms of the solehnama.

Another point in which there is alleged to have been misconduct is that the solehnama provided that the arbitrator should work in consultation with two other gentlemen, a Pleader Babu Bidhu Bhusan Sikdar and a mukhtear Babu Jagabandhu Hajra. It is contended that he did not consult the mukhtear Babu Jagabandhu Hajra. The evidence as to what actually happened is contradictory. The arbitrator says that he consulted Babu Jagabandhu Hajra, who left the entire matter to him and his uncle. Babu Jagabandhu Hajra's story is that he advised the arbitrator not to proceed ex parte and the arbitrator did not take his advice and after that he never gave him any opinion as to the proceedings. Here also we think the arbitrator's version should be accepted. But whatever version may be accepted the fact remains that for some reason or other Babu Jagabandhu Hajra refused to advise the arbitrator. After advice was refused the arbitrator was not bound to consult Babu Jagabandhu Hajra further.

The next objection taken to the conduct of the arbitrator is as regards the method in which the partition of the immoveable properties was made. As regards the division between two branches of the family into 8 annas share it appears that there had previously been an amicable partition between them. This amicable partition was accepted by the arbitrator. It does not appear that any objection was made before him by any one concerned, and by so doing the arbitrator acted quite properly. Objection is taken to the arbitrator's method of dividing the property belonging to the branch of the family descended from Gour Mohan. This property had to be divided into four parts. It appears from the evidence that the plaintiff Jnanendra made a division of this property into four shares and it was decided by lot; which share should come to the representative of each of the four sons of Gour Mohan. It is contended that this was not in compliance with the terms of the solehnama which provided that the division should be made after considering the relative conveniences and inconveniences of the plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4. There is nothing in the evidence to suggest that the partition by lot was not properly conducted. In our opinion it is hard to imagine a fairer way of dividing the property, since Jnanendra in making the allotments would be bound to make them as equal as possible inasmuch as he was as likely as any of the other four members of the family to get the worst lot if there was any appreciable difference between them. There is nothing to show that there was any material before the arbitrator on which he could hold that there was any difference in the lots as regards the question of convenience and inconvenience. It is said that he was wrong in not himself preparing the four list of shares of property, but it was sufficient that it was done under his orders and the division was approved by him. We hold, therefore, that the arbitrator did not violate the terms of the reference in dividing the shares of this branch of the family in this manner. We may add that there was no specific ground of objection taken on this point nor was the arbitrator cross-examined as to his reasons for making the division of this part of the property in this manner.

We now come to the question of the accounts. So far as the accounts of the khata businesses are concerned we have already given our reasons for holding that the arbitrator had full material before him to come to a decision on these accounts. Objection is also taken in respect of the other matters of accounts which were referred to the arbitrator. He was required to take accounts relating to the Mohanpur dwelling house up to the year 1317. The only accounts which were produced before him ended on the death of Trilochan in Sarvan 1314 and on those accounts he held that Hem Chandra was liable for the sum of Rs. 1,341-4-10 gundas. In respect of other matters to which reference is made in the solehnama no accounts were produced before him and he has stated that it is impossible to determine whether any of the parties had any liability in relation thereof. Some other objections also have been taken as regards the items, but these related to matters which were most undoubtedly within the arbitrator's powers to decide.

The point that is strongly urged is that as the arbitrator has not adjudicated on all the points which were referred to him his award must be set aside, since that is one of the grounds referred to in para. 14 of the Second Schedule of the C. P. C., and under para. 21 of that Schedule if such ground is proved in a case of arbitration without the intervention of the Court, the Court cannot order the award to be filed. There has been an interesting argument as to the case law on the question whether the concluding portion of cl. (a) of para. 14 is applicable in the case of arbitration without the intervention of the Court. But on the view we take it is unnecessary to decide this point. In our opinion the learned Subordinate Judge and also the arbitrator himself have not realized the real effect of the arbitrator's findings with reference to these accounts. The arbitrator's finding really comes to this. In respect of these claims in dispute between the parties with reference to these accounts no material was produced before him on which he could decide that there was any liability from one party to another. The effect of this finding if the award is filed will be that no party to these proceedings could make any claim against any other party in respect of these accounts. They had an opportunity to make out their claims and they failed to take advantage of it. They cannot in any subsequent proceeding again raise such claim. It, therefore, follows that the arbitrator's award is final for all time settling the dispute between the parties relating to these accounts. We, therefore, hold that no ground mentioned in para. 14 has been proved, since the award has not left undetermined any of the matters referred to arbitration.

We hold, therefore, that the objections taken by the appellants fail and that the order of the lower Court directing the award to be filed should be upheld. The appeals are dismissed with costs.

We assess the hearing fee in each appeal at ten gold mohurs.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art. 17 (6)— Decree, mode of execution of, appeal against—Court-fee payable.

When an appeal is not preferred against a decree as a whole, but only against the mode of the execution of the decree, the case falls under Art. 17 (6) of Sch. II to the Court Fees Act, and a stamp of Rs. 10 is sufficient. [p. 630, col. 1.]

Civil revision from the decision of the District Judge, Attock, dated the 28th November 1924.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Petitioner.

Sheikh Niaz Muhammad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case instituted a suit against the defendant for dissolution of partnership. The Trial Court decreed the suit but added a direction that a Receiver should be appointed in respect of the partnership property (timber) who should bring it to the market and sell it. The plaintiff was ordered to supply the necessary funds for bringing the timber to the market. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge with a view to have this direction removed. The learned District Judge held that the amount which would have to be paid by the plaintiff in pursuance of the direction was more than Rs. 5,000 and, therefore, he had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. He also held that the Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 paid by the plaintiff on the memorandum of appeal was insufficient. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court from both these orders. A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the respondent that no appeal lay from the above orders. The appellant has, however, in his memorandum of appeal expressly prayed that, in case no appeal lay, the memorandum of appeal may be treated as a petition for revision. I pointed out to the learned Counsel for the respondent that it was a fit case in which petition for revision should be entertained under any circumstances. The learned Counsel did not argue the question of incompetency of an appeal. The question whether an appeal lies is a doubtful one.

and I would prefer, therefore, to treat the proceedings as a revision.

The view of the learned District Judge on both the points referred to above is erroneous. The value of the suit in the Trial Court for purposes of jurisdiction was Rs. 1,200. This valuation has not been shown to be erroneous and must, therefore, for the purposes of the appeal be accepted to be correct. The consequence is that an appeal from the decree or any part thereof lies to the District Judge and not to the High Court. As regards the question of Court-fees the plaintiff appealed to the District Judge only so far as the direction regulating the conduct of the Receiver in respect of the timber and as to the payment of expenses for bringing the timber to the market is concerned. He did not attack the decree as a whole. In other words the objection in appeal was to the manner in which the decree passed by the Trial Court was to be enforced. The case under the circumstances was clearly covered by cl. 6 of Art. 17 of the Second Schedule of the Court Fees Act. No authority was cited on behalf of the respondent in support of the view taken by the learned District Judge. The learned Counsel for the petitioner on the other hand relied upon the judgment of this Court in Civil Appeal No. 467 of 1917, where it was held that a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 was sufficient on a memorandum of appeal from a decree for partition where the appellant did not dispute the respective shares of the parties but sought only to impeach the mode of partition. The case was held to fall within the purview of Art. 17 (6) of Schedule II to the Court Fees Act. In Rup Chand v. Fateh Chand (1) a decree was granted to the plaintiff for possession of certain property but its operation was limited to the lifetime of a female holder. An appeal by the plaintiff seeking to have the condition limiting the tenure of the property to the time of the female holder was held to be sufficiently stamped with a Court-fee of Rs. 10. In Fateh Chand v. Bilas Rai (2) in a suit for partition the Trial Court passed a preliminary decree fixing the share of the parties and then appointed a Commissioner and ordered that the separate pieces of immoveable property shall be auctioned by the Commissioner among the parties, the share-holder being allowed to bid. The total sum thus paid in will be divided among the parties in the proportionate shares given above. The memorandum of appeal objecting to the mode of partition was held by the Chief Court of the Punjab to be sufficiently stamped with a Court-fee of Rs. 10 under Art. 17 (6) Schedule II of the Court Fees Act.

The judgment of this Court in Rama Singh v. Ram Chand, First Appeal No. 564 of 1914, also supports the contention of the appellant. In my opinion, therefore, the Court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal before the District Judge was sufficient and the learned District Judge was competent to entertain the appeal.

Accepting the petition I order that the memorandum of appeal be returned to the petitioner for being presented in the Court of the District Judge and I direct the District Judge to hear the appeal on its merits. The respondent will pay the costs of the petitioner in this Court.

AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANT No. 1—

RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 59—Mortgage—Attestation, proof of—Court, refusal of, to examine scribe—Appellate Court, power of, to admit evidence of scribe—Proof of execution.

In a suit on a mortgage one of the witnesses to the mortgage being dead and the other attesting witness being unable to say whether the mortgage-deed was or was not the document which he had attested, the plaintiff made an application for the issue of a commission to examine the scribe of the deed as a witness, it being alleged that the scribe was ill and was unable to attend the Court. This application was refused on the ground that it was not supported by a certificate from a recognized medical practitioner. In appeal the Appellate Court admitted in evidence the testimony of the scribe who deposed that the deed was executed in his presence;

Held, (1) that the Appellate Court had power to admit the evidence of the scribe both under cl. (a) and cl. (b) of r. 27 of O. XLI of the C. P. C.;

(2) that the evidence of the scribe was sufficient to prove the execution of the mortgage-deed.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rangpur, dated the 22nd April 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, First Court, at Gaibandha, dated the 14th June 1921.

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit to enforce a mortgage-bond executed by the defendant No. 1 in favour of the plaintiff on the 2nd April 1909. The amount secured by the bond was Rs. 400 and the total amount claimed was Rs. 1,000. The plaintiff's suit was resisted by defendant No. 2 who was a subsequent purchaser of the mortgaged property. He contended that the bond was collusive and without consideration. The defendant No. 1 in his written statement pleaded part payment. He did not, however, appear at the trial to contest the suit.

The Court of first instance dismissed the plaintiff's suit holding that the transaction was not a real one and that the plaintiff had not proved the execution of the mortgage.

The plaintiff appealed and on appeal the learned Subordinate Judge admitted certain additional evidence, namely, the statement of one Arabuddin who was the writer of the mortgage-bond and whom the plaintiff desired to examine on commission in the lower Court on the ground that he was ill but that application was refused by the learned Munsif. There was also an application to admit in evidence a certain order of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Gaibandha. On a consideration of this evidence and of the evidence adduced in the Trial Court the Subordinate Judge decreed the appeal with costs.

The defendant has appealed to this Court. The first contention of the appellant is that the lower Appellate Court is wrong in admitting in evidence the testimony of Arabuddin the writer of the document. He urges that the admission of this evidence and also of the order of Sub-Divisional Officer of Gaibandha does not come within the purview of O. XLI, r. 27, C. P. C. With regard to the evidence of Arabuddin it would appear that in the lower Court the plaintiff had applied for his examination on commission but his application was refused on the ground that it was not supported by a certificate from a recognised medical practitioner. The learned Advocate for the appellant contends that this will not, therefore, come within the purview of O. XLI, r. 27, C. P. C. Rule 27 has two clauses viz., (a) and (b). They run thus: (a) "The Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has refused to admit evidence which ought to have been admitted, or" (b) "the Appellate Court requires any document to be produced or any witness to be examined to enable it to pronounce judgment, or for any other substantial cause, the Appellate Court may allow such evidence or document to be produced or witness to be examined".

It seems to me that the admission of the evidence of Arabuddin may well come under either of these clauses. The order of the Sub-Divisional Officer at Gaibandha is to the following effect. "This may or may not be true. File 19th November 1920". As far as can be seen this piece of evidence proved nothing one way or the other.

The next ground taken by the learned Advocate for the appellant is that the lower Appellate Court is wrong in treating the scribe as an attesting witness in the case to prove execution of the bond. It is, however, quite clear from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge that he did not treat the evidence of Arabuddin as evidence of an attesting witness. The fact appears to be this: one of the witnesses to the mortgage deed is dead and the other witness when the document was read over to him was unable to say whether this was or was not the document which he had attested because, he stated that at the time of the execution of the deed it was not read over to him. He merely attested the signature of the executor. In such circumstances it was open to the plaintiff to prove execution of the deed by a person who was present at the time of the execution and for this purpose, he examined the scribe.

In these circumstances the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

versus

LAL SINGH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS
RESPONDENTS.Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXIII, r. 1—Withdrawal of suit—Inability to produce evidence—Revision.

The High Court can interfere on the revision side with an order passed under O. XXIII, r. 1 of the C. P. C., where that order proceeds on grounds other than those laid down in the rule. The words "other sufficient ground" in the rule are ejusdem generis with the grounds mentioned. [p. 632, col. 2.]

An order granting leave to withdraw a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the ground that the plaintiff had been unable to produce sufficient evidence to prove his case within the time allowed is without jurisdiction and can be set aside in revision. [p. 633, cols. 1 & 2.]

Civil revision from an order of the Sub-Judge, Tarn Taran, dated the 31st July 1924.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Durga Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order of a Subordinate Judge granting the plaintiffs leave to withdraw from their suit with permission to bring a fresh suit under the provisions of O. XXIII, r. 1, C. P. C.

The facts are briefly as follows:—

Lal Singh and Hir of full age of Hazara, and their minor brothers sued for redemption of a house on payment of Rs 77-5-0. The chief plea was that they were the legal heirs of the mortgagor. On the 8th July 1924, Jagat Ram applied to be appointed the next friend of the minor plaintiff in the place of Lal Singh. He also requested he might be allowed to produce fresh evidence but his application was refused by the Court on the ground that it was not a bona fide one. On the 23rd July the plaintiffs applied for leave to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh one as they had not been able to adduce sufficient evidence within the time allowed. The Court upon this passed the order of which revision is sought.

The Counsel for the respondents objects that no revision lies in a case of this sort and cites the case of Jhunku Lal v. Bisheshar Das (1) in which it was held that on an application for revision against an order passed under O. XXIII, r. 1, C. P. C., the Court had jurisdiction to grant leave to the plaintiffs to bring a fresh suit, and the fact that the Court may have exercised, and probably did exercise a wrong discretion in granting the plaintiff's application was not sufficient to bring the case within the purview of s. 115 of the C. P. C. The Judges in that case quoted with approval certain remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (2) which were as follows:—"It will be observed that the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise, or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved."

I have referred to the case in question and I do not think that the Privy Council intended to lay down any general rule and that their remarks must be deemed to have application to the case which was before them. There the High Court had, under s. 115, C. P. C., interfered on the revision side with the order of the District Judge and their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the High Court had the power so to interfere. No other case decided by any High Court in India has been referred to by Counsel for the respondents in which it has been held, as in Jhunku Lal v. Bisheshar Das (1) that the High Court has no power to interfere on the revision side with the order passed under O. XXIII, r. 1.

On the other hand numerous cases have been cited by Counsel for the petitioners in which High Courts have so interfered. The same point came up before me as a Judge of the Punjab Chief Court in the case of Munna Lal v. Chhabil Das (3) and, after considering the authorities then cited, I held that an order passed under O. XXIII, r. 1, C. P. C., is open to interference by the High Court on revision. I also held that the words "other sufficient ground" in O. XXIII, r. 1 (2) (b), C. P. C., are ejusdem generis with the defect referred to in rule 1 (2) (a) of the Code, so that permission to withdraw a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit cannot be granted except on grounds which are of the same nature as the grounds specified in cl. (a).

The following cases support the argument of Counsel for the petitioners:—

Bai Kashibai v. Shidappa Anapa (4). In that case the Court gave time to the plaintiff to adduce documents to counter-act the effect of the documents already produced by the defendants; and on the plaintiff's inability to adduce the documents on the appointed day, he applied for leave to withdraw from the suit with permission to file a fresh one on the same cause of action and the Court granted the leave. It was held that the Court acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction, and that the plaintiff's failure to produce the documents was not a sufficient ground to put the defendant to the trouble and annoyance of a fresh suit.

In Kannusami Pillai v. Jagathambal (5), it was held that assuming that the lower Court had jurisdiction to act under O. XXIII, r. 1 (2) (b), it acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction, as it did not exercise a judicial discretion in passing the order. The High Court accordingly set aside its order.

In Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi (6), where the lower Court had granted permission and leave to withdraw from the suit under s. 373 of the C. P. C., 1882, on the grounds of formal defect and the plaintiff's inability to produce the necessary evidence in time it was held that the ground on which the order was made by the Appellate Court was not a ground which contemplated by s. 373 of the C. P. C. and that, therefore, the order was without jurisdiction.

Again in Rama Singh v. Janak Singh (7), a Division Bench of the Patna High Court held that a Court has no jurisdiction to permit a suit to be withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit except under O. XLIII, r. 1, C. P. C.

I prefer the view expressed in these rulings to the one taken by the Allahabad High Court in the case reported as Janku Lal v. Bisheshar Das (1). I am of opinion that the High Court can interfere on the revision side with an order passed under O. XXIII, r. 1, if that order proceeds on grounds other than those laid down in r. 1. The only ground on which leave was granted in the present case was that the plaintiffs had failed within the time allowed to them to produce sufficient evidence upon which to prove their case.

Having regard to the authorities above referred to, I hold that this was not a ground which comes within the purview of O. XXIII, r. 1. I, therefore, allow the revision and setting aside the order of the lower Court, direct it to decide the case in accordance with law.

Counsel for the petitioners has stated before me that his clients have no objection to the plaintiffs putting in the document which they wish to produce and which the lower Court refused to accept on the ground that they were put in late but states that he does object to their being allowed to produce their oral evidence. Having regard to the fact that one of the plaintiffs is a minor it is for the Court to consider whether it should allow any further evidence to be produced or not.

Costs in this Court will abide the result.

Muhammadan Law—Hanafi School—Divorce pronounced under compulsion, legality of—Pronouncement of divorce contained in compromise deed, validity of.

According to the Hanafi School of Muhammadan Law a divorce pronounced under compulsion is valid even when contained in a written document, provided that the document is addressed to the party to be divorced and provided it actually pronounces the divorce and is not merely an acknowledgment of something agreed to under compulsion. [p. 634, col. 2; p. 635, col. 1.]

A criminal proceeding was compromised and the compromise deed contained the following clause:—
"I release you Akhtar Khatun from the marital bond by giving you three talqas according to the Muhammuhammadan scriptures." The compromise was signed by the husband who pronounced the divorce and by the wife who was divorced and was addressed by the husband to the wife:

Held, that the compromise deed contained not merely an acknowledgment of divorce but an actual pronouncement of divorce and operated as a valid divorce under Muhammadan Law. [p. 634, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—Defendant No. 1 in the suit appeals against a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh confirming a decision of the Munsif of Netrakona directing restitution of conjugal rights at the instance of the plaintiff the husband of the appellant.

Both parties are Sunnis and governed by the Hanafi School. The marriage took place on the 21st Kartick 1315 and the parties lived together as husband and wife. The appellant left her husband in Aswin 1322 and after this as a result of land disputes between defendant No. 7 and the plaintiff, criminal proceedings under s. 147 of the Indian Penal Code were instituted, these were settled by a compromise which was reduced to writing, one of the terms of the compromise was that the plaintiff should divorce his wife. The compromise was subsequently set aside at the husband's instance and both Courts have found that the plaintiff signed the terms of compromise under compulsion and the question is whether according to the Hanafi School a divorce extorted by compulsion is binding and if so, whether a divorce in writing in the form in which it was contained in this suit is binding. Subsequent to the compromise the wife is said to have married defendant No. 2 in nikah in Aswin 1325. No reliance can be placed upon another document which was produced, namely, an unregistered talaqnama, it is undated and found to be unreliable.

The only question, therefore, is whether a valid divorce was effected by the compromise which has been found to have been executed by the husband under coercion. According to the Hanafi School a pronouncement of divorce is effectual although it has been made under coercion Hamilton's Hedaya, Vol. I, page 210; Tyabji's Principles of Muhammadan Law, page 134, (para. 123). Although the learned author raises the question whether at the present time the Courts would give effect to a divorce pronounced under such circumstances.

The respondent contends, however, that even if a divorce pronounced under compulsion is valid the divorce contained in the compromise is not binding as it is contained in a "noncustomary" writing that is to say, in a writing not addressed and directed to any person. And we are referred to Ballie's Digest of Muhammadan Law, Vol. I, 2nd Edition, page 235, where it is stated as follows:—

"A man is compelled by beating and imprisonment to write the repudiation of his wife and he writes that his wife such an one, the daughter of such an one, the son of such an one, is repudiated, but his wife nevertheless is not repudiated".

This passage is I think explained by the foot note in the same page. The writing here is treated as an acknowledgment of repudiation which if written under compulsion is not binding but I do not think that it can be taken as an authority for anything else or to effect the rule that a written repudiation is valid provided it is addressed to the person to be repudiated. In the case referred to in Ballie, ubi supra, there was no repudiation but merely an acknowledgment of one which is not enough.

On an examination of the authorities I think the law according to the Hanafi School is clear that a written divorce is valid, provided it is addressed to the person to be divorced. It remains, therefore, to see the nature of the compromise. It is in these words:—

"I release you the 3rd party Akhtar Khatun from the marital bond by giving you three talaqs according to the Muhammadan scriptures".

The compromise was signed by the husband and by the wife and it was registered and was addressed by the husband to the wife. It seems to me to be not an acknowledgment but a document which actually effects the divorce.

As I have already stated to my mind the law is clear that according to the Hanafi School, which governs the parties, a divorce pronounced under compulsion is valid and that such divorce is nonetheless valid because it is contained in a written document provided this document is addressed to the party to be divorced and provided it actually pronounces the divorce and is not merely an acknowledgment of something agreed to under compulsion which in my view the compromise is not.

The appeal accordingly succeeds and we set aside the decree of the First Court which was confirmed on appeal and the appellant will be entitled to her costs here and in the Courts below.

Even in respect of agreements relating to immovable property, the principles enunciated in s. 73, Contract Act, are applicable, and a plaintiff is entitled to damages which only arise in the usual course of things from the breach. In assessing such loss the amount which is expected to remedy the inconvenience caused by the non-performance of the contract must be taken into account. [p. 635, col. 2.]

Plaintiff obtained a lease of a rice mill from the defendant for a year, with option of renewal for another year. The possession, which was to be delivered shortly before the paddy season, was not given to the plaintiff, and he sued for damages. The plaintiff admitted that he made no attempt to secure another mill, but the defendant did not show that other mills were available:

Held, (1) that it may be presumed that it was not possible for the plaintiff to look for and obtain another mill in time for the paddy season of the first year, and that, therefore, he was entitled, as damages, to the profits he would have made from the mill in that year; [p. 636, col. 2.]

(2) that, however, the plaintiff was not entitled to any damages for the second year, as, in the first place, he might not have exercised the option, and, secondly, because the presumption as to his inability to obtain another mill could not be made as to the second year. [ibid.]

Appeal from a decree of the District Court, Thaton, in C. R. No. 24 of 1924.

Mr. Foucar, for the Appellant.

Mr. U. Shwe Thwin, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows:—One Ma The Nyo was the owner or purported to be the owner of a rice mill in Khadazo village, Thaton District. In a previous Suit No. 6 of 1922 of the District Court of Thaton, the plaintiff in this suit had sued Ma The Nyo for a sum of Rs. 15,000 damages for failure to carry out her agreement to lease her rice mill to the plaintiff. The suit was compromised and one of the terms of the compromise was that Ma The Nyo should execute a fresh lease in pursuance of that agreement so executed by Ma The Nyo on the 6th of October, 1923. Among other terms that lease contained a clause that the lessor will, on the 31st day of December next, hand over the demised premises in good working order and condition. Ma The Nyo failed to give possession of the mill and the plaintiff has filed the present suit to recover Rs. 15,000 damages in respect of this failure. Ma The Nyo died during the pendency of the suit and her daughter, Ma Hnin Yi, has been brought on the record as her legal representative. The Judge of the Trial Court gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 5,000 damages and both sides appeal. The defendant appeals on the ground that the plaintiff failed to prove the damages sustained by him or alternatively that the damages awarded are excessive. The plaintiff also has filed objections on the ground that the Trial Court ought to have given him at least Rs. 10,000 as damages. The argument before us was confined solely to the question of damages. The first question which naturally arises is the basis on which the damages have been calculated. Even in respect of agreements relating to immovable properties the principles enunciated in s. 73 of the Contract Act are applicable. The plaintiff will, therefore, be entitled to damages which only arise in the usual course of things from the breach. In assessing such loss the amount which is expected to remedy the inconvenience caused by the non-performance of the contract must be taken into account. The plaintiff was merely asked in cross-examination whether he made an attempt to get another mill and he admitted that he did not do so. No evidence was given on behalf of the defendant to show that there were other mills available. The learned District Judge on this ground refused to allow this matter to be taken into consideration. He was justified in doing so and his refusal can also be supported on another ground. In this case the agreement to hire had passed beyond the stage of a mere agreement. The registered lease deed had been executed and the effect of that deed is to vest the leased property in the plaintiff. The breach alleged is not a breach on a mere agreement to grant a lease but the failure to give possession of property actually leased. Even in such cases there would be a duty cast upon the plaintiff to minimise the damage if he could, but the burden of proving that the plaintiff had the means available and did not take steps to avail himself of the means will lie heavily on the defendant. The measure of damages, therefore, will be the profit the plaintiff would have made from the mill had possession been given to him as stipulated. The authorities on this point are Jaques v. Millar (1), Zemindar of Vizianagram v. Behara Suryanarayana Patrulu (2) and Amanchi Venkatarama Sastrulu v. Nama Venkanna (3). In the first of these cases Mr. Justice Fry held that a lessee who was not given possession would be entitled to recover as damages the value of the possession of the premises between the time from which it ought to have been given to the time that he succeeded in obtaining other premises. This value would ordinarily be the profits the lessee would make. Mr. Justice Fry does not give reasons for his decision but the judgment shows that he did apply the rule in Hadley v. Baxendale (4). In the first of the Madras cases [Zemindar of Vizianagram v. Behara Suryanarayana Patrulu (2)] the point was not argued or considered and it is taken for granted that in such cases the damages would be the profits which the lessee would have made. The point, however, is discussed at length in the later of the Madras cases above cited [Amanchi Venkatarama v. Nama Venkanna (3)]. If it had been proved in this case that the plaintiff could have obtained some other mill then it might be argued that he was only entitled to the difference between the rent reserved in his lease and the rent he would have to pay for the other mill. It may be presumed that on the 1st December 1923 when the defendant ought to have given possession it would not be possible for the plaintiff to look for and obtain another mill in time for the paddy season of that year. This presumption, therefore, would not arise in the case of the second year over which he had an option to renew the lease. This consideration will be an additional ground for refusing, as the learned Judge rightly did, to take into consideration the option for renewal in assessing the damage. We are of opinion that the first method of assessment considered by the learned Judge was correct. He calculated the profits on the basis of what the plaintiff would have obtained had he used the mill for milling paddy for the year. On the evidence it could be safely assumed that a lease of a mill would be able to work for at least six months in a year with an average of eight hours per day. This presumption is very much in favour of the defendant. We have already expressed our opinion that the plaintiff cannot claim damages for the second year in respect of which he had an option for renewal. As the learned Judge rightly points out it is an option to take effect at later time and such an option might not be exercised. For this reason and for the additional reason given by us, the learned Judge rightly declined to take profits of the second year into consideration in assessing the damages. Though the profits of the second year cannot be taken into consideration in assessing the plaintiff's damages, we cannot refuse to give the plaintiff the benefit of a covenant contained in the renewal clauses. This covenant enables the plaintiff to retain two months' rent in the second year as compensation for the expenses incurred by him in the suit which had been compromised. By her breach of the contract Ma The Nyo had deprived the plaintiff of the opportunity to recoup his expenses. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to this sum of Rs. 1,200 (two months' rent) as damages. He is, there-

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This appeal raises a question which is not covered directly by authorities of this Court. It appears that the defendant borrowed Rs. 350 from the plaintiff on a note of hand dated the 4th April 1916. The present suit was brought by the plaintiffs for recovery of principal with interest at the stipulated rate of 35 per cent per annum. The defendant admitted execution of the note of hand but pleaded tender of the amount due on the 13th July 1916. It is found by the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff unlawfully refused to accept the money that was tendered to him. It was first sent by the defendant through his servant and on the refusal of the plaintiff to accept it, it was sent by money order on the 15th July 1916. The lower Appellate Court, therefore, held that the tender was good and that the defendants' plea was substantiated. But as the defendant did not deposit the money in Court either before or after filing of the written statement, the learned Judge thought that he should allow interest to the plaintiff on the sum tendered from July 1916 to the date of institution of the suit at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum and he decreed accordingly.

The plaintiff appeals and it is argued on his behalf that the defendant not having deposited the money tendered in Court the tender was not kept alive and, therefore, he is entitled to full interest at the stipulated rate till the date of the institution of the suit. In support of this position he has relied on the case of Haji Abdul Rahman v. Haji Noor Mohammed (1) which is a decision of a Single Judge sitting on the Original Side of the Bombay High Court. The learned Judge in that case relied upon O. XXII, r. 3 of the English Judicature Acts and on the law founded upon that provision of the English Procedure Act as laid down in Leake on Contract and other text-books on the Law of Contract, and accordingly held that a plea of tender before action must be accompanied by a payment into Court, otherwise, the tender is ineffectual. I am unable to follow this dictum in view of the absence of a provision in the C. P. C. corresponding to O. XXII, r. 3 of the English Judicature Acts. The only mention of the defendant's right to deposit is to be found in Appendix A of the First Schedule under the heading Forms of Pleadings. In giving the different defences that may be taken in an action, with regard to payment in Court it is stated that the defendant may aver that he has paid into Court the sum of Rs. and that this sum is enough to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. This provision is apparently made to enable the defendant to avoid costs and possibly some further liability, but it does not lay down any substantive law. In the absence of any express provision either in the law of contract or in the law of procedure which is applicable to Indian Courts I do not see how it can be laid down as a binding rule of law that if a tender is not followed by a deposit in Court, it is an ineffectual tender. The view taken in the Bombay case is reiterated without examination in the case of Sabapathi Pillay v. Vanmaha-linga Pillai (2). But it was not necessary for the decision of that case to adopt the view laid down in the Bombay case because the fact found in that case was that "though the plaintiff failed to pay the money into Court, as the defendants failed to fulfil their part of the agreement or to make a valid unconditional offer to perform the same, the defendants were not entitled to enforce the other terms included in the compromise decree". The question has not directly arisen in this Court in any case but a similar objection was considered by Mookerjee and Holmwood, JJ., in the case of Jugat Tarini Dasi v. Naba Gopal Chaki (3). That was a case in which tender was made by the tenant of the rent due to the landlord. The tenant sometime after deposited the rent under s. 61, Bengal Tenancy Act but did not deposit it forthwith in Court or in the suit by the landlord for recovery of arrears of rent. In dealing with the objection that the deposit was not made in Court the learned Judges observed as follows: "It appears to us to be extremely unjust to hold that a tenant who has made a valid tender, which has been improperly refused, should be driven to make a deposit under s. 61 (Bengal Tenancy Act) in order to protect himself from further liability to pay interest. We ought not to place a construction upon the Statute, the effect of which would be to throw upon a tenant, who has made a valid tender, which has been improperly refused, the burden of additional interest, which must accrue between the date of tender and the date of deposit, and the costs of an application under s. 61, which may in some instances, as in the case before us, amount to a substantial sum. We must hold, consequently, that as there was a valid tender in this case, which was improperly refused, interest ceased to run from the date of tender. It was suggested, however, that, as the amount tendered was not deposited in Court, the tender was not kept good. In our opinion, there is no foundation for this argument. It is well settled that the debtor, whose tender has been refused, may retain the money in his own possession. The identical money need not be kept in hand, since the money tendered does not become the property of the creditor; the debtor may use it as his own without destroying the effect of the tender, if he is ready at all times to pay the debt in current money, when requested". I fully agree with the above observation made in this connection. There being no provision in the Statute law as to make it obligatory upon a debtor in order to keep the tender alive to make deposit in Court, I am unable to lay down as a rule of general applicability in the muffussil that where the defendant fails to make the deposit in Court the tender must be ineffectual though it was validly made and unlawfully refused by the creditor. The deposit by the defendant of the amount admitted to be due by him in Court generally exempts him from the liability for costs and that is all the benefit that he can expect from such deposit under the provisions of the C. P. C. The learned Judge, however, has taken this omission of the defendant into account and has allowed interest to the plaintiff upon the sum tendered at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the tender down to the date of the suit. In my opinion substantial justice has been done in this case and the decree of the learned Judge is accordingly upheld.

This appeal is dismissed with costs.

Duval, J.—In this appeal the findings of fact are that the tender was duly made by money order sent on the 15th July 1916 and that three years and a-half after on the 8th January 1920 the present suit was brought. It is clear that just after the suit was brought the plaintiff applied for attachment of defendant's moveables before the judgment and that the attachment order was issued in February 1920 when the defendant filed his written statement he admittedly pleaded tender in July 1916. He did not, however, deposit the amount which he had tendered in that year. The question, therefore, arises and it appears to be the only point that can arise is whether in this suit the defendant can now plead tender in view of the fact that he did not deposit the money in Court. In support of the argument that he cannot now plead tender, we have the English rule made under the Rules of the Supreme Court and applied to County Courts under which the plea of tender is not available if tender is made before action unless the amount is paid into Court after the action. Has this rule of pleading been imported into the Indian Law? So far as I can see it has not been. No doubt in the forms of written statement in Appendix A to the C. P. C., a form is given to which my learned brother has referred and the words of which I need not repeat. But there is nothing that I can find either in the substantive law or in the orders dealing with pleadings generally and written statements which makes it compulsory where tender is pleaded to deposit the money in Court. In my opinion, therefore, this rule of English Law is not yet in force in this country and in this view the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Special appeal against the decree of the Small Cause Court, Rangoon, in C. R. No. 6169 1923.

Mr. Hay, for the Appellant.

Mr. Foucar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff files a suit on a pro-note signed by the first defendant alone and in his own name. In the plaint he states that the 1st defendant for himself and on behalf of his partner, the 2nd defendant, by their promissory-note promised to pay to the plaintiff or order the amount of the note. There is nothing whatever in the promissory-note either on the face or on the back of it to indicate that the promissory-note was executed by the 1st defendant in his capacity as a partner and on behalf of the partnership. The firm's name does not appear anywhere. It will also be noticed that the plaint is based entirely on the promissory-note and not on the original cause of action, namely, the supply of goods. In the written statement the 1st defendant raised certain defences, namely, (1) a general denial of the allegations in para. 1; (2) a denial of the partnership; and (3) a denial that any demand was ever made on him. No defence was raised specifically on the question, whether, assuming that the 1st defendant executed the promissory-note on behalf of the 2nd defendant the suit is maintainable against the latter when neither the name of the firm nor that of the 2nd defendant appears in the pro-note. The Counsel for the 2nd defendant who is the appellant before us argues that his defence is implied in the general denial. We do not think so and the issues framed seem to us to show that neither the Judge of the Trial Court nor the Pleaders who appeared there understood the pleadings to have involved this question. The learned Judge of the Trial Court has given a decree against both the defendants and the 2nd defendant now appeals. The sole argument raised on his behalf is that the suit being one on a promissory-note there cannot be a decree against the 2nd defendant, whose name does not appear on the note. It is also urged that, even assuming he is a partner with the 1st defendant because the name of the firm does not appear on the note he cannot be held liable as a partner in the firm. As the point raised is a point of law which does not involve the taking of fresh evidence and as it is raised in the grounds of appeal we have allowed the appellant to argue it before us though it was not specifically pleaded in the Trial Court.

It is settled law that no person can be made liable on a negotiable instrument unless his name appears on the promissory-note or if it is sought to make him liable as a partner the name of the firm in which he is a partner appears on it. That principle was actually applied in the case of Sadasuk Janki Das v. Kishan Pershad (1) and Kutti Ammu v. Raggi Seth (2).

We are, therefore, bound to hold that the plaintiff's suit which is entirely based on the promissory-note must fail as against the 2nd defendant. We have considered the question whether an amendment should not at this stage be allowed in view of the fact that the point was not raised in the lower Court and the written statement of the 2nd defendant did not disclose this as one of his defence. We are of opinion that we ought not to do so because if the second defendant had raised this defence when he filed his written statement on the 11th of December 1920 and the plaintiff had then withdrawn the suit and filed a new one, that new suit would have been time barred. The powers of amendment given to Court are very wide but they should not ordinarily be used to allow a new cause of action to be introduced where the defendant would be deprived of his plea of limitation if the amendment were granted, and we see no reason to make an exception to the ordinary rule in this case. Under these circumstances we cannot allow the plaint to be amended.

The result is that the appeal must be allowed. The decree of the lower Court will be varied and the plaintiff's suit will stand dismissed as against the 2nd defendant. There will be no costs in either Court in favour of the 2nd defendant as he did not raise the point in the lower Court as he ought to have done.

Muhammadan Law—Gift to daughter-in-law of residential house—Actual transfer of physical possession, whether necessary.

The fact that a Muhammadan, after making a gift to his daughter-in-law of a house in which both reside, by a registered deed, which recites that possession of the house has been delivered to the donee, continues to live in the same house with the donee for about a month after the date of the gift till his death, does not show that possession was not given to the donee as expressly stated in the deed, and the gift is not invalid on that account. [p. 642, col. 1.]

Actual transfer of physical possession is not necessary to complete the gift in such a case. [ibid.]

Case-law reviewed.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 3rd May of 1924.

Mr. Mukund Lal Puri, for the Appellant.

Malick Muhammad Hussain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 28th of August 1908 one Khan Muhammad made a gift of the house in dispute in favour of Musammât Bholi, wife of his son Imam Din. The gift was made by means of a registered-deed which recited that possession had been given to the donee. Khan Muhammad died on the 29th of September 1908 leaving two sons Imam Din and Chiragh Din. The latter died on the 28th of November 1921. It has been found that Khan Muhammad and Chiragh Din both died in the house in dispute. In other words they continued residing in the house after the gift to Musammât Bholi. Musammât Bholi and Musammât Niaz Bibi wives of Imam Din mortgaged the house to Rahmat Ali for Rs. 1,500. Musammât Daulat Bibi widow of Chiragh Din instituted a suit out of which this appeal arises, for a declaration that the mortgage in favour of Rahmat Ali shall not affect her rights in the house. She claimed that after the death of Khan Muhammad his two sons succeeded to his estate including the house in suit in equal shares and on the death of Chiragh Din she succeeded to his interest in the house. The District Judge has held that the gift in favour of Musammât Bholi was made as alleged by her but that it was not established that possession of the house was delivered to the donee and that, therefore, the gift was not complete.

The only point before me is whether the gift is void for want of delivery of possession by the donor to the donee. On behalf of the appellant it is contended that owing to the relationship between the donor and the donee the mere fact that the donor continued residing in the house along with the donees did not make the gift void considering that the gift had been made by means of a registered deed which recited that possession had been given to the donee. It was contended by the learned Counsel that the donor did all that was possible under the circumstances to effectually transfer the property and control in the house to the donee and further that under such circumstances actual removal of the donor from the house was not necessary. Counsel for the respondents, on the other hand, contended that the gift was not valid according to Muhammadan Law as actual delivery of possession to the donee was necessary to complete it. Counsel for the appellant relied upon para. 127 of Mulla's Muhammadan Law, 7th Edition, and also on the following authorities:—

(i) Humera Bibi v. Najm-un-Nissa Bibi (1), (ii) Muhammad Mumtaz Ahmad v. Zubaida Jan (2), (iii) Raja v. Jannat Bibi (3), (iv) Kandath Veettil Bava v. Musaliam Veettil Pakrukutti (4).

The learned Counsel for the respondents, on the other hand, relied principally on the judgment of the Bombay High Court in Abdul Majid Khan v. Hussinbu (5). In clause 3 of para. 127 of Mulla's Muhammadan Law the following opinion is expressed:—

"No physical departure or formal entry is necessary in the case of a gift of immovable property in which the donor and the donee are both residing at the time of the gift. In such a case the gift may be completed by some overt act by the donor indicating a clear intention on his part to transfer possession and to divest himself of all control over the subject of the gift. This rule has been applied mainly to cases in which the donor stands in loco parentis to the donee."

The same view was expressed in Humera Bibi v. Najm-un-Nissa Bibi (1). On page 152* of the report the following remarks were made by the learned Judges:

"We are not prepared to hold that in a case such as the present actual physical departure of the donor from a house which is the subject of a gift evidenced by a written instrument is necessary in order to complete the gift by delivery and possession. On the contrary, we think that, if the parties are present on the premises, it is sufficient that an intention on the part of the donor to transfer the possession has been unequivocally manifested. There can be no doubt in this case that such an intention was unequivocally manifested. In the document itself it is expressly stated that the plaintiff not merely made a gift of the property to Minnatullah, but also put him into proprietary possession of it, and a further statement that Minnatullah had accepted the gift and taken possession of the property. In addition to this,....mutation of names was effected in favour of the donee."

The gift in that case was by an aunt in favour of her nephew. Muhammad Mumtaz Ahmad v. Zubaida Jan (2) is a judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council and was relied upon by the learned Counsel to establish that recitals in a deed as to transfer of possession under a gift are binding on persons who claim to derive their title from the donor. In Raja v. Jannat Bibi (3) the gift was to a minor daughter for whom the donor acted as guardian. The daughter's husband cultivated the donor's land and lived with him. It was held that formal delivery of possession was not essential under the circumstances in order to complete the gift. The head-note* of Kandath Veettil Bava v. Musaliam Veettil Pakrukutti (4) is as follows:—

"Under the Muhammadan Law, to constitute a valid gift, possession must pass to the donee. Where a house and lands were given as a gift by a Muhammadan mother to her daughter and the daughter was put in exclusive possession of the lands and her title to both properties was perfected by mutation of names in the register, the mere fact that the mother continued to reside with her daughter, will not constitute a non-delivery of possession which will invalidate the gift."

In Abdul Majid Khan v. Husseinbu (5) it was held that "under the Muhammadan Law a gift is invalid unless there is a delivery of possession. Where the donee is with the donor on the premises at the time of the gift, an appropriate intention may put the one out as well as the other into possession without any actual physical departure or formal entry. But it does not follow in every case necessarily that where the two are present the possession must be deemed to have been transferred. The question as to whether the donor intended to transfer the possession at the time of the gift must be answered with reference to the facts of each particular case." On a consideration of the facts of the case before them the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court came to the conclusion that possession had not been given to the donee and, therefore, the gift was invalid. This view of the Bombay High Court does not necessarily conflict with the view held by the other Courts as expressed in the cases cited above. It will, therefore, be observed that actual transfer of physical possession is not necessary to complete a gift in cases like the present. The donor continued to live in the same house for about a month after the date of the gift which he had made by means of a registered deed and that fact alone does not show that possession was not given to the donee as expressly stated in the deed. The donee herself who appears to be colluding with the plaintiff in this case mortgaged the property to Rahmat Ali by virtue of title derived by her under the gift. In my opinion, therefore, under the circumstances the gift was a valid one and possession was given by the donor to the donee in a manner that effectively transferred the property in the house to the donee. The residence of Chiragh Din in the house did not invalidate the gift which was otherwise complete.

The appeal, therefore, must be accepted and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs throughout, and I order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1 (1)—Abandonment of part of claim at completion of trial—Sufficient grounds for abandonment—Jurisdiction—Revision—Duty of defendant.

A Civil Court has no jurisdiction to permit a plaintiff at the completion of the trial to withdraw a part of his claim with leave to bring a fresh suit in respect of it, on the sole ground that the plaintiff preferred to withdraw. If such an order is made the High Court will set it aside in revision. [p. 643, cols. 1 & 2.]

It is the duty of the defendant to have such an order vacated without delay. He need not wait until the suit in respect of the claim withdrawn by the plaintiff is filed and then to plead that the permission was given wrongly. [p. 643, col. 1]

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Iyer and K. Balasubramaniya Iyer, for the Appellant.

Messrs L. A. Govinda Raghava Iyer and Watrap Subramaniya Iyer, for the Respondents.

This appeal and the memorandum of objections filed by the respondent plaintiff coming on for hearing on the 7th and 8th September 1921, the Court (Oldfield and Ramesam, JJ.), made the following ORDER.—We deal first with the preliminary point raised in the ground of Appeal No. 21, that the action of the lower Court in allowing the plaintiff at a late stage in argument to withdraw his claim for melvaram, and in having permitted him to bring a fresh suit thereon was altogether illegal and unjust.

The facts, as we have ascertained them, are that after a prolonged trial, in the course of the plaintiff's arguments after the defendant had been heard, the plaintiff on 25th September 1920 presented a petition asking for permission to withdraw his claim in respect of the melvaram right in the suit lands with liberty to file a fresh suit in respect of the same, and that the petition was granted. In the plaint the claim had been stated in very general language and the relief asked for was a decree for partition and possession and a permanent injunction restraining the defendant from entering on the plaintiff's share. In the body of the plaint, however, the plaintiff's right is described very generally. In paras. 3 and 4, for instance, there are references to his ownership or acquisition of shares in both the melvaram and kudivaram of the suit and lands. The defendant in his written statement met him in respect of both. The issues again are very general, there being but a general reference in them to the nature and extent of the interest acquired by the plaintiff. In the judgment, para. 5, however, we have the lower Court's own statement as to what it understood was the real scope of the suit. It stated clearly that the plaintiff was claiming melvaram as well as kudivaram. In the plaintiff's petition and affidavit already referred to there was no suggestion that the suit was not for melvaram or that it had not been tried in respect of the claim to melvaram as well as to kudivaram.

Turning to the ground on which the plaintiff asked for permission to withdraw the suit and to sue again we find nothing alleged at all except that he preferred for the time being to confine himself to the claim to kudivaram and that a decision as to melvaram in the present suit was unnecessary. There is no further explanation of any sort for this change in his attitude and something was necessary to justify it, beyond his mere preference. It has to be observed that this was announced after the defendant had been put to the trouble and expense of the trial, which was almost completed. In these circumstances there can be no doubt that the lower Court used its discretion wrongly in permitting the withdrawal and granting leave. The only remaining question is whether the defendant is at liberty to make that a ground of appeal. It is possible that speaking strictly we ought not to allow him to do so. There is, however, no doubt that it is his duty to have an order such as this vacated without delay and that it is not for him to wait until the suit in respect of melvaram is actually filed and then to plead that this permission was given wrongly—Tuljaram Row v. Gopala Aiyar (1). The question is then only whether he is at liberty to advance this objection in an appeal against this decree or should have made it in a revision petition. In view of the fact that no question of delay or limitation arises and of the obvious advisability of an early disposal of this matter, we think ourselves justified in treating this portion of the appeal as a revision petition. In doing so we hold that the lower Court had no jurisdiction to permit the withdrawal and grant leave on the sole ground that the party did not prefer to proceed with his litigation. We, therefore, set aside the order of the lower Court, dated 30th September 1920.

The result is that this portion of the plaintiff's suit has not been disposed of. We, therefore, call on the lower Court for findings on the issues already framed so far as they relate to the plaintiff's claim to melvaram. The findings will be recorded on the evidence on record. They are due in this Court within six (6) weeks and seven (7) days will be allowed for objections.

[In compliance with the above order, the case was sent back to the lower Court for further findings. The appeal came on for final hearing before, Coutts-Trotter and Ramesam, JJ., and the case was decided in favour of the plaintiffs on 30th January 1925.]

The fact that a co-defendant took part in certain batwara proceedings in which the land in dispute was measured and a map was prepared in which the plaintiff's title was admitted, is admissible in evidence though it is not binding as an admission on the other defendants who claim under an independent title. A map prepared for the purposes of a partition which affects the public revenue, is admissible in evidence, though it may be for a limited purpose only. [p. 649, col. 2.]

Ordinarily in a boundary dispute the Commissioner's report is of great importance, but the report cannot be of much help to the Court where the findings of the Commissioner are inconclusive. [ibid.]

B.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter (with him Babu Atul Chandra Gupta), for the Appellants in both.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Rajendra Chandra Guha), for the Respondents in No. 110.

Babu Rajendra Chandra Guha, for the Respondent in No. 267.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals arise out of two suits (Nos. 35 and 36) for recovery of possession of certain lands on declaration of plaintiff's title thereto.

It appears that Taluk No. 130 of the Mymensingh Collectorate was partitioned in 1261 among the proprietors, and the estate was divided into 14 estates Nos. 6042 to 6054 and 130, out of which Estate No. 6049 was allotted to the predecessors of the plaintiff, and Estates Nos. 6042 and 6052 to the defendants' predecessors-in-title. In No. 1265 (1849) a batwara chitta was prepared, and Dag No. 372 was allotted to plaintiff's Estate No. 6049.

The plaintiffs claimed the lands of both the suits, as being covered by Dag No. 372. Suit No. 35 related to Cadastral Survey Dags Nos. 186 to 195 and 203 but, the plaintiffs by a petition gave up their claim to Dags Nos. 186 to 195 in the Court below and the claim with respect to those Dags was accordingly dismissed. Dag No. 203 was claimed by the defendants as appertaining to their Estate No. 6052 of which the defendant No. 3 was proprietor of a moiety share. The defendant No. 3 by compromise gave up his 8-annas share in favour of the plaintiffs. The claim, therefore, in Suit No. 35 is now confined to an 8-annas share of Dag No. 203 and is contested by the defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 5 only.

Appeal No. 110 arises out of Suit No. 36 which relates to lands described in two schedules. Schedule No. I is said to comprise Cadastral Survey Plots Nos. 584, 587/622, 585, 586 and 588 to 594, and Sch. II Cadastral Survey Plots Nos. 833, 834, 2135, 2136 and 2224.

The defence does not deny that Dag No. 372 is in Estate No. 6049 of which the plaintiffs are the owners, but the defendants deny that the lands are covered by that dag. As stated above the lands of Suit No. 35 are claimed by the defendants as appertaining to Dag No. 368 of their Estate No. 6052, and the lands covered by Suit No. 36 as owners of Estate No. 6042 (the lands of Sch. I as being comprised in Batwara Dags Nos. 430 to 434, and the Sch. II lands as Batwara Dag No. 291).

Certain persons—Sens—were the owners of 6042, Abdul Hamed (defendant No. 2) at first acquired one-third share by purchase from the Sens and then took another one-third share in patni from them. Ebadut (defendant No. 1) the father of defendant No. 2 purchased the proprietary interest of this one-third share from the Sens. So two-thirds of the proprietary interest (and one-third patni interest) are vested in the defendants. One Debendra Sen has still one-third share left in the estate.

There was a Cadastral Survey in 1912 to 1916, and in the Settlement and Record of Rights which followed, the lands were recorded in the names of the defendants. The plaintiffs' case is that the defendants being emboldened by the entry in the Record of Rights dispossessed them in 1323.

The Court below held that the lands were covered by Dag No. 372 and accordingly gave a decree to the plaintiffs. The defendants have appealed to this Court.

The nature of the lands in dispute is thus described by the Court below:—"The land here is undulating, parts being uplands covered with jungle which are called 'chalas.' Between two chalas there are sometimes low lands which are called 'baid' if they are wide and the figures are not much irregular, while when they are narrow and with many branches they are called 'ghuni.' This distinction between 'baid' and 'ghuni' is not always adhered to, and sometimes a piece of low land is called 'baid' and 'ghuni' indifferently"..... "To the west of Sch. I of Suit No. 35 there is a baid. Whether it is called baid or ghuni the parties agree that it goes by the name of kanchir. To the east of Cadastral Survey Dag No. 203 which is the subject-matter of Suit No. 35 there is a baid as to the name of which there is a dispute between the parties. To the east of the baid is a chala which is Cadastral Survey Dag No. 218 of Suri Chala Khatian. It is described by the plaintiff as Bara Kuthir Chala. The plaintiff's case is that the whole of the tract having kanchir baid on the west and the baid to the west of Bara Kuthir Chala on the east is their Dag No. 372 of the Batwara Chitta of Garhbari. Within this tract there are three *baid*s. For the sake of brevity I shall call the westernmost baid which is the eastern portion of Schedule I land of Suit No. 36 as Baid No. 1. The middle baid which is not the subject-matter of these suits I shall call Baid No. 2. The eastern baid of which part forms the western part of Schedule II land of Suit No. 36 I shall describe as Baid No. 3."

The kanchir referred to above is outside, but 585-594 is within, the disputed land of Schedule I. The middle baid (which is between the chain lines 417 and 418) i. e., baid No. 2 is Cadastral Survey plot No. 830 and is not in dispute. A portion of the Baid No. 3 (between chain lines 71 to 73) is within the disputed area only the southern part of 833 (Baid No. 3) being in dispute.

The main question for consideration in these appeals is whether the disputed lands are covered by Dag No. 372 of the batwara chitta appertaining to plaintiff's Estate No. 6049.

Before dealing with that question we would refer to certain partition proceedings which took place in 1904 among the proprietors of Estate No. 6042.

It appears that in the year 1904 the then proprietors of Touzi No. 6042 (including the predecessors-in-interest of the present contesting defendants) applied for partition of Estate No. 6042 by the Revenue Authorities. There was a Survey in 1904 for the purpose of the batwara proceedings and the maps Exs. 12 and 36 (maps Nos. 4 and 5) were prepared. The neighbouring proprietors were called upon to be present before the measurement was made. The plaintiffs filed a petition on the 12th July 1904 complaining that the Amin had already finished the Survey and submitted his papers (the map was filed on 25th May 1904) before notice was served upon them. The plaintiffs objected to the inclusion of some lands which they claimed as part of their Dag No. 372 of the Batwara Chitta of Garhbari, and prayed that the land in the southern portion of Dags Nos. 15 and 16 might be excluded from the mahal under partition. In map Ex. 12 to the south of plots Nos. 15 and 16 was written "Nij Mauzah Brindaban Mandal's chala" (i. e., plaintiff's chala). An investigation was made by the Peshkar who reported that the objection about plot No. 15 was untenable but that a part of plot No. 16 should be excluded from partition. The parties were called upon to state whether they had any objection against the report of the peshkar, but no objection was raised by the objector against his report with respect to plot No. 15. The partition Deputy Collector accordingly in his report dated the 23rd September 1905 held that the claim for exclusion of plot No. 15 might be disallowed. He held, however, that the part of plot No. 16 claimed by the objectors should be excluded from partition because the evidence of the only witness produced by the owners of No. 6042 was not sufficient to prove that the part belonged to that estate, and as Ebadut and Meajan the ijaradars on behalf of the parent estate had executed kabuliyats in favour of the objectors that part of the plot No. 16 belonged to the latter. Collector accepted the view taken by the Deputy Collector viz., that plot No. 15 should not be excluded but that a portion of plot No. 16 should be excluded from partition.

The Court below has found that the land in respect of which plaintiff's objection to that part of Cadastral Dag No. 834 which lies to the east on Baid No. 3 and Baid No. 3 which latter was plot No. 15 in map Ex. 12 was disallowed, but the objection was allowed with respect to the "stretch of land lying between Baid No. 3 and the eastern limit of Cadastral Survey Dag No. 2135 which is the north western part of Schedule II land of Suit No. 36. To the south of this plot it was admitted lay the plaintiff's chala, and this is identical with what I may say to be the middle portion of Schedule II land of Suit No. 36".

With respect to the lands of Schedule I (in Suit No. 36) also, the plaintiffs claimed them as within their Garhbari Chitta Dag No. 372. The peshkar reported that the defendants were in possession and that plots Nos. 99 to 108 did not fall within Garhbari. Another peshkar Kailas Chandra Roy was appointed, and he also reported (on the 22nd March 1907) upon the basis of existing possession that the lands were in bagerhati, i. e., belonged to the defendants. The Deputy Collector accordingly held that the objection should be disallowed. The Collector was of opinion that the defendants were in possession of a small fraction of the whole, but that the lands according to the revenue survey were within Garhbari. The objection of the objectors, however, was held to be untenable having regard to the provisions of s. 88 of the Partition Act.

The partition proceedings accordingly became infructuous, and were struck off by reason of the objections in connexion with the lands of Schedule No. I of Suit No. 36. But the Court below has attached great importance to the facts that the proprietors of No. 6042 did not claim that their mahal extended up to the limit of Kakrajan, and the land which may be said to be identical with the middle part of Schedule II land of Suit No. 36 was shown in the map prepared, as the plaintiff's chala, and that notwithstanding the Collector's decision to exclude from Estate No. 6042 the north-western portion of Schedule II land of Suit No. 36, the proprietors did not challenge that decision. With reference to the fact that the defendants' predecessors did not claim the middle portion of Schedule II, it is pointed out on behalf of the respondent relying upon the evidence of plaintiff's Amin Kala Chand that the defendant No. 1 Ebadut who was the principal gomashta of the proprietors of No. 6042 was present at the time when measurement was made and map prepared in the batwara proceedings in which the land was mentioned as plaintiff's chala and that although those facts were alleged in para. 6 of the plaint, the only thing he stated in para. 5 of his written statement was that he "took no steps in the batwara proceedings" which should not be believed having regard to the fact that he was the principal gomashta, and that he wholly denied that he took any ijara of any land in dispute, which is manifestly false. Ebadut in his evidence says that he was examined in the batwara case and he showed the boundaries there, but he was speaking of another Mouzah Nagbari. His evidence runs thus: "Nagbari was surveyed in the batwara case, and I showed the boundaries there".

On the other hand it is contended that the evidence of Amin Kala Chand does not show that Ebadut was present at the time the particular portion was measured and that in any case the map and the conduct of Ebadut cannot be treated as an admission against the defendants who claim under a title subsequently acquired from the proprietors.

It is difficult to hold that Ebadut was unaware of the measurements or that he did not take any part in the proceedings. We are of opinion that the fact is certainly evidence though not binding as an admission upon the defendants who claim under an independent title.

On behalf of the appellants it was contended that the maps were not prepared for public purposes and were not, therefore, evidence without proof of their accuracy. It appears, however, that no objection was taken to map No. 4 (Ex. 12). Objection was taken to Map No. 5 (Ex. 36), but the map was made for purposes of a partition which affected the public revenue, and the map, therefore, is evidence for what it is worth, though it may be for a limited purpose only. On the other hand, the learned Subordinate Judge does not appear to have considered the presumption in favour of the defendants under s. 103-B of the Bengal Tenancy Act arising from the entries in the Record of Rights prepared in the later Settlement Proceedings held in 1912 to 1916. It is true the entries in the Record of Rights also are based upon possession, but they cannot be ignored, and we think that in these circumstances the question of title has to be determined upon the question of boundaries.

A Commissioner was appointed to hold a local investigation in the cases. His report is in favour of the plaintiff. Ordinarily in a boundary dispute the Commissioner's report is of great importance, but in the present case the findings of the Commissioner are inconclusive and are not of much help to the Court. It is contended on behalf of the respondents that no objections were taken to the report of the Commissioner, but as stated above, his findings are inconclusive, and the learned Subordinate Judge does not appear to have relied upon them. He has referred to it expressly in two places only. The first is where the Court considers the question whether Jani is in Kholar Baid. The Commissioner in para. 19 of his report found that it was, but the learned Subordinate Judge (in para. 14 of his judgment) differs from him. The second is with respect to the southern boundary of Dag No. 372. The Commissioner in para. 18 of his report states that on the south of the disputed land of Suit No. 36 are the lands of Doani, i. e., the southern boundary of plaintiff's Batwara Dag No. 372 is Mouzah Kakrajan. The Court below observes:—"As to the southern boundary it is difficult to understand the exact import. The proprietors of Zemindari Nos. 12 and 16 are known by the name of Two Ani. The Commissioner mentioned the whole of the tract to the south of the lands in dispute in this case as the lands of the Two Ani. The learned Pleader for the defence contends that this is incorrect. In my opinion the matter is not of much importance." These go to show that much weight cannot be attached to the Commissioner's report except where it is in accordance with the boundaries of the chitta.

On behalf of the respondents reliance was placed upon an ijara kabuliyat for three years executed by Ebadut the defendant No. 1 and two others in favour of plaintiffs in respect of the whole of the disputed lands including the lands of Suit No. 35 as appertaining to Taluk No. 6049. This was on the 17th November 1903. The circumstances under which it was executed are these. On the 27th August 1903 Ebadut and two others executed a kabuliyat in respect of the lands of both Schedules I and II in favour of the Sens, the owners of Touzi No. 6042. This was just before the batwara which took place in 1904. On the strength of the said settlement they cut down some gajari trees from the land, when the plaintiffs objected to the same on the ground of the land being included within Dag No. 372, and Ebadut and others thereupon paid Rs. 25 as the price of the gajari trees already cut down, and Rs. 275 for the remaining trees and executed the kabuliyat in favour of the plaintiffs admitting the lands to be within plaintiff's Taluk No. 6059. It was stipulated in the kabuliyat that if any suit be instituted in the Civil Court, the owners of No. 6059 (the lessors) would have to take steps and pay the costs.

It appears that on the 25th March 1896, one Madhu Khan executed a kabuliyat in favour of the Sens in respect of the lands of Schedule II as part of their Taluk No. 6042 describing Kholar Baid as the eastern boundary. This was about eight years before the batwara proceedings in which certain portions of Schedule II lands were excluded. They were included in the kabuliyat of 1896 as part of Taluk No. 6042. The learned Subordinate Judge does not notice this document. The defendant Ebadut denied execution of the kabuliyat dated the 17th November 1903 in favour of the plaintiffs, which, no doubt, is false, and the map annexed to the kabuliyat bears out the plaintiff's case. But so far as the owners of No. 6042 are concerned there is, as stated above, the kabuliyat dated the 25th March 1896 executed by Madhu Khan in respect of the lands of Schedule II, (not noticed by the Court below) about eight years before the batwara proceedings. There is the other kabuliyat executed by Ebadut shortly before the batwara, and it was only after the plaintiffs objected to the cutting of gajari trees under that kabuliyat that Ebadut and others attorned to the plaintiff under the kabuliyat dated the 17th November 1903. Ebadut appears to have acted in the matter for securing the land for himself and not in the interest of his masters.

Much reliance is naturally placed upon the map annexed to the kabuliyat dated the 17th November 1903 executed by Ebadut in plaintiff's favour. On behalf of the appellants the execution of the kabuliyat (and the map) is sought to be explained on the ground of mistake or misapprehension. It is pointed out by the learned Pleader for the respondents that the execution of the kabuliyat was wholly denied by Ebadut. That is so, and it is certainly false and at the same time foolish. But the argument advanced on behalf of the appellants is not a new one. It was set up in the partition proceedings. The Partition Deputy Collector in his order in the Objection Case No. 2 of 1905-06 considered the map and observed as follows:—"Ebadut explains it away by saying that he signed the map merely relying on the words of one Alakddin another executant in the deed. It can hardly be expected from a half-literate man like Ebadut that he would understand maps of this nature specially as the boundaries given in the kabuliyat do not show clearly up to what extent the lease has been taken. Ebadut executed another kabuliyat in favour of the proprietors of Bagerbari for the disputed chala clearly specified therein about two months before the execution of the kabuliyats in favour of the objector". Then again the matter was considered in the settlement proceedings and no importance was attached to the kabuliyat.

Having regard to all these facts we are unable to attach any importance to the execution of the kabuliyat by Ebadut and the map annexed to the kabuliyat in favour of the plaintiffs in November 1903. Reliance was also placed on behalf of the respondents upon the Thak and Survey map; but the issue upon which the parties went to trial was "does the disputed land appertain to Touzi No. 6049, and is the disputed land included in batwara plots Nos. 372 as alleged in the plaint." The discussion in the Court below also, as the judgment shows, proceeded mainly upon a comparison of the chitta dags.

We will now deal with the question whether the disputed lands are included in Dag No. 372 of the chitta. The boundaries of Dag No. 372 are as follows:—

North.—Dengua Kochir Ghuni.

West.—Nabu Sheikh.

South.—Kanchir Ghuni and the boundary of Two Ani's land Bagherbari jungle.

East.—Jani Sheik and Barachala Gajari, Jungle etc. Jungle Chala half of 500½ nals. Bat tree within this chala.

The Court below finds that there is no dispute as to the identity of Dengua Kochir Ghuni on the north and Kanchir Ghuni on the south. The former commences at station 116 in the Commissioner's map and lies to the right of the line 113 to 116, and the Ghuni comprises Cadastral Survey Dags No. 844-847. Kanchir Ghuni commences at station No. 431 and lies to the left of the line from stations Nos. 431-437 and of the line from stations Nos. 439 to 431 and on both sides of the line from stations Nos. 437 to 439. The southern portion of this tract of land between the Dengua Kochir Ghuni on the north and Kanchir Ghuni on the south is in the possession of the plaintiffs, and the northern portion was the subject-matter of another Suit (No. 37) the right to which has been settled by compromise. The case of the defendants is that Dag No. 372 lies between Dengua Kochir Ghuni on the north, Kanchir Ghuni on the south, Baid No. 2 on the west and Baid No. 3 on the east. The land between Baid No. 1 and Baid No. 2, is not the subject-matter of this litigation, though the defendants deny the plaintiff's right to it, and claim it as part of their Estate No. 6042 Bagherbari.

The real controversy, therefore, is about the western and eastern boundaries. The Western boundary of Dag No. 372 is described as Nabu Sheikh, and the identity of this boundary relates to the lands of Sch. I of Suit No. 36. Schedule I consists of the Chal portion and the Baid to its east. The plaintiffs' case is that Nabu had land in Kanchir Baid just to the west of Sch. I land, while defendants say that Nabu's land lay in Baid No. 2 and that this is the western limit of plaintiffs' chala.

According to the defendants, Cadastral Survey Dag No. 584 is identical with Dag No. 430 of the Bagherbari chitta. Baid No. 1 is identical with Dags Nos. 431 to 434 of the said chitta and Cadastral Survey Dag No. 828 which lies between Baid Nos. 1 and 2 (not in suit) a part of which was shown in the partition proceedings as plaintiff's chala and of which the plaintiffs are admittedly in possession is identical with Dag No. 435 of the Bagherbari chitta.

The boundaries of Dag No. 430 of the Bagherbari chitta are as follows:—

West—Dag No. 429 (described as jote Kanchi Sheikh).

East—Patit, Hingu Mandal, and Darbari Bansi.

North—Boundary of Garhbari.

South—Kamakhya's Debutter.

Now Cadastral Survey Dag No. 584 has on the west Kanchi Baid, on the north Garhbari and on the south Kamakhya's debutter. So that the boundaries on three sides are identified. The learned Subordinate Judge also finds it, but he says: "it is obvious that there may be other lands fulfilling these conditions". There may be Kanchis elsewhere, for instance, Saham paper Ex. U describes Dag No. 315 as Jote Kanchi Sheikh, but Kanchir Baid to the west of Schedule I must be Bagherbari. It is not contended that Schedule I extends to its west, and the respondents have not shown that any dag except No. 429 in Bagherbari is recorded in the name of Kanchi. However that may be, we do not find that there is any other land which lies between Garhbari on the north, Kanchir Baid on the west and Kamakhya's debutter on the south, nor is it suggested what other piece of lands fulfills all these "conditions". The defendants also attempted to identify Dag No. 430 with Cadastral Survey Plot No. 584 by other means. They say Cadastral Survey Plot No. 552 corresponds to Dags Nos. 369 and 400 which were allotted to Touzi No. 6045 (See Saham paper Ex. S) and were held by the tenant Niamat. The Settlement Khatian Ex. A shows that they are now held by Salim son of Niamat and appertain to No. 6045. Then the Cadastral Survey Plots Nos. 553 and 624 were sought to be identified with Chita Dag No. 401, which has Kanchir Ghuni on the east. Dag No. 429 (Cadastral Survey plots Nos. 578 to 583) is Kanchir, Jote and Cadastral Survey plot No. 584 is thus identical with Dag No. 430. The learned Subordinate Judge says the "argument is undoubtedly very plausible". He is of opinion that "it will not be quite unsafe to identify Cadastral Survey Dag No. 552 with Chitta Dags Nos. 399-400, and it may even be held that Cadastral Survey Dags Nos. 533 and 624 are identical with Chitta Dag No. 401". But he does not accept the defendants' contention because he is of opinion that there is no connection between Dag No. 401 and Dag No. 429. He says "an examination of the chitta, however, shows that after Dag No. 401, the chitta proceeded from a different place altogether from a distance from Dag No. 401 on the south-west side"; and again "But Dag No. 401 is not connected with Dag No. 429 and it will be a mere assumption to say that Kanchir Baid is the land of Chitta Dag No. 429. The elaborate argument to establish the identity of Cadastral Survey Dag No. 552 with Chitta Dags Nos. 399 and 400 even if well founded becomes unavailing, because there is no connection between Dag No. 401 and Dag No. 429. If Dag No. 429 is to be identified with land in Kanchir Baid, the basis for that would be simply this, namely, Dag No. 429 is described as Jote Kanchir Ghuni, Kanchi may have had land elsewhere and it will not be safe to presume from the description of Kanchir Jote that Dag No. 429 is identical with land in Kanchir Baid. In my opinion Dag No. 430 is not sufficiently identified with Dag No. 584". It appears, however, from the original chitta that on the next day after the measurement of Dag No. 401, the Amin measured other Dags at some distance, viz., Dags Nos. 402 to 428, and then came back to Dag No. 429. The words in the chitta "on the north-eastern corner of the preceding plot at a long distance" refer to Dag No. 428 to the south-west which was the last preceding plot and which was separated by a long distance.

It appears, therefore, that the conclusion at which Court below arrived that Dag No. 429 was not connected with Dag No. 401 was based upon a misconception.

Dag No. 431 (Cadastral Survey plot No. 585 the northern portion of Baid No. 1) is to the east of the preceding plot (Plot No. 584, i. e., Dag No. 430). Then Dag No. 432 (Cadastral Survey plots Nos. 586, 583 and 589) is to the east of 431. To the south-west corner of No. 422 is Dag No. 433 (Cadastral Survey plots Nos. 590, 591 and 592) and Dag No. 434 (Cadastral Survey plots Nos. 593 and 595) are to the south of No. 433. Dag No. 435 part of Cadastral Survey plot No. 828) is on the north-eastern corner of Dag No. 434. They appear so on the case map.

We will now consider the contentions of the learned Pleader for the respondents with respect to the lands of Schedule I, some of which are based upon the findings of the Court below and of the Commissioner.

(1) That the parties directed the controversy to the question whether the land is in garhbari or in bagherbari, and the land being in garhbari according to the thak the defendants' contention should not be entertained. But in the written statement (para. 6) the defendants stated that "the Thak Authorities did not follow the batwara in any particular. Consequently the right and possession of the maliks who had Sahams of Mahal No. 130 and of their representatives cannot be determined by the Thak or Survey Map". Then again the 7th issue upon which the parties went to trial was "Does the disputed land appertain to Touzi No. 6049 and is the disputed land included in Batwara plot No. 372 as alleged in the plaint". The Court below also in its judgment states: "the point for determination in these cases is whether the lands claimed in these suits are covered by the plaintiff's Dag No. 372 of the Batwara Chitta of Garhbari." It cannot, therefore, be said that the controversy was limited to the question of boundaries of two contiguous estates according to the Thak Map. As a matter of fact the owners of 6042 have plots of lands in Bagherbari as well as in Garhbari, see Saham papers Ex. T and Ex. U.

(2) That the western boundary of Dag No. 372 is Nabu Sheikh and as Nabu's grandson holds one plot of land No. 575 in the baid on the west of Sch. I, he must be the Nabu mentioned in the chitta. The learned Subordinate Judge takes the same view. The plaintiffs examined one Amanulla, and the defendants examined Samed, both of whom are grandsons of Nabu. The former supports the plaintiff, and the latter says that to the east of the chala is called Nabu's Baid (Baid No. 2 according to the defendants). The learned Subordinate Judge disbelieves Samed as he described his grandfather as Nabi and not as Nabu but in the Settlement Khatian (Ex. 24) it is stated "Jote Nabi Sheikh possessor Samed Ali Sheikh". Amanulla holds only one plot (575) in Kanchir Baid but Kanchir Baid consists of plots Nos. 570 to 583 and the Court below finds "whether it is called Baid or Ghuni the parties agree that it goes under the name of Kanchir." The statement of Samed that Nabu's land is in Baid No. 2 is supported by the boundary of Dag No. 435 which is described as being on the west of the land of Nabu Sheikh. Dag No. 435 corresponds to part of Cadastral Survey Dag No. 828. Nabu, therefore, is on the East of No. 828 and would be in Baid No. 2 (see the case map). In any case it is not established that Nabu mentioned in the chitta is in Kanchir Baid.

(3) That Dag No. 430 mentions only Kanchir Sheikh as the western boundary, and defendants say that Cadastral Survey plots Nos. 578 to 583 are Kanchir Dag No. 429. If so, only a portion of Schedule I land would be covered by the boundary as there are other plots to the south of plots Nos. 578 to 583 as the map shows. But all the land marks or lands on all the boundaries do not appear to have been given in the chitta. The plaintiffs at any rate cannot urge this objection because the northern boundary of Dag No. 372, Dengua Kochir Ghuni, does not exhaust the northern boundary. Besides the western boundary of Dag No. 430 is not separately mentioned. It gives only the direction with reference to the preceding plot and says "on the east of the preceding plot" that plot being Kanchir.

(4) That the Police map (in a criminal case relating to some land of Schedule I) shows the whole Baid outside the disputed land on the west of Schedule I land as Kanchir Baid whereas the defendants now say that Nos. 578-583, i. e., the northern portion only as Kanchir Baid. But as the Court below finds these *baid*s go by the names of the persons who first brought them under cultivation and it does not follow that the entire baid was held by Kanchir at the date of the chitta.

(5) That Dag No. 429 (Cadastral Survey plots Nos. 578 to 583 Kanchir) has Hingu Mandal to its south, but defendants stated before the Commissioner that Hingu (Dag No. 397) is identical with Cadastral Survey plots Nos. 555-558 so that to the South of No. 578 would be Nos. 577 and not No. 555. The defendants say that Nos. 571 to 577 (Chitta Dag No. 396 is recorded in the name of Gogra so that Gogra Cadastral Survey plots Nos. 577 to 571 (Dag Nos. 396) and not Hingu Mandal plots Nos. 578-783 (Dag No. 429) would be to the south of Kanchir as in the chitta. This argument, however, proceeds upon the basis that the Cadastral Survey lines followed the lines of the chitta. The Dag No. 696 (Jote Gogra) has Hingu Mandal and Kanchi Sheikh on the north and the map shows that to the north of No. 577 is Nos. 778-783 (viz.) Kanchir Baid and the western bifurcation is Nos. 558 to 555.

(6) That Dag No. 430 shows Hingu on the east and, therefore, Hingu cannot be identified with Cadastral Survey plots Nos. 555-558 (397) which is on the west of No. 584. It appears, however, that not only Dag No. 397 but two other plots Chitta Dags No. 432 (Cadastral Survey plots Nos. 586 588, 589), and No. 433 (Cadastral Survey plots Nos. 590 591 and 592) are also recorded in the name of Hingu and they are on the East of No. 430 (Cadastral plot No. 584). The defendants want to fix Dag No. 430 in Cadastral Survey plot No 584 by its southern boundary shown in the chitta as Kamakhya's debutter, and Cadastral Survey plot No. 2322 appears from the settlement record to be Kamakhya's debutter in the possession of Dharma Lochan Soshi Lochan and others.

(7) That No. 2322 recorded as Kamakhya Debutter in the Cadastral Survey cannot be the Kamakhya Debutter of the chitta because the chitta shows that Kamakhya Debutter is on the South of No. 394 which is described in the chitta as Chambalitolar Chala, and the Settlement Record shows that Chambalitolar Chala is Cadastral Survey plot No. 559 and, therefore, Kamakhya Debutter must be to the south of No. 559 at the time of the chitta and cannot be No. 2322 which is now recorded as Kamakhya Debutter.

It appears, however, that Dag No. 390 of the Chitta is Chambalitolar Chala (Cadastral Survey plot No. 559) and Dag No. 394 is not Cadastral Survey plot No. 559 but Cadastral Survey plot No. 569. On the north of Cadastral Survey No. 559 is Cadastral Survey No. 552. The northern boundary of Dag No. 390 is recorded as Niamat Mandal, and Niamat Mandal's plot is recorded as Nos. 399-400 of the chitta. The learned Subordinate Judge finds that Dag Nos. 399 and 400 corresponding to No. 599, and Dag No. 394 corresponds to Cadastral Survey No. 569 which also is Chambalitolar and Jungle Chala. The defendants' witness No. 6 Soshi Lochan mentions his debutter as being situated on the south of the disputed land. Dag No. 282 Kamakhya Debutter is cultivated land and there is no place for cultivated land to the south of Cadastral Survey plot No. 559.

(8) That Nabu Sheikh cannot be in Baid

No. 2 because Brindaban plaintiff's Chala was mentioned in the map. That is in plaintiff's favour. On the other hand as stated above Chitta Dag No. 435 corresponding to Cadastral Survey plot No. 828 is west of the land of Nabu Sheikh, and that would go to show that Nabu is in what defendants call Baid No. 2.

(9) That in the partition proceedings the final order of the Collector dated the 6th December 1907 was in favour of the plaintiffs. As already stated the peshkar Sarat Chandra Roy reported that the lands were in the possession of the owners of No. 6042 through ijaradars and tenants and that the latter "used to pay rent of these lands from a long time". Another peshkar Kailash Chandra Roy also was of opinion that possession is undoubtedly with the proprietors of the No. 6042 and the lands should be treated as lands of Bagherbari. We have referred to the report of the Deputy Collector who agreed with the peshkars. The Collector in his order dated 6th December 1907 stated "From the evidence and from reports of the peshkar and Deputy Collector, it seems clear that lands so far as they are in possession of any one are in possession of tenants of the parent estate. The Thak boundary shows about half of the land to be in Garhbari, but the Thak has been found by the amin to be incorrect. The revenue Survey boundary shows the whole plot to be in Garbari. The greater part of this land is uncultivated forest as regards which both sides claim to have exercised the right of giving leases for cutting timber. The parent estate seems to have been in possession of certain plots of land a very small fraction of the whole but even though these may possibly have been in possession of the parent estate for over 12 years, I do not think this will cause the objector's claim to the whole stretch of land untenable under s. 88 of Act V of 1897. I have, therefore, no course but to strike the partition case off the file which will accordingly be done". In these circumstances the partition proceedings cannot help the plaintiffs and if they show anything, they show that the lands were in possession of the owners of No. 6042 so far back as 1906 and even if plaintiffs were in possession for short periods through ijaradars the Record of Rights shows the defendants in possession.

For all these reasons we are of opinion that plaintiffs have failed to locate Nabu in Kanchir Baid, and we think that lands of Schedule I are not included in Chitta Dag No. 372, of Garhbari.

We now come to the lands of Schedule II. The eastern boundary of Batwara Dag No. 372 as stated above, is Jani Sheikh Bara Chala Gajari Jungle, etc., Jungle Chala, half of 500 $\frac{1}{2}$ nals.

The parties are not agreed as to the position of Jani Sheikh. The case for the defence is that Baid No. 3 of which the southern part is portion of this schedule is the baid where Jani had land and that it forms the eastern boundary of plaintiffs' Dag No. 372. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, tried to locate it in the baid to the east of Cadastral Survey Plot No. 2135. But that baid (plots Nos. 2131 to 2142) is admittedly Kholar Baid. Now Jani is mentioned in Dag No. 291 as the western boundary of Bara Chala belonging to the defendants. The Court below observes, "if this Jani Sheikh be identical with Jani named in Dag No. 372, then to locate Jani in the Kholar Baid would lead to the exclusion of much land that is admittedly part of Bara Chala. But they may not be identical in which case the consideration just mentioned would not apply". It has not, however, been shown that they are not identical. The learned Pleader for the respondents contends that the only reason assigned by the Court below for not accepting the plaintiffs' case as to Jani Sheikh being in Kholar baid is that if that were accepted some portion of Bara Chala which is admittedly in possession of the defendants would be excluded; and he suggests that the defendants might have overstepped the boundaries of Dag No. 291 (as pointed out by the plaintiffs) by taking possession of lands to the north-west of the place where Jani Sheikh is located by the plaintiffs. This suggestion, however, is not borne out by the evidence, and does not seem to be a probable one, because the original homestead of the Bansis stood on the west of the Chala of Dag No. 291.

The Court below observes: "In this connection it will be borne in mind that that part of Baid No. 3 which is included in Schedule II of land of Suit No. 36 is identical with Dag No. 15 in map Ex. 12, and the plaintiffs' claim to it was overruled by the Collector in 1905, and since then the plaintiff did nothing to contest that finding by the Collector". The conclusion arrived at by the learned Sub-Judge about the eastern boundary is as follows: "In my opinion Jani should be located in Baid No. 3 and this baid should be taken as the Eastern boundary of part of the plaintiff's Dag No. 372, I mean the plaintiffs' land between Baid No. 1 and Baid No. 3 as Bara Chala is the Eastern boundary of that part of plaintiffs' Dag No. 372 which is the North-Western and the middle part of Schedule II land of Suit No. 36. This, of course, does not exhaust the whole Eastern boundary. If my interpretation of Dag No. 373 of Ex. 15 be correct then that will show that the plaintiffs' land extends up to Nagar Mandal's Ghuni and would cover the remaining part of Sch. II land of Suit No. 36, and the subject-matter of Suit No. 35". The learned Subordinate Judge does not locate Jani Sheikh in Kholar Baid but in Baid No. 3 but he is of opinion that Baid No. 3 is the eastern boundary of only the northern part, and Bara Chala is the eastern boundary of the middle portion of Dag No. 372. According to the Subordinate Judge, therefore, there are two eastern boundaries. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the two eastern boundaries are not contiguous; they are at a considerable distance from each other; and that it is not at all likely that in such a case two such boundaries should be given. Ordinarily two such boundaries on the same side would not be given, but cases may be conceived where the land is irregular in shape, and extends up to a certain place on the north eastern side, and to another place on the south eastern side. In such cases two boundaries must necessarily be given, though the two places may be at considerable distance from each other.

The greater portion of Schedule II lands have Bara Chala on the east. The defendants say that the lands of Schedule II are identical with Chitta Dag No. 291 known as Bara Chala. The boundaries of Dag No. 291 are as follows:—

W.—Jani Sheikh.

E.—Kholar Baid, Jote Saleh Pahalwan's Ghuni Guzari Chit Jungle etc.

S.—Nagar Mandal's Ghuni.

N.—Bheuraidd Baid.

Jani Sheikh, as already stated, is in Baid No. 3, Kholar Baid is in Nos. 2131 to 2142, but both the Commissioner and the Court below have found that plots Nos. 2139 and 2140 are Saleh Pahalwan's land. That finding appears to be correct, and that being so, Bara Chala is not confined to Kholar Baid, but extends up to Saleh Pahalwan. Then the material point is the position of Nagar Mandal's Ghuni. The plaintiffs' case is that it is between Dags Nos. 372 and 373. The defendants pointed out Nos. 2611, 2612, 2613 as Nagar Mandal's Ghuni. The Court below finds that they are not, and that the whole of the belt encircling plot No. 203 is Nagar Mandal's Ghuni. The learned Pleader for the respondents referred to the evidence of the witnesses Madhu Khan, Ebadut and Samed. The first stated that Nagar Mandal's Ghuni commences from the south of Kholar Baid, runs towards the east, then south, then west. The second says that Nagar Mandal's Ghuni goes from the south and proceeds towards north-west towards Bara Chala on its southern side. According to Samed Ali, Nagar Mandal's Ghuni is to the north of Bara Kutir Chala.

Dag No. 373 is described as Bara Kutir Chala. This Bara Kutir Chala (Dag No. 373) according to the plaintiff is Cadastral Survey plot No. 218, and it has been so found by the Court below. According to Budhai witness No. 7 for the defendants, "Barakutia Chala" is to the east of Guptas Chala, and according to the statements of the defendants recorded in the field book "the Gajari Chala pointed out by the plaintiffs as appertaining to the land claimed in Suit No 35 is a Chala within Touzi No. 652 commonly known as Gupta's Chala". That goes to support the finding of the Court below with regard to the position of Bara Kutir Chala being in Cadastral Survey plot No. 218. On behalf of the appellant, it is contended that according to the field book it should be to the east of Nos. 2611 to 2618 (i. e., Nagar Mandal's Ghuni). But even if Dag No. 373 is where defendants locate it, it has according to the copy of Chitta (Ex. 15) Nagar Mandal's Ghuni and Dag No. 372 to its west. That being so, the southern portion of the lands in dispute in Schedule II of Suit No. 36 would fall with Dag No. 372. On behalf of the appellants reference was made to another copy of the Chitta Ex. A (16) in which the western boundary of Dag No. 373 is thus described:—"On the east of the preceding plot (Dag No. 372) separated by another plot and on the east and southern corner of Nagar Mandal's Ghuni". It is contended that according to this copy Dag No. 373 is separated from Dag No. 372 by another plot, and that is Dag No. 291. The copy Ex. 15 was produced by the defendants.

but marked as an Exhibit by the plaintiffs, while the copy Ex. A (16) was produced by the plaintiffs but marked as an Exhibit by the defendants. Of the two copies the Court below preferred the former for the reasons stated in its judgment, and we have proceeded upon its basis in our decision with regard to the lands of Schedule I. We think, therefore, that we should go by the copy Ex. 15. As stated above, according to that copy Dag No. 372 is to the west of Dag No. 372 Bara Kutir Chala, and the southern portion of the Schedule II lands are, therefore, included in Dag No. 372.

As to the middle portion of the Sch. II lands, it was not even claimed by the owners of No. 6042 in the partition proceedings in 1904-05. We have not attached any importance to the orders in the partition proceedings as they evidently were based upon possession, and as the defendants have the later settlement record in their favour. But the fact that the owners of No. 6042 did not even claim the middle portion of the Schedule II lands when the estate was going to be partitioned is a very important circumstance in favour of the plaintiffs. We, therefore, see no sufficient reasons for differing from the conclusion arrived at by the Court below.

We now come to the land of Suit No. 35 which is Cadastral Survey plot No. 203. This plot was not the subject-matter of the partition proceedings, as it is claimed not as part of No. 6042 but of No. 6052. It is said by the defendants to correspond to Dag No. 368 of the Garhbari Chitta. The learned Subordinate Judge observes:—"It would seem that the defence does not rely so much upon their ability to establish the identity of Cadastral Survey Dag No. 203 with Dag No. 368. What they hope to do is to establish that Schedule II land of Suit No. 36 is covered by their Bara Chala, the result of which would be that the plaintiff would have no land to the east of Baid No. 3. For the defence did not mention in the written statement that the subject-matter of the Suit No. 35 was their Dag No. 365. Nor was the Commissioner asked to compare the Chitta with the locality and find whether Cadastral Survey Dag No. 203 is identical with Dag No. 368 of the Garhbari Chitta. It may be that before the return of the Commissioner from the locality, but after the measurement was over a statement was made on the side of the defence, that such and such land is identical with such and such a dag of a particular chita. This might have sufficed to give notice to the plaintiff as to the case that would be made at the hearing. But the Court has not the benefit of a comparison of the locality with the dag mentioned and the benefit of the Commissioner's opinion on the point. This has caused a good deal of difficulty to the Court, and the complaint on the plaintiff's side is not without foundation. Turning now to Dag No. 368, it is quite clear that Dag No. 369, which is Nagar Mandal's Ghuni is not contiguous to Dag No. 368. But if the evidence was well-founded, Dag No. 368 would be contiguous to Dag No. 369. Further, Dag No. 369, that is, Nagar Mandal's Ghuni at same distance from Dag No. 268, and is to the south-west of Dag No. 368. Now a small part of the Ghuni may be to the contiguous south-west of a part of Cadastral Survey Dag No. 203, but the description of Nagar Mandal's Ghuni as being at some distance and to the south-west of Cadastral Survey Dag No. 203 would be quite inappropriate, indeed untrue. Thus, I have no doubt that Cadastral Survey Dag No. 203 is not identical with Dag No. 368 of Garhbari Chita, and the defendant's case on this point certainly fails."

We agree with the observations of the learned Subordinate Judge and hold that the identity of the lands of Chitta Dag No. 368 with Cadastral Survey plot No. 203 is not established.

The result is that Appeal No. 267 is dismissed with costs and Appeal No. 110 is allowed in part. The decree of the Court below will be modified. The plaintiff's claim will be dismissed with respect to the lands of Schedule I of Suit No. 36 and in respect of any portion of the land of Schedule II which may be found to form part of Dag No. 15 of Map of Ex. 12, and will be decreed with respect to the rest of the lands of Sch. II. The identity of the said land of Dag No. 15 of map Ex. 12 will be determined in execution. Each party will bear their own costs in both Courts in Appeal No. 110.

In Appeal No. 267 we assess the hearing fee at Rs. 50 only.

In Appeal No. 110 of 1922 the plaintiffs will get Rs. 100 as mesne profits for the portion of the lands decreed.

Appeal No. 267 dismissed.

The ordinary rule is that where the law allows a party to make an application to a Court, the applicant is entitled to be heard either in person or through his Pleader, before his application is rejected.

Therefore, where a person dissatisfied with the decision of a mamlatdar under the Mamlatdars' Courts Act applies to the Collector under s. 23 of the Act to revise the order of the mamlatdar he is entitled to be heard either in person or through his Pleader before his application is rejected.Application against an order of the Collector, Poona, confirming that of the Mamlatdar, Khed, in Possessory Suit No. 48 of 1924.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Petitioner.

Mr. V. D. Limaye, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant is the lessee of certain property which was leased to him for ten years on July 30, 1921, by the owner Kashibai, one of the terms of the lease being that the tenancy was to be forfeited if the tenant failed to pay the rent provided for in the lease. The opponent purchased the land in dispute from Kashibai on June 30, 1924, and got the lease in suit transferred to himself on August 20, 1923. As the applicant had not paid rent, the opponent filed a suit on June 19, 1924, in the Mamlatdar's Court to recover possession. The mamlatdar decided the suit in favour of the plaintiff and directed that the plaintiff should be put in possession of the land. An application to the Collector to revise this order was rejected without hearing the applicant. He has now come to this Court asking us to interfere on the ground that the Collector ought not to have rejected the application without hearing the applicant or his Pleader. We are not concerned in this application with the merits of the case. We are concerned with the important question of principle, namely, whether person dissatisfied with the decision of the mamlatdar under the Mamlatdars' Courts Act, is entitled to be heard when he applies to the Collector under s. 23 of the Act to revise the order of the mamlatdar. Under s. 23 (1) there shall be no appeal from any order passed by a mamlatdar under the Act. Under sub-s. (2) the Collector may call for and examine the record of any suit under the Act, and if he considers that any proceedings, finding or order in such suit is illegal or improper, may, after due notice to the parties, pass such order thereon, not inconsistent with the Act, as he thinks fit. Under sub-s. (3) where the Collector takes any proceedings under the Act, he shall be deemed to be a Court under the Act.

The Collector, therefore, must follow the ordinary rule of procedure followed by a Court, and it is one of those commendable rules of procedure which ought to be followed, that if any party is entitled to make an application to a Court, he is entitled to be heard either in person or through his Pleader, before his application is rejected.

We think, then, that the Collector was wrong in rejecting the present application. We set aside his order declining to revise the order passed by the mamlatdar, and we direct him to hear the applicant on the question whether the application should be entertained. Rule absolute. No order as to costs.

In the case of a contract for sale, by a firm of importers, of goods of a particular shipment, where a portion of the goods of that shipment arrives some months after the receipt of the bulk of the goods, if no goods are appropriated to the contract, the due date for the performance of the contract, both for the purposes of limitation and the assessment of damages, is the date when all the goods have arrived. [p. 655, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 11th December 1922.

Mr. Sardha Ram, for the Appellants.

Mr. Jagan Nath Agarwal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 13th of September 1916 the firm of Phul Chand-Fateh Chand entered into a contract with Chhote Lal-Amba Pershad for the sale to the said Chhote Lal-Amba Pershad of 15 bales of Mull, No. 9252 "November lot 3 grace 60 days" at the rate of Rs. 3—13 per piece. On the 14th of June 1920 Chhote Lal-Amba Pershad instituted a suit against Phul Chand-Fateh Chand for a sum of Rs. 1,875 as due to them for non-delivery of eight bales under the contract of sale. The Trial Court held that the plaintiffs were entitled to a sum of Rs. 271-14 as damages for non-delivery of one bale. The suit qua the remainder, the other seven bales, was dismissed.

The plaintiffs appealed to the District Court when it was held by the learned District Judge that the suit had been rightly decreed qua one bale and ought to be decreed for six others. It was found that the rate at which damages should be assessed qua these six should be Rs. 5-4, and the amount worked out to a sum of Rs. 1,068. Qua the 8th bale the learned District Judge held that the defendants had broken the contract but that having regard to s. 75, illustration (c) of the Contract Act, no damages could be awarded as the market rate at the date of the breach had not been proved.

Against this decree the defendants Phul Chand-Fateh Chand have preferred this second appeal through Mr. Sardha Ram, and the plaintiff Chhote Lal-Amba Pershad have filed cross-objections through Mr. Jagan Nath. In the appeal it is sought to have the decree passed by the learned District Judge set aside, while in the cross-objections it is claimed that a sum of Rs. 535 should be added to the decree already passed.

Both sides have contended that the findings of the learned District Judge are vague. There is some force in this contention, but we think that the findings may be fairly accurately deduced. Firstly, on the question of limitation, the learned District Judge has held that the parties by their conduct clearly considered that the contract was in force up to the 15th June 1917. It has been urged by Mr. Sardha Ram that this finding is unsatisfactory and it is not based on any evidence. A reference to the judgment, however, clearly shows that the conduct of the parties which influenced the learned District Judge was deduced from certain correspondence and there can be no doubt that the construction placed on this correspondence by the learned District Judge is one that it can bear, although it may possibly be open to a different interpretation. Further as contended by Mr. Jagan Nath, for the respondents, the contract was an indivisible one and as the arrival of the last shipment under the contract did not take place till November 1917, we think that the plea of limitation advanced by Mr. Sardha Ram must fail.

It was next contended that the damages had been wrongly assessed. Here again it must be admitted that the finding of the learned District Judge is vague. He finds that the breach occurred "some time between June and December 1917." Now in a contract which fixes the date for performance the due date is, as a rule, ascertainable. We agree that in the present instance the due date was the actual date of arrival in Karachi with an allowance of such reasonable time as would enable the Railway receipt and invoices to reach Delhi from Karachi. In order to ascertain the due date under this contract, therefore, all that has to be seen is when the goods arrived at Karachi and then to allow a period of 10 to 14 days (which we consider reasonable) for the transmission of the necessary documents from that port to Delhi. It appears that while the bulk of the shipments for November lot 3 goods had reached Karachi by the middle of May 1917, one portion of the relevant shipment did not reach that port till the 19th of November 1917. It has been contended by Mr. Jagan Nath that inasmuch as the contract was one to be performed in its entirety, the due date for the performance of this contract would not be earlier than the 1st of December 1917. On the other hand, Mr. Sardha Ram urged that in the plaint itself the plaintiffs had averred that the contract had been broken in July or in September and that inasmuch as, admittedly, 19 bales of the shipment in question had reached Karachi by the middle of May 1917, the 1st of June 1917 should be the date both for the purposes of limitation and for assessment of damages. After a careful consideration it seems to us that Mr. Jagan Nath's contention must prevail. No goods had been appropriated to the contract and we think that in this case so long as any goods deliverable under the contract had still to reach Karachi, the due date had not arrived. It is true that in the plaint the cause of action is said to have arisen somewhere between July and September, but it is also clear that the plaintiffs were leaving this matter for the decision of the Court. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal.

Turning to the cross-objections, we find that illustration (c) to s. 75 of the Indian Contract Act does not apply to the bale to which the learned District Judge has applied it. Clearly the contract was broken by the firm of Phul Chand qua this bale and the plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to damages. The rate at which the damages for this bale are to be assessed should be the same as that for the other bales. The learned District Judge fixed Rs. 5-4-0 as the rate at which he assessed the damages qua six bales, but we are unable to hold that this figure is correct. In this case we consider the due date was not earlier than the 1st of December 1917. There appears to be no material on the record from which the rate at that date could be deduced, and we gather from the judgment of the Trial Court that no sale appears to have taken place on the 1st of December 1917. The market-rate at the end of October 1917 has been found to have been Rs. 5-14-0 and we think that, having regard to all the circumstances of this case, it would be reasonable to fix that amount as the rate at which the damages should be assessed. At this rate the damages payable for one bale came to Rs. 271-14-0. Multiplied by 8 the total comes to Rs. 2,175. The plaintiffs, however, only claim Rs. 1,875 and we, therefore, accept the cross-objections and grant the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 1,875 with costs on that amount throughout. We do not think that the circumstances require us to allow any interest on this amount.

Under r. 16 of Ch. XXIII of the Manual of Circulars issued by the Bombay High Court the remuneration of a Receiver appointed under the Provincial Insolvency Act, other than an Official Receiver, must be in such proportion to the amount of the dividends distributed as the Court may direct, provided that it does not exceed 5 per cent of the amount of dividends. Where, however, the property sold is subject to a mortgage and a portion of the amount realised is payable to the mortgagee, the remuneration of the Receiver should be fixed with reference to the amount of the dividends distributed after deducting the amount of the mortgage and not with reference to the total amount realised.

Application against the decision of the District Judge, Bijapur, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 14 of 1923, reversing an order of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Bijapur.

Mr. Nilkant Atmaram, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—The remuneration of Receivers, other than Official Receivers, under the Provincial Insolvency Act must be fixed under r. 16 of the Ch. XXIII of the Manual of Circulars issued by the High Court, which directs that the remuneration of Receivers, other than Official Receivers, shall be in such proportion to the amounts of the dividends distributed as the Court may direct provided that it does not exceed five per centum of the amount of dividends.

In this case the Subordinate Judge awarded the Receivers remuneration at the rate of five per cent. on the whole amount realised by them. The greater portion of that amount was payable to a mortgagee. Therefore, the balance available for paying dividends to creditors was under Rs. 25,000. It is clear, therefore, that the order of the Subordinate Judge directing payment to the Receivers at the rate of five per cent. on the whole amount realised was not authorized by the rule and the District Judge was right in holding that the rule should be followed, and that the percentage could only be allowed on the dividends distributed. In any event, it is difficult to see how it could be said that the District Judge who was following the procedure laid down in the High Court Circulars was wrong, or that his decision is not in accordance with law. The Rule will, therefore, be discharged with costs.

May 15, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Fforde.

SAWAN SINGH—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 145—Previous statement of witness—Statement, use of, to discredit witness.

A previous statement of a witness made before a Magistrate who first started to try the case cannot be used to discredit the evidence given by the witness at the eventual trial before another Magistrate, unless the statement has been brought into evidence after cross-examination.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Kasur, dated the 18th November 1924.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Sawan Singh has been convicted under s. 366, Indian Penal Code, of having taken part in the abduction of Musammatt Sham Kaur, and has been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment with three months' solitary confinement.

The case against this appellant depends entirely upon his identification by Musammatt Sham Kaur and by the brothers, Jiwan Singh and Khewan Singh. According to the prosecution evidence there is no doubt that Musammatt Sham Kaur was abducted on the occasion in question and was forcibly kept in the custody of her abductors for about 22 days. During this time she could not have failed to have the faces of her captors well-impressed upon her memory. She stated in the witness-box that the man whom she took to be the appellant had sound eyes, whereas the appellant is blind in one eye. She also stated that Sawan Singh who took part in the abduction was not the appellant, though he resembled him. The only other witnesses for the prosecution in this case are the brothers, Jiwan Singh and Khewan Singh. Jiwan Singh declared that he knew the appellant before and that he was present at the abduction, and he identified him in Court. Khewan Singh is not so definite in his evidence. He merely says that Sawan Singh and six others came to his house and forcibly dragged the woman away. He does not state that Sawan Singh, who, he alleges, took part in the abduction, is the appellant. He does not appear to have been asked to identify the appellant in Court, and no evidence of identification, beyond the statement of Jiwan Singh, has been given by the prosecution.

The learned Trial Judge refused to accept the evidence of Musammatt Sham Kaur, as he considered that she "has probably been won over." He appears to have contrasted the evidence given by her before him with a statement which she is alleged to have made before Mr. Sant Ram who started to try the case. The learned Trial Magistrate quite rightly held that this previous statement could not be given in evidence for the prosecution, but he seemed to think that he was justified in using it for purpose of discrediting the evidence which the witness gave before him. In this he is clearly wrong. The Crown could have asked leave to treat Musammatt Sham Kaur as an hostile witness, if the Court had a reasonable belief that she was not speaking the truth, but no such application was made; nor was Musammatt Sham Kaur cross-examined upon her previous statement. The previous statement, therefore, has not been brought into evidence on cross-examination, and the Trial Magistrate was wrong in using material which has in no way been made evidence, for the purpose of contradicting the sworn testimony before him. The previous statement not having been made evidence, and not being on this record, I cannot take it into consideration.

From the evidence which is before me I cannot hold that the prosecution have established the presence of the appellant at the abduction and I must accordingly accept his appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence imposed by the Trial Court and direct that he be set at liberty.

BALDEO NARAIN—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 192, 204—Case made over to Magistrate for disposal, effect of—Magistrate directing Police to put up charge-sheet, validity of—Issue of process against accused—Procedure.

A complaint under s. 420 of the Penal Code was sent by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate to the Police for investigation and report. The Police made a report that the case was maliciously false and also filed a complaint for the prosecution of the complainant for an offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code. The complainant thereupon put in a petition impugning the Police report and praying for an enquiry by a Judicial Officer. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed an order on this petition in the following words:—"Seven witnesses are present. To Mr. Q. for disposal." On the matter coming up before Mr. Q. the latter did not examine any of the witnesses but after looking through the papers directed the Police Investigating Officer to submit a charge-sheet. The Sub-Divisional Officer thereupon passed an order re-calling the case from the file of Mr. Q. and making it over to another Magistrate with certain instructions as to how he should proceed:

Held, (1) that the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer making over the case to Mr. Q. for disposal was one under s. 192 of the Cr. P. C., whereby the whole case was transferred to Mr. Q. and that it was, therefore, competent to the latter to pass an order in the case summoning the accused to appear before him;

(2) that, therefore, the Sub-Divisional Officer's subsequent order re-calling the case from the file of Mr. Q. and making it over to another Magistrate was not justified;

(3) that Mr. Q.'s order directing the Police Investigating Officer to submit a charge-sheet was also without authority and should be set aside, leaving it to Mr. Q. to issue process against the accused in the usual way.

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Purnea.

Mr. B. P. Jamuar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Saran, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Purnea. It appears that on the 3rd December 1924, one Mahari Dhangar filed a complaint before the Sub-Divisional Officer of Purnea in respect of an offence under s. 420 of the Indian Penal Code. The Sub-Divisional Officer examined the complainant and passed an order in these terms:—"Examined complainant. The offence disclosed is cognizable. Sub-Inspector, Kazanchi Hat Police Station to investigate and report by 17th December 1924." The Police submitted a final report stating that the case was maliciously false and filed a complaint for the prosecution of the complainant under s. 211 of the Indian Penal Code. It is to be noted that the Sub-Divisional Officer did not take cognizance of the case under s. 211 of the Indian Penal Code but merely asked the accused to show cause on the 27th January 1925 why he should not be prosecuted.

At the same time the complainant in the case under s. 420 of the Indian Penal Code put in a petition impugning the Police report and praying for an enquiry by a Judicial Officer. This petition is under the law a complaint. The complainant was directed to adduce evidence on the 10th February 1925. His witnesses, however, were not present on that day and he prayed for time. The case was thereupon adjourned to the 19th February 1925 on which date seven of the witnesses were present. The Sub-Divisional Officer on that day passed the following order:—

"Seven witnesses were present, To M. Fakhrul Hasan Qadri for disposal."

Mr. Qadri did not examine any of the witnesses, being of opinion that it would be a waste of time to do so. But on looking into the Police report and hearing the Pleader of the complainant he directed the Investigating Officer to submit a charge-sheet in the case on the 12th March 1925.

On the 12th March 1925 the Sub-Divisional Officer passed the order which has been recommended for revision by this Court. By that order the Sub-Divisional Officer purported to re-call the case from the file of the Deputy Magistrate, Mr. Qadri, and make it over to another Deputy Magistrate, Mr. Duff, with certain instructions as to how he should proceed. The order of the Deputy Magistrate, Mr. Qadri, directing the Police to submit a charge-sheet is also recommended for revision. The ground upon which such recommendation is made is that by his order dated the 12th March 1925 transferring "the case" to Mr. Qadri for disposal the whole case under s. 420 of the Indian Penal Code was transferred for disposal and the transfer must be deemed to have been made under s. 192. In that view the Deputy Magistrate, Mr. Qadri, had full seisin of the case and if he found that there was a prima facie case he had the right to issue summons against the accused. As regards the order of the Deputy Magistrate upon the Police to submit a charge-sheet it is stated that the Deputy Magistrate was not competent to make such an order and, therefore, it is recommended that this order too should be set aside.

It is, however, contended by learned Counsel appearing against the letter of reference that the Sub-Divisional Officer's explanation should be accepted to the effect that all that Mr. Qadri was asked to do was to enquire and report as to whether the Police report that the complaint was maliciously false was true or not. The substantive case under s. 420 of the Indian Penal Code remained on the file of the Sub-Divisional Officer and was not transferred to Mr. Qadri at all. Various arguments have been advanced on this theory but it is unnecessary to enter into a consideration of the arguments as the meaning of the order dated the 12th March is quite plain on the face of it. It is not proper to decide this matter on the explanation submitted by the Sub-Divisional Officer and specially in view of the fact that the terms of the order itself are quite clear. They show that the order was under s. 192 and that the whole case was transferred. Mr. Qadri, therefore, had full seisin of the case and the Sub-Divisional Officer could not re-call the case for the reasons shown in the order or transfer it to another Deputy Magistrate, much less with instructions as to how he should deal with the case. In my opinion the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge is sound. The Reference is accepted and the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer dated the 12th March 1925 as well as the order of the Deputy Magistrate asking for a charge-sheet from the Police are set aside.

ACCUSED Nos. 1 TO 7—PETITIONERS.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 360 (1) —Depositions to be read immediately—Provisions, whether mandatory—Non-compliance—Illegality.

The terms of s. 360 (1) of the Cr. P. C. being mandatory, any violation or departure from the practice or procedure enjoined upon the Court is not merely an irregularity which can be cured but an illegality. It is not a compliance with the section for the Magistrate to examine a number of witnesses and ask them to be in a room and then have the depositions read over to them later in the day. Such a procedure is altogether illegal.

Petition, under ss. 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. C., 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of Session of the Salem Division, in Criminal Appeals

Nos. 69 and 68 of 1924, preferred against that of the Court of the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate, Sankari, in C. C. No. 28 of 1924.

Dr. Swaminathan and Mr. A. V. K. Krishna Menon, for the Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—This is an application to revise the order of the Sessions Judge of Salem. The point urged on behalf of the petitioners is that the depositions of witnesses were not read over to them as soon as the examination was over. In other words, the terms of s. 360 of the Cr. P. C. were not complied with. Report was called for from the Magistrate who tried the case, and in his report he says: "In cases where the depositions are long and would take a considerable time of the Court if they were then and there read over and interpreted to the witnesses, what is done is to keep all the witnesses aside as soon as each of them is examined so as not to give them an opportunity to mingle with those that are not examined and the place so allotted is within the view of the accused and their Pleader. The depositions of these witnesses are read over and interpreted to them after the work in connection with the case for the day is over." This practice, though it may facilitate the work of the Court is not one which is sanctioned by s. 360 (1) of the Cr. P. C. Clause (1) of s. 360 reads thus: "As the evidence of each witness taken under s. 356 or s. 357 is completed, it shall be read over to him in the presence of the accused, if in attendance, or of his Pleader, if he appears by Pleader, and shall, if necessary, be corrected." The direction here is mandatory and not directory. As each witness, evidence is completed it should be read over to him in the presence of the accused or his Pleader. It is not proper for the Magistrate to examine a number of witnesses and ask them to be in a room and then have the depositions read over to them. The learned Public Prosecutor contends that this is only an irregularity and not an illegality and it is not shown that the accused have been prejudiced by such a procedure being adopted. This is not merely an irregularity. I hold it an illegality for, the terms of the section being mandatory, any violation or departure from the practice or procedure enjoined upon the Court is not merely an irregularity but an illegality. By having recourse to this practice the witness whose evidence was taken, say at 11 o'clock, or who closed his evidence at 12 o'clock, and whose evidence is being read over to him at 5 o'clock, after the day's work is over, might be able to improve upon his evidence and try to get his evidence corrected. It is not also fair to an honest witness not to have his deposition read over soon after he made it, for, if the Magistrate has incorrectly recorded the deposition and if it is read over to the witness some hours after, the question would arise whether the witness is correct in his statement that he did not make such a statement but some other statement and whether the correction should be accepted or not. It is, I think, fair both to the witness as well as to the Magistrate who takes down the deposition as well as to the accused to have the deposition read over as soon as the examination of the witness is over. It would avoid a conflict between any recollection of the accused's Pleader, the recollection of the prosecuting Counsel and the recollection of the Court as well as the recollection of the witness, seeing there are four different persons to be considered in this connection, I think the provision of s. 360 (1) is not only a salutary provision but is a provision intended for furtherance of justice. That being so, the procedure adopted by the Magistrate is an illegal procedure and I have no other course but that of setting aside the conviction and directing the Magistrate to re-try the case.

proceedings.*

Where a person after having a claim disallowed in one Court, obtains an ex parte decree in respect of the same from another Court, the institution of the second suit, and the obtaining of decree by fraudulent means, cannot be held to be an offence committed in relation to proceedings in the first Court, so as to enable it to take action under s. 195, Cr. P. C. The action to be regular should be taken by the second Court, or by the Court to which both the Courts are subordinate.

Criminal revision from the decision of the District and Sessions Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated the 31st January 1925.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The facts in this case are that Wishnu Ram instituted a suit for Rs. 113 in the Court of Sheikh Abdul Ali. He obtained a decree for Rs. 44 and the suit regarding the remainder of the claim was dismissed. He then proceeded to present a fresh plaint in the Court of the Khosa Tamundar for recovery of two out of three items which had been disallowed and obtained an ex parte decree. The judgment-debtor brought these facts to the notice of the original Court which took action under s. 195, and made a complaint in writing under s. 210, Indian Penal Code. The appeal was presented to the District Judge and was dismissed. The question is whether the institution of the second suit and the obtaining of a decree by fraudulent means, if proved, can be held to be an offence committed in relation to proceedings in the first Court. It is, of course, true to say that the dismissal of the claim in the first Court led to the prosecution of the second plaint in the sense that it preceded the prosecution, and that had the result of the first suit been a complete victory for the plaintiff, nothing more would have happened. At the same time, I think, it would be straining the meaning of the words of the section to hold that the bringing of the second suit related to the previous proceedings in the sense in which those words are used in s. 195. The action, to be regular, should have been taken by the second Court or by the Court—whether it be that of the Senior Sub-Judge or of the Sessions Judge—to which they are both subordinate.

I accept the application for revision and quash the proceedings hitherto taken.

In respect of a complaint under s. 193, Penal Code, the false statement should be set out in detail. It should not be left to the Trying Court to find out what statements are false and what statements are not false.

Mr. C. Rama Rao, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Ch. Raghava Rao, for the Respondent.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—This is an application to revise the order of the Sessions Judge of Kistna. The contention of Mr. Rama Rao for the petitioner is that no appeal lay from the order of the Joint Magistrate as no complaint had been made by him. We have sent for the complaint; and from it it appears that he complained of an offence under s. 193 of the Indian Penal Code against four persons. The complaint does not give the particulars of the offence, nor does it mention the offence which each of the accused persons is stated to have committed. A complaint ought to contain particulars of the offence with which a man is charged. Though in the Indian procedure, there is no such thing as a regular indictment as in the English procedure, yet a complaint ought to contain sufficient particulars as to the offence with which a man is charged, and in the case of an offence under s. 193 a complaint ought to mention the particulars, for s. 193 consists of two parts, one relating to false statements and the other to the fabrication of the false evidence. If it is a false statement that is complained of, then the false statement should be set out in detail. It should not be left to the Trying Court to find out what statements are false and what statements are not false. A complaint should always contain sufficient materials to enable the Trying Court to proceed to trial without going through a lot of records for the purpose of finding out whether certain statements made by the accused persons are true or not. The complaint being a very unsatisfactory one, we do not think it proper to interfere with the order of the Sessions Judge. The Sessions Judge has set aside the order of the Joint Magistrate and has directed him to withdraw the complaint on the ground that he did not give an opportunity to the persons against to prove their case in respect of the alleged fabrication of false evidence. Before taking action against a person for fabrication of false evidence, it is necessary that he should be given an opportunity to substantiate his allegations. In this case, this course was not adopted by the Joint Magistrate, and though the offences which the respondents are said to have committed are serious offences, we are not disposed to set aside the order of the Sessions Judge and to restore that of the Joint Magistrate for the simple reason that the complaint is a very unsatisfactory one; and it is not proper that an enquiry should be started on a complaint which does not give sufficient particulars of the offence with which the respondents are charged.

We decline to interfere in revision with the order of the Sessions Judge and dismiss the petition.

In a Sessions case it is not sufficient for a Committing Magistrate to say that a prima facie case has been made out and thus to relieve himself of further responsibility in the case. JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—About 6 A. M. on the 21st November last Ram Bodhan in the course of a quarrel in his village received an injury on the head from the result of which he died at 2 o'clock on that night in the hospital at Chapra. Within four hours of the assault his son Awadh Bihari lodged an information before the Sub-Inspector of Mirzapur thana which is about seven miles away stating that early in the morning a buffalo belonging to the appellant Kuldip had trespassed into the mustard field of his father and that his father had seized the buffalo for the purpose of impounding it. Kuldip came and protested and there was then a struggle. The appellant Ram Prasad, who is the brother, and the appellant Nathuni, who is the nephew of Kuldip, were standing by with lathis and came to the assistance of Kuldip. The result was that Ram Bodhan was struck by Ram Prasad and Nathuni on the head five or seven times. Awadh Bihari, who was in his house 63 paces off, came up running and Kuldip gave him a thrust with the spear head of his lathi in the forearm. Thereupon the appellants went home with the buffalo and Ram Bodhan was carried home by his relatives and by prosecution witness Ram Parsan Ojha. That was the story put forward by Awadh Bihari in his first information to the Police.

At or about the same time that Awadh Bihari lodged his information, the appellants Ram Prasad and Nathuni also appeared at the thana and laid a counter-information to the effect that at 6 A. M. that morning the wife of Ram Prasad had had a quarrel with the wife of Ram Bodhan in a rahar field to the east of Ram Prasad's house and that Ram Bodhan, Awadh Bihari, and Awadh Bihari's brothers Mahadeo and Sita Ram and Ram Bodhan's brother Jeo Bodhan, had come to the place with lathis and that when Ram Prasad and Nathuni interfered to protect Ram Prasad's wife, they assaulted Ram Prasad most severely. Nathuni was also alleged to have been assaulted at the same time. Strangely how Ram Bodhan and Awadh Bihari came by their injuries was neither asked nor explained.

After recording the two informations, the Sub-Inspector sent Ram Bodhan, who had been brought on a stretcher by Awadh Bihari, to the Chapra hospital. He also sent Awadh Bihari, Ram Prasad and Nathuni to the same place. The Sub-Inspector arrived at the place of occurrence on the evening of the same day. On the following morning he began an investigation, but it does not appear that he did anything substantial. At 10 A. M. he received news that Ram Bodhan had died in hospital the previous night. But although the case had thus assumed a graver aspect he did not consider it his duty to make any serious investigation and he left the village that night. On the 23rd or 24th he did not go to the village at all and I must express my surprise that in a case of this description where there was a complaint and a counter-complaint and where everything depended upon a speedy investigation for ascertaining which side was telling the truth, the Police took no action whatever for two days. However, on the 25th November the Sub-Inspector returned and took up the investigation in earnest. In the result he decided upon sending up the appellants for trial and upon keeping the counter-case pending till the disposal of this case.

Now the case must be decided upon the evidence adduced for the prosecution. The defence have called no evidence and have as usual run a grave risk in not doing so; but it seems hopeless to impress upon those, who are accused of serious charges in the Sessions Court, that it is necessary when they have a counter case to give some substantive evidence in support of it and that it is generally most dangerous for them to rely on the chance of finding discrepancies and loopholes in the prosecution evidence. However, it is fortunate for the appellants in this case that there are circumstances in the prosecution evidence which induce us to hold that the real assault took place not under a mohua tree near the mustard field but near the well to the east of Ram Prasad's house as alleged by the defence.

The prosecution witnesses are first of all a man named Bansi. He states that he was going out for a necessary purpose early in the morning and he saw the assault. On the morning of the 22nd when the Sub-Inspector took up the investigation he declined to make any statement whatsoever though pressed to do so. He did not show the Sub-Inspector the mohua tree where drops of blood were found on the 25th November by the Sub-Inspector. It is strongly contended on behalf of the prosecution that the presence of these two blood stains at that place conclusively establishes the truth of the prosecution story. But the unfortunate part of it is that Bansi did not at the earliest moment disclose this important piece of evidence before the Police. On the contrary the Sub-Inspector states that Bansi and Awadh Bihari's brother Mahadeo and the appellant Kuldeep went with the Sub-Inspector to the well and there pointed out large patches of blood on the ground and that they allowed the Sub-Inspector to take it as admitted that the well was the place where the fatal assault was committed. In these circumstances it is impossible to accept Bansi's present statement that nothing took place at the well and that Ram Bodhan and Awadh Bihari received their injuries near the mahua tree. The distance between the two places is not less than 97 paces and there can be no ground for contending that the places were so close that the discrepancy was not considered by Bansi to be material.

The next witness for the prosecution is Ram Parsan Ojha. This witness states that he also was going out for a necessary purpose and when he was at a distance of 15 or 16 laggas from Ram Bodhan he saw Ram Prasad and Nathuni striking him four or five times on his head with their lathis. He says that Ram Bodhan spun round on receiving the first blow and that the other blows were delivered after he fell. According to him Awadh Bihari arrived after his father fell and received his injury because he remonstrated.

The remaining eye-witness is a Rajput named Kali Singh. Now this man states that he was coming from his village which is to the north of Nautan to fetch some labourers whom he wished to employ. He also corroborates Ram Parsan; but it is evident that he and the other two witnesses have attempted in the Sessions Court to make a much more definite case against Ram Prasad than they did before the Police. They now state that they are confident that Ram Prasad struck the fatal blow; but before the Police they were not quite clear that Ram Prasad struck the fatal blow and the suggestion then made was that Nathuni and Ram Prasad were responsible jointly for the injury from which Ram Bodhan died.

In the case of Ram Parsan and Kali Singh, the same difficulty arises as to the occurrence at the well. They ignore all knowledge of any assault at that place and it is clear that they cannot be accepted as impartial witnesses who have come forward to tell the whole truth. Evidence has been given that on the 17th November Awadh Bihari had impounded two cows belonging to Kuldeep and that on the 21st October Awadh Bihari's brother Sitaram had impounded another cow belonging to Kuldeep. An attempt was made to show that the poundkeeper was perjuring himself, but I do not think that attempt has succeeded. In my opinion the learned Judge was right in accepting the allegation that the feelings between the parties had been strained for some time and that shortly before the occurrence Awadh Bihari's family had twice seized Kuldeep's cattle and impounded them. That, however, was not the immediate motive for the occurrence of the 21st November.

The question then is whether we are to accept the story told by Ram Prasad in the counter-information. It is obvious that there was no delay in putting forward this story, and, reading the account, it seems to me to be a much more natural one than that told by Awadh Bihari himself and to be more consistent with the circumstances proved in this case. The allegation is that 2½ years ago Ram Prasad was suspected of an intrigue with one of the daughters of Ram Bodhan in consequence of which he had to go away to Calcutta. He had returned from Calcutta three months before the occurrence, but the old feud was still continuing and on the morning in question a sudden quarrel broke out between the wife of Ram Bodhan and the wife of Ram Prasad. I do not think a story of this kind would have been easily invented having regard to the fact that the appellants are Brahmins by caste. Awadh Bihari himself and as the other prosecution witnesses stoutly deny that Awadh Bihari had a sister called Sudama and that any such intrigue was ever suspected. He maintains that he had two sisters both of whom died 8 or 10 years before the occurrence. The concoction of a story of this kind requires time and as there was no delay at all in going to the Police, I think on the whole that it furnishes a better explanation for the assault than that put forward by the prosecution. That being so, the question is whether the blood patches near the well were the result of a fight as alleged by the defence. On this point we have the fact that Ram Prasad had no less than 11 injuries, 3 of which were lacerated wounds. His nose appears to have been very severely damaged and the other two lacerated wounds must have also bled considerably. Nathuni had three injuries, one of which was a lacerated wound, and although it had been contended by the Crown that the above injuries were not sufficient to cause copious bleeding, I think the evidence establishes that the blood marks at the well were due to Ram Prasad's and Nathuni's injuries.

On the other hand it is in evidence that Ram Prasad died of a fracture of the skull and that there was no external wound from which any blood could have flowed. The only injury on his side from which blood could have come was Awadh Bihari's which was a trifling one and which certainly could not have produced the copious patches which the Sub-Inspector found near the well. On the 25th November two small spots of blood under the mahua tree were pointed out to the Sub-Inspector. They were about the size of a 4 anna bit each and the earth was scraped up and sent to the Chemical Examiner and the report is that they were caused by human blood. But it has to be remembered that on the 22nd November when the Sub-Inspector first came to the village Bansi did not point either the place or the marks to him and in the circumstances the suggestion that the blood was subsequently put there for the purpose of creating evidence should, I think, be accepted. Therefore we have now the position that while the account given by the defence has much to support it, the evidence for the prosecution is so deficient that it cannot be safely accepted for the purpose of convicting the appellants. If the prosecution case is substantially true, then they have only themselves to thank for its failure.

In this connection I think it necessary to point out that it was the duty of the Committing Magistrate to make some investigation into the truth of their story before he committed the appellants to the Sessions Court. It is not sufficient for Committing Magistrates to say that a prima facie case has been made out and thus to relieve themselves of further responsibility. If the Police did not send up all the material witnesses, it was the Committing Magistrate's duty to examine them himself in order to determine which side was speaking the truth. Here two clear cut cases were put forward by the respective sides, and from the Police diaries we find that there were apparently independent witnesses to support the account given by the appellants and the learned Magistrate might with very little trouble have reached the conclusion that it was advisable to try the counter-case first and to keep the present case pending. If that procedure had been adopted, the appellants would either have been discharged or committed for trial with all the material evidence at the service of the Sessions Court.

Therefore, in these circumstances being unable to say that the case put by the prosecution is a true account of the manner in which Ram Bodhan came by his injuries I think there must be an acquittal.

The learned Judge has set out the various submissions made to him at great length, but he has not met them by an adequate discussion of the evidence nor referred to the discrepancies between the depositions and the statements before the Police, nor has he considered the question whether having suppressed a material part of the prosecution story the eye-witnesses on whom he relies can be trusted in respect of the assault upon Ram Bodhan. He thinks, and evidently the assessors also think so, that the assault took place in both places. But of this there is no evidence at all and we cannot proceed upon mere conjecture.

The result, therefore, is that the convictions and the sentences will be set aside and the appellants will be acquitted and set at liberty.

Jwala Prasad, J.—I agree.

THE PUBLIC PROSECUTOR—PETITIONER.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 497—Bail—Jurisdiction of Court to order re-arrest of accused—Principles governing grant of bail.

Under sub-s. (5) of s. 497 of the Cr. P. C. a Court has ample jurisdiction in the exercise of its discretion to order the re-arrest of any person out on bail, if it feels that the circumstances warrant or demand such a course. [p. 665, col. 2.]

On an application for bail, the Court is not called upon to conduct a preliminary trial of the case and consider the probability of the accused's guilt or innocence. It would be entirely exceeding its function if it did that in any detail; but it may incidentally have to look at the weight of the evidence against the accused as a necessary part of its proper function, that is, to enquire whether the giving of the bail as opposed to the arrest of the accused might lead to a real danger of his absconding and not appearing to take his trial or whether there is any real reason to suppose that he is likely to tamper with the witnesses who would be called against him. [p. 665, col. 2; p. 666, col. 1.]

Petition praying that for the reasons stated therein in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to revoke the bail granted to the respondents herein by the order of this Court, dated the 15th December 1924, and made in Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 722 of 1924 and remand them to custody pending their trial in Sessions Case No. 41 of 1924 on the file of the Court of Session of the Vizagapatam Division.

JUDGMENT.

Coutts-Trotter, C. J.—In this case five persons were charged with the attempted murder of the Sub-Collector. The accused applied for bail and ultimately bail was granted on the information then before him by my learned brother in this Court. It was first argued that under the Code there was no power inherent in this Court to revise any such grant of bail. I have never been able to see the difficulty. Section 497 (1) of the Cr. P. C. runs as follows:—

“When any person accused of any non-bailable offence is arrested or detained without warrant by an officer-in-charge of a Police Station, or appears or is brought before a Court, he may be released on bail.”

That is what happened here. By sub-s. (5) of that section the Courts therein described “may cause any person who has been released under this section to be arrested and may commit him to custody.” In the face of that, the argument that there is no power in this Court, whatever change of circumstances may be proved before it, to revise the order granting bail seems to be absolutely untenable. I hold that we have ample jurisdiction to exercise our discretion and order the re-arrest of any person out on bail, if we feel the circumstances warrant or demand such a course.

In this case we are concerned with three men; one is the 5th accused about whom most of the argument has been addressed to us. He is a retired Inspector of Police and he is alleged to have taken part in this very serious offence of attempted murder. The 3rd accused is his son-in-law, also a man in an important position which he has forfeited; he was in the position of village Munsif. The 2nd accused is the son of the 5th and, in the absence of anything brought to our notice, we think that on the security which has been ordered, he may be allowed to be at liberty till the trial.

The principles which govern the granting of bail, I think, are not really doubtful. The Court is not called upon to conduct a preliminary trial of the case and consider the probability of the accused's guilt or innocence. It would be entirely exceeding its function, if it did that in any detail; but it may incidentally have to look at the weight of the evidence against the accused as a necessary part of what I conceive to be its proper function, that is, to enquire whether the giving of the bail as opposed to the arrest of the accused might lead to a real danger of his absconding and not appearing to take his trial or whether there is any real reason to suppose that he is likely to tamper with the witnesses who would be called against him. In this case much has been said on the latter ground and it is suggested that a retired Police Inspector and a deposed village Munsif are people who would be in a strong position to influence witnesses and make them resile from their testimony. I do not wish to put it on that ground; I think it is safer to put it on this ground that here are two men of importance in their own walk of life charged with a very serious offence and that it is more than possible that they may take advantage of a release on bail to abscond and fail to take their trial. It is not to be overlooked that the hardship to which they are subject which, of course, is a matter which should weigh very greatly with any Court considering a question of this kind is not a very great one because their trial is fixed to take place not later than the 5th of January 1925. Had it been a question of waiting in jail for months pending the trial, speaking for myself, I might have come to a different conclusion but this is a short time, and I understand that the prisoners are given every opportunity in the prisons of this country, as they are in prisons in England, of seeing legal advisers, giving them full instructions and consulting them. In any case I should like to say that I trust the Jail Authorities in this case will give these prisoners the fullest opportunity and the fullest latitude to take any legal advice they may require. On the grounds I have given, I think this is a case where good cause has been shown for not allowing these men to be on bail, for a very short time must elapse between now and their trial.

The order will be that they be arrested. The bail bonds with regard to the 3rd and the 5th accused, if executed, will be cancelled.

With regard to the 2nd accused the order will stand and I think one may not inappropriately remark that the 2nd accused will have ample facilities for being in constant communication with the 5th accused.

Srinivasa Iyengar, J.—I agree.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 345—Composition of offence, what is—Agreement to refer to arbitration, whether amounts to composition—Compromise of civil and criminal cases, difference between.

The compounding of an offence supposes an agreement by which the parties have settled their differences and in the more usual acceptation of the term implies that the prosecutor has received some consideration or gratification for dropping the prosecution. At any rate the arrangement must be one by which the parties have settled their differences and not a mere arrangement to settle the disputes in future as the result of some action either by themselves or by the arbitrators and some decision arrived at by themselves or by third parties. [p. 667, col. 2.]

The mere signing of an agreement to refer the subject-matter of certain criminal proceedings to arbitration does not amount to a composition of the offence under s. 345, Cr. P. C., and does not oust the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to try the case. [p. 667, col. 1.]

A muchilika is only one step towards the composition of the offence between the parties. It is only if the muchilika is carried out and according to its terms an award is arrived at, that there would be a complete composition in the case. Till that is done, the mere agreement or muchilika is only a preliminary step towards composition and not the composition itself. [p. 667, col. 1.]

Criminal cases do not stand on the same footing as civil cases in the matter of settlement. A criminal case is not a matter between parties as a civil case is. A Magistrate is not bound to recognize a reference to arbitration and wait for the arbitrators to make the award though it will be reasonable to do so. If he does not choose to wait he will not be doing anything illegal. But if he chooses to wait and then there is an award, that award may amount to a compounding of the offence in question and if it is an offence compoundable under s. 345, effect will be given to such compounding. But till the actual compounding takes place the Magistrate is not bound at all to stay his hands but may go on with the trial of the case. [p. 667, col. 2.]

Petition, under ss. 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. C., 1898, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate, Salem, in Calendar Case No. 30 of 1924, dated the 30th June 1924.

Mr. N. C. Vijiaraghavachariar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Salem Ramasami Iyer, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—In this case a complaint was filed by one Ramalingier who is the petitioner before me against a number of accused for defamation and the case was tried by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Salem. After the charge had been framed in the case against the accused, the Magistrate dismissed the complaint on the ground that the offence had been compounded. It is contended before me that the Magistrate was in error in thinking that there was any completed composition of the offence in the case. What happened was that some mediators advising the parties induced them to enter into a muchilika. The terms of the agreement are set out by the Magistrate in his order. It says "we agree that you, the panchayatdars should inquire into all our disputes, namely, (1) the one in O. S. No. 53 of 1923 on the file of the Second Additional District Munsif, Salem, (2) the one in O. S. No. 211 of 1922 on the file of the Principal District Munsif, Salem and (3) the one in C. C. No. 30 of 1924 on the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Salem" that is this case. The arbitrators are asked to make inquiries in regard to these cases and pass a decision within 15 days. No doubt this muchilika is signed by both the parties. As a matter of fact no arbitration took place in accordance with it and no award has been passed by the arbitrators. But it was argued before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate that the very signing of the muchilika amounted to a composition of the offence under s. 500, Indian Penal Code, which was being tried by him and that his jurisdiction was ousted and that he was bound to act under s. 345, Cr. P. C., and pass an order of dismissal. It seems to me that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate has taken wrong view of the position altogether in accepting that argument. The muchilika was only one step towards the composition of the offence between the parties. It is only if the muchilika is carried out and according to its terms an award is arrived at that there will be complete composition in the case. Till that is done, the mere agreement or muchilika is only, as has been argued before the lower Court, a preliminary step towards composition and not the composition itself. There is nothing whatsoever in the muchilika to show that the parties intended that the mere signing of it was to have the effect of compounding the offence. They expected the arbitrators to act and to make an award in 15 days and on that award being made no doubt the criminal case will be treated as compounded; but till that is done, I cannot see how the case can be treated as compounded at all. As put by Mr. Justice Trevelyan in Murray v. Queen-Empress (1), "the compounding of an offence supposes an arrangement by which the parties have settled their differences and in the more usual acceptance of the term implies that the prosecutor has received some consideration or gratification for dropping the prosecution." At any rate the arrangement must be one by which the parties have settled their differences and not a mere arrangement to settle the disputes in future as the result of some action either by themselves or by the arbitrators and some decision arrived at by themselves or by third parties. In this case till action is taken by the arbitrators and some decision is arrived at by them it is not possible to hold that the parties settled their differences. There is no question here of two tribunals carrying on the trial of the same case at the same time. The Magistrate had granted an adjournment for 15 days and he was not going on with the case. If within that time the award had been passed, no doubt there would have been a proper composition, of the case but no such award having been passed the arbitration failed and there was nothing more to be done than for the Magistrate to go on with the case. It must be remembered that criminal cases do not stand on the same footing as civil cases in the matter of settlement. A criminal case is not a matter between parties as a civil case is. It seems to me that a Magistrate is not bound to recognise a reference to arbitration and wait for the arbitrators to make the award though it will be reasonable to do so. If he does not choose to wait he will not be doing anything illegal. But if he chooses to wait and then there is an award, that award may amount to a compounding of the offence in question and if it is an offence compoundable under s. 345 effect will be given to such compounding. But till the actual compounding takes place the Magistrate is not bound at all to stay his hands but may go on with the trial of the case himself. In the present case, as I have said already, there is nothing in the muchilika to show that the mere giving of the muchilika was to be treated as compounding the offence. In these circumstances I must set aside the order of the Magistrate and direct him to take the case on to his file and go on with the trial of the case from where he left it off and complete it without further delay.

Mr. Abdul Aziz, for the Petitioner.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition under s. 439 of the Cr. P. C. in which I am asked by the petitioner to set aside an order of the learned Sessions Judge of the Multan Division acquitting the respondents of charges under ss. 302, 307, 148, Indian Penal Code.

I have been taken through this judgment by Mr. Abdul Aziz for the petitioner and Dr. Nand Lal for the respondents, and have come to the conclusion that this petition must be dismissed.

The judgment shows that the learned Sessions Judge has considered carefully all the questions arising in the case. After giving due weight to all the evidence on the record he has come to the conclusion that the story for the prosecution was not true but that the correct version was that given by the respondents and he has further come to the conclusion that in using a gun Nur Mohammed Hiraj was acting in self defence. There can be no doubt, in my opinion, that on the findings arrived at, the conclusions are correct. Further it has been repeatedly laid down that this Court will not interfere with orders of acquittal in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction unless there are very special circumstances calling for interference. In this connection reference may be made to Sergeant Saunderson v. Mr. Wilson (1) and Emperor v. Achhar Singh (2).

After giving due weight to Mr. Abdul Aziz's arguments I am unable to see any special circumstances which would warrant my departing from the established practice of this Court in such matters. I, therefore, dismiss this petition.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 350—“De novo trial,” meaning and object of.

A de novo trial means a new trial from the very beginning of the case. The object of granting a de novo trial is to enable the Magistrate who hears the case to see the way in which the witnesses give evidence before him, to mark their demeanour, and thereby to be in a position to judge of their credibility. That object is lost if the witnesses are not examined again but are only allowed to be cross-examined by the accused. Such a course is not in accordance with the provisions of s. 350, Cr. P. C.

Hnin Yin v. Than Pe, 44 Ind. Cas. 337; 9 L. B. R. 92; 19 Cr. L. J. 321; 11 Bur. L. T. 58 and Sobh Nath Singh v. Emperor, 12 O. W. N. 138; 6 Cr. L. J. 431, relied upon.

Even if no objection is taken to the course of merely allowing the witnesses to be cross-examined further, still the trial is vitiated.

Petition, under ss. 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. C., 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Dharmavaram, in Criminal Appeal No. 20 of 1924, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Stationary Sub-Magistrate, Kadiri, in C. C. No. 141 of 1924.

Messrs. Imamuddin and Rafuddin, for the Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—In this case an unfortunate error has crept in the procedure which has vitiated the trial. It resulted from the too frequent transfers of the Magistrates concerned in this case. The First Magistrate that tried the case framed the charge when he was transferred. When another Magistrate took up the case, an application was made to that Magistrate to order a trial de novo under s. 350, proviso (a) and that Magistrate ordered a de novo trial accordingly. But, before the trial began, that Magistrate was also transferred, and a Third Magistrate, a new man, was appointed as the Sub-Magistrate of the place when he took up the case for trial, his attention was drawn to the order passed by his predecessor granting a de novo trial; but instead of granting a de novo trial, what he did was merely to re-call the prosecution witnesses and give leave to the accused's Vakil to cross-examine those witnesses. This is not the meaning of 'de novo' trial. De novo trial means a new trial from the very beginning of the case. The object of granting a de novo trial is to enable the Magistrate who hears the case to see the way in which the witnesses give evidence before him, to mark their demeanour, and thereby to be in a position to judge of their credibility. That object is lost if the witnesses are not examined again but are only allowed to be cross-examined by the accused. Such a course is not in accordance with the provisions of s. 350, and in two cases to which my attention has been drawn, their Lordships have set aside the trial and ordered a new trial under similar circumstances: see Hnin Yin v. Than Pe (1) and Sobh Nath Singh v. Emperor (2). In the latter case their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court went to the length of holding that even if no objection was taken to the course adopted of merely allowing the witnesses to be cross-examined further, still the trial is vitiated. Here apparently the accused wanted to have the witnesses examined from the very first but that was not allowed by the Magistrate. This error in the procedure has vitiated the trial. I am, therefore, constrained to set aside the convictions of the accused in this case and direct them to be re-tried for the offences charged against them.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488—Maintenance of wives and children—Rs. 100, whether can be awarded to each wife and child—"In the whole," meaning of—Alimony, grant of, by English Court, whether ousts jurisdiction of Magistrate under s. 488.

Under s. 488, Cr. P. C., every wife and every legitimate child and every illegitimate child can be awarded upto Rs. 100 provided the husband or the father has the means to pay the amount. The words "Rs. 100 in the whole" in the section do not mean that a Magistrate cannot award more than Rs. 100 in all for the support of the wife and the children whatever their number. What the words mean is that only a sum of money not exceeding Rs. 100 should be ordered to be paid and no other payment either in the shape of fees or medical expenses, etc., should be ordered to be paid. [p. 671, cols. 1 & 2.]

All that has to be proved in order to give jurisdiction to a Magistrate under s. 488, Cr. P. C., is that the child is unable to maintain itself and that the father neglected or refused to maintain it, and in the case of the wife that the husband refused or neglected to maintain her. Even a grown up child, if unable to maintain itself, is entitled to get maintenance from the father if he has the means. [p. 671, col. 2.]

In re Parathy Valappil Moiddeen, 21 Ind. Cas. 469; 25 M. L. J. 355; 14 M. L. T. 223; (1913) M. W. N. 997; 14 Cr. L. J. 597 and In the matter of the petition of W. B. Todd, 5 N. W. P. H. O. R. 237, followed.

That there has been no neglect to maintain the wife and children is a question of fact. But a mere offer to maintain is not sufficient. [ibid.]

The existence of an order for alimony by the English Divorce Court is not sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of a Magistrate under s. 488, Cr. P. C., since a mere order for maintenance is not equivalent to maintaining the wife. [p. 672, col. 1.]

Petition, under ss. 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. C., 1898, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the District Magistrate, Civil and Military Station, Bangalore, in Mis. C. C. No. 18 of 1924.

Mr. Mockett, for the Petitioner,

The Public Prosecutor and Mr. Thornton, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—This is an application to revise the order of the District Magistrate, Civil and Military Station, Bangalore directing the petitioner to pay Rs. 300 a month under s. 488 of the Cr. P. C. The petitioner is a well-to-do planter who neglected to maintain his wife and two children. The wife made an application to the District Magistrate and he has passed the order which is sought to be revised.

The first contention on behalf of the petitioner is that under s. 488 the Magistrate has jurisdiction to award only Rs. 100 in all for the support of the wife and the children. Mr. Mockett who appears for the petitioner relies upon the words "Rs. 100 in the whole" and argues that the Magistrate cannot award more than Rs. 100 in all for the support of the wife and the children and that the award by the Magistrate of Rs. 300, Rs. 100 for the wife and Rs. 100 for each of the children is ultra vires. Clause (1) of s. 488 reads as follows:—

"If any person having sufficient means neglects or refuses to maintain his wife or his legitimate or illegitimate child unable to maintain itself, the District Magistrate, etc., may, on proof of such neglect or refusal, order such person to make a monthly allowance for the maintenance of his wife or such child, at such monthly rate, not exceeding one hundred rupees in the whole, as such Magistrate thinks fit."

To contend that when a woman makes an application for herself and for her children she could only be given Rs. 100 for the maintenance of herself and of her children whatever be their number, is opposed to the clear wording of the section. If the petitioner's construction of the section is correct, it would amount to this; if a person has an illegitimate child and an application is made under this section and Rs. 100 is awarded to that child and if that person afterwards refuses to maintain his wife and his legitimate children, the wife and the legitimate children would have no remedy against him, for the sum of Rs. 100 has already been awarded for the support of the illegitimate child, and no further order can be made on behalf of the wife and legitimate children as no Magistrate can award more than Rs. 100 for all the persons whom he is bound to maintain.

This section was enacted to suit Indian conditions. A Muhammadan can legally marry four wives, at the same time supposing he neglects or refuses to maintain one wife and her children and supposing she obtains an order under this section and gets Rs. 100 and if he afterwards refuses or neglects to maintain any of the other wives and children they would be helpless, and if he refuses to maintain all the four wives at the same time, is it to be said that the section requires that all the four wives should apply by a joint petition for payment of maintenance to them and their children. Supposing a European has legitimate children by a deceased wife, and children by a living wife and also illegitimate children, supposing the illegitimate children obtain an order for their maintenance and the Magistrate directs the payment of Rs. 100 for their maintenance and if the man after sometime refuses to maintain his legitimate children by the deceased wife, are they to be without any remedy? And still further, if he refuses to maintain his wife and legitimate children are they to be without any remedy? I think the contention that a person can only be ordered to pay Rs. 100 for the support of his illegitimate children, for the support of the living wife and her children is, on the face of it, an untenable one.

Mr. Mockett relied upon the summary jurisdiction of Magistrate's Act, 58 & 59 Vict. Chap. 39, s. 5, cl. (c) and contended that the sum awardable under that section was for the maintenance of the wife and the children with her, and a Magistrate has no power to award more than £2 a week. Section 5, cl. (c), gives the Court of summary jurisdiction power to make an order among other things for the legal custody of the children under 16 years of age, and an order for the maintenance under cl. (c) which is as follows:—"A provision that the husband shall pay to the applicant personally, or for her use, to any officer of the Court or third person on her behalf, such weekly sum not exceeding £2 as the Court shall, having regard to the means both of the husband and the wife, consider reasonable." There is no provision in this section for the payment of any amount for the maintenance of any child unable to maintain itself. But the Justices in considering what amount should be awarded to the wife may take into consideration what would be required for the maintenance of the child or children in the custody of the wife. The maximum is fixed at £2 a week as the object of the Act is to give relief to the wife. There are other enactments like the Bastardy Act and the Poor Law Act under which a father could be made to pay maintenance for his illegitimate and legitimate children.

The case of Hill v. Hall (1) does not help the petitioner. Sir Francis Jeune, President of the Probate Division observes as follows at page 142*: "Therefore, the whole sum ordered is to be paid to the applicant personally. There is in the Act no express power to order that sums shall be paid for children, even the children of his (the husband's) own marriage. But, in considering what amount should be ordered to be paid by the husband, if the Justices were right in taking into account the expenses of maintaining any child or children of the marriage, they would be equally justified in taking into account the expenses in respect of children whom the husband, under the Poor Law at any rate, was legally liable to maintain, and they were right in ordering such amount to be paid—as only it could be paid—to the wife." 58 & 59, Vict. Chap. 39 was specially enacted for giving speedy relief to married women who on account of desertion or neglect on the part of their husbands to maintain them, have to seek speedy remedy for provision for maintaining themselves. That Act is not similar to s. 488 which specially provides for the maintenance of "wife and child legitimate or illegitimate, which is unable to maintain itself."

In considering what amount should be paid for the wife it need not be taken into consideration whether she has children to be maintained or not. The position of the husband and his means and the position of the wife alone should be considered. In the case of each child the needs of the child should be considered. The words "in the whole" mean that only a sum of money not exceeding Rs. 100 should be ordered to be paid and no other payment either in the shape of fees or medical expenses, etc., should be ordered to be paid; nor can the Magistrate order the husband to provide a house for the wife. It is to prevent the Magistrate making an order that the husband should pay so much for the schooling of the children, or so much for clothing or so much for medical expenses and so on, that the words "in the whole" have been put into the section. The Magistrate can only order one sum not exceeding Rs. 100 to be paid for the wife and for each of the children unable to maintain itself.

The section speaks of "wife or his legitimate or illegitimate child" and does not speak of "wife and child." The words have to be given their plain meaning. To construe the words as meaning wife and children is opposed to all rules of construction. If a man has the luxury of more wives than one, his liability to maintain them is not lessened thereby. Every wife and every legitimate child and every illegitimate child could be awarded upto Rs. 100 provided the husband or the father has the means to pay the amount.

The contention that s. 488 is modelled on the lines of 58 & 59 Vict. Chap. 39 s. 5 cannot hold water. Section 488 of the Code of 1898 is not a new provision enacted in 1893. The same provision was found in the Code of 1882 and the Codes of 1875 and 1872 and in Act XXV of 1861, s. 316 contained a provision corresponding to that of s. 488, cl. (1). All that has to be proved in order to give jurisdiction to a Magistrate under s. 488 is that the child is unable to maintain itself and that the father neglected or refused to maintain it, and in the case of the wife that the husband refused or neglected to maintain her. Even a grown up child if unable to maintain itself, is entitled to get maintenance from the father if he has the means: vide In re Parathy Valappil Moideen (2) and In the matter of the petition of W. B. Todd (3).

The next contention urged by Mr. Mockett is that there has been no neglect to pay for the maintenance of the wife and children. This is a question of fact and the learned Magistrate has found that the petitioner herein has neglected to maintain his wife and children. A mere offer to maintain them is not sufficient, and Mr. Mockett has admitted that nothing has been paid for the maintenance of the wife and children for at least some years. There is nothing in this contention.

The third contention raised by Mr. Mockett is that there is an order of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court in England whereby the petitioner is directed to pay his wife so much alimony per month, and it is seriously urged before me that this order is a bar to an application under s. 488 of the Cr. P. C. It is admitted that the wife finds it impossible to execute the order for alimony against the petitioner who is a planter in the Mysore State. Whether the order is executable or not is immaterial for the present purpose. The section gives jurisdiction to the Magistrate to award maintenance if he is satisfied that a person has neglected or refused to maintain his wife or child. The existence of the order is not sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the Magistrate for a mere order for maintenance is not equivalent to maintaining the wife; and the order whatever may be its force or nature, cannot take away the Magistrate's jurisdiction so long as the husband neglects or refuses to maintain the wife.

Reliance was placed upon Craxton v. Craxton (4), where Bargrave Deane, J., observed: "There can be no desertion in law when a suit is pending, once the Divorce Court is seized with the matrimonial suit. Justices have no right to interfere in the matter. . . Here the President had actually made an order, how then can the justice claim to overrule it." In that case an order for alimony had been made by the President of the Probate Division and the Justices could not, therefore, pass an order under the Summary Jurisdiction Act. That case has no application to the present, for the proceedings in the Probate Division do not control the jurisdiction of a Magistrate in India.

As I have already observed, if it is proved to the satisfaction of the Magistrate under s. 488 that the husband has neglected to maintain his wife, the Magistrate has jurisdiction to order the husband to pay for the maintenance of his wife. In this case the order for alimony is unexecutable. Even if held to be executable, I am of opinion that so long as the husband does not maintain the wife either by payment of alimony or otherwise, the Magistrate's jurisdiction to order him to pay maintenance is not taken away.

The case of In re Subbaramakkammah (5) does not help the petitioner. In that case a decree for monthly allowance or maintenance had been obtained in the High Court and that decree was in force and the wife could not get a further and separate order for maintenance from the Magistrate. The case would be different if the execution of the decree for maintenance had become barred or had become unexecutable. This was distinctly held so far back as 1872. In a case of John Meiselback (6), a Bench consisting of Sir Richard Couch, C. J., and Ainslie, J., held that a decision of the Civil Court refusing to enforce a contract or agreement against a man for the maintenance of a woman cannot conclude either the woman from applying or a Magistrate from making an order under s. 316 of the Cr. P. C., for the maintenance of their illegitimate daughter. The learned Chief Justice observed: "The proceeding in the Civil Court was of a different nature: it was founded on an alleged contract, and the decision of the Civil Court, even if it had not proceeded, as it appears to have done, on the law of limitation, would not have concluded the woman from applying under s. 316 of the Cr. P. C., for the maintenance of the illegitimate daughter. The only question in this case is whether the matter was so put before the Magistrate that he had jurisdiction to make the order under s. 316 for the maintenance of the illegitimate daughter. She stated in her petition that both she and the daughter were starving and required maintenance, and she asked for a sum to be paid for maintenance. The Magistrate had power to make an order for the maintenance of the daughter." Under s. 316 of Act XXV of 1861 (now s. 488) the only questions were whether the child was a child of the man and whether he had neglected to maintain the child, and on these facts being found, the Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass an order even though there was a previous contract between the man and the woman for payment of maintenance.

Considering the position of the parties, the order for payment of Rs. 100 to each of the persons wife and two children is eminently a just order, I dismiss the petition with costs of the counter-petitioner.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2673
OF 1922.

April 24, 1925.

Present :—Mr. Justice Suhrawardy and
Mr. Justice Duval.MOHINI MOHAN SAHA CHOWDHURY AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS
versusMEAJAN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.Landlord and tenant—Co-sharers—Suit by one co-sharer to recover rent of entire holding, maintainability of—Person interested in particular area of holding, whether co-sharer.

A holding cannot be split up or sub-divided without the consent of the tenant and a tenant has a right to insist that his holding should be kept intact in the state in which it was first created. There is, however, nothing to prevent a co-sharer landlord from bringing a suit for the entire rent of the holding with a prayer that out of the entire rent decreed he may be allowed to recover his share of the rent, provided he makes the other co-sharers parties to the suit. [p. 673, col. 2; p. 674, col. 1.]

So far as a tenant is concerned he is liable to pay rent for the entire holding to the persons who have got the superior interest, although as between themselves the co-sharers are entitled to make a division of area and of the rent. [p. 674, col. 2.]

A person who has got an undivided share in the holding as well as a person who has become interested in a particular area of the holding are both co-sharers in the holding and are entitled to maintain a suit to recover the entire rent of the holding making the other co-sharers parties to the suit. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Backerganj, dated the 8th of July 1922, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Court at Patuakhali, dated the 15th of June 1921.

Babus Shib Chandra Palit and Bhagirath Chandra Das, for the Appellants.

Babu Trailokya Nath Ghose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises is based upon the following facts. There were five plots of land which were settled at a consolidated jama with the tenant-defendants by the pro forma defendants who claimed an exclusive title to the lands. The plaintiffs thereupon brought a suit against the pro forma defendants and the tenant-defendants claiming exclusive title to the land and for khas possession. The suit was decreed in the plaintiffs' favour in the first Court and their title to the lands was declared, but their claim for khas possession was refused. The pro forma defendants preferred an appeal against that decision; and in the Appellate Court the plaintiffs and the pro forma defendants came to a compromise under which the plaintiffs got three of the plots and the two remaining plots remained the property of the pro forma defendants. The tenant-defendants were parties in the suit as well as in the appeal, but they were not parties to the compromise. Under the compromise the plaintiffs were to get Rs. 10 per year as rent, the entire rent being Rs. 15 for the five plots.

Thereafter the plaintiffs brought a suit against the tenants in which they claimed rent at Rs. 10 per year on account of the three plots in accordance with the compromise above referred to. That suit was dismissed as not maintainable on the objection of the tenants that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a portion of the rent and the tenancy could not be sub-divided without their consent.

The plaintiffs have brought the present suit for the entire rent of the jama making all the co-sharers parties with the prayer that out of the entire rent decreed they may be allowed to recover their share of the rent at the rate of Rs. 10 per year. The Courts below have held that the present suit is also not maintainable. So the plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

It appears that the Courts below have not appreciated the scope and the frame of the present suit and were led away by considerations which did not really arise in the present suit. The learned Subordinate Judge thinks that the effect of a decree in this suit would be splitting up of the defendants' tenancy and this could not be done on the authority of the case of Ruheemuddy Akun v. Poorno Chunder Roy Chowdhry (1) on which he relies. That case, apparently, has no bearing on the present question. There the lands were let out by four agreements being thus constituted into four different holdings. The plaintiffs brought five suits against the tenants, thus converting four holdings into five, and it was held that this they could not do. The principle upon which that decision was based is now well-settled, that a holding cannot be split up or sub-divided without the consent of the tenant and a tenant has a right to insist that his holding should be kept intact in the state in which it was first created.

The real question in this case is whether the plaintiffs are entitled in the circumstances above set forth to maintain this action. That a co-sharer has a right to bring a suit for the entire rent by making his co-sharers parties to the suit is a question which cannot now be discussed being settled by several decisions of this Court which were accepted and approved by the Judicial Committee in the case of Pramada Nath Roy v. Ramani Kanta Roy (2). This is a general right which is conferred upon a co-owner irrespective of the special provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This is exactly what the plaintiffs have done in the present case. They have brought the suit as co-sharers with the pro forma defendants for the entire rent and prayed that their share of rent might be decreed to them.

This raises a further question whether the plaintiffs can be called co-sharers in the common sense of the words. The learned Vakil for the respondents has argued that a co-sharer is a person who has got an undivided share in the entire holding and a person who has got a divided share or the entire interest in a definite portion or area of a holding is not a person who is a co-sharer. No authority has been cited before us in support of that proposition. But there is an authority in support of the contrary view in Ishwar Chunder Dutt v. Ram Krishna Dass (3). In that case the Full Bench held that a sale of a share in a tenure does not of itself effect a severance of the tenure or an apportionment of rent, but if the purchaser of a share desires to have such an apportionment he is entitled to enforce it and in laying down this proposition the learned Judges held that there was no difference between a case when a tenure was severed by different portions of its area being sold to different persons from that where it is sold to different persons in undivided shares. This decision is an authority for the view that a person who has got an undivided share in the holding as well as a person who has become interested in a particular area of the holding is entitled to maintain a suit for apportionment of rent.

(2) 35 C. 331; 12 C. W. N. 249; 35 I. A. 73; 7 C. L. J. 139; 10 Bom. L. R. 66; 18 M. L. J. 43; 3 M. L. T. 151 (P. C.).

This view is in consonance with common sense. So far as the tenants are concerned they are liable to pay rent for the entire holding to persons who have got the superior interest. In the present case, for instance, it is not denied that the tenants are liable to pay rent to the plaintiffs. As between co-sharers themselves there is no doubt a division of area and the rent. But so far as the tenants are concerned the holding is an undivided one and all the persons who are interested in the different areas comprising the holding are joint landlords in respect of the tenancy. We have been referred to several cases where it has been held that a co-sharer is not entitled to maintain a suit for his share of the rent without suing for apportionment. These cases have no bearing on the facts of the present case.

We are accordingly of opinion that the view taken by the Court below is indefensible and that the appellants are entitled to maintain the present suit. In the above view this appeal is allowed. The decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the case remitted to the Court of first instance for trial on the merits. The appellants are entitled to the costs of this appeal. The costs of the Courts below will be at the discretion of the Trial Court.

Mr. Anant Prasad Nigam, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for Respondents Nos. 1, 5 and 7 to 9.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second civil appeal. The following is the pedigree—

The suit was brought by Jai Karan Singh, for a declaration that a mortgage-deed and a deed of gift executed by Musammat Umrai Kunwar will not be binding after her death on the reversioners of her husband. The defence was that Musammat Umrai Kunwar was full owner of the property, and did not hold as a Hindu widow. Her rights are based upon a deed Ex. A-1, dated 16th May 1908. This is a deed of partition stamped and registered. The parties to it are Jai Karan Singh, along with Musammat Jannu Kunwar, the widow of Sripat Singh, as guardian of her two sons Bhowani Singh and Ram Bharose Singh, making up the first party. The two sons of Jagmohan Singh, Ahbaran Singh defendant No. 8 and Mahadeo Singh defendant No. 9 making up the second party, and Musammat Umrai Kunwar, who is described as the wife of Jaidat Singh deceased, making up the third party. These are all described as co-sharers, and they proceed to divide up the property among themselves. Paragraph 11 confers on each of them the fullest right of ownership. There is nothing in any part of the document on which it is possible to found a distinction between the right acquired by Musammat Umrai Kunwar and the right acquired by Jai Karan Singh himself or any of the male co-sharers. This being so, it is not possible to cut down the rights of Musammat Umrai Kunwar. The old idea, expressed, for example, in Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (1), has been distinctly disapproved of when that case was appealed to the Privy Council in Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (2). The true doctrine is that if a deed purports to convey full proprietary rights to a Hindu widow it will be construed to convey full proprietary rights to her, unless there is anything in the context or surrounding circumstances to qualify such a meaning. It is not so qualified by the mere fact that she is a widow. This being so, the decision of the Court of Trial, that plaintiff's suit must be dismissed, which was confirmed by the First Court of Appeal, is correct, and plaintiff's second appeal which is now before me must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, rr. 4, 5—Absence of petitioner on date of hearing—Dismissal of petition for default—Opposite party not served, effect of—Dismissal, whether can be set aside.

Where a petitioner has failed to appear on the date fixed for the hearing of his petition, r. 5 of O. IX of the C. P. C. has no application. The fact that the summons had not been served on the opposite party is no ground for setting aside an order of dismissal for default passed owing to the absence of the petitioner on the date of hearing. [p. 676, col. 1.]

Rule against an order of the Court of the Sub-Judge at Assansol, in Re-hearing Case No. 60 of 1924 arising out of Mis. J. Case No. 30 of 1924.

Mr. S. C. Bose (with him Babu Narendra K. Bose) for Babu Karunamoy Ghose, for the Petitioner.

Babu Joytish Chandra Sarkar, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this Rule arises are as follows:

The petitioner obtained a money-decree against the opposite party and in execution of this decree certain properties belonging to the judgment-debtor opposite party were put up to sale and purchased by the petitioner decree-holder on the 26th March 1924. On the 25th April 1924, the opposite party put in an application under O. XXI, r. 90, C. P. C., for setting aside the sale and various dates were fixed for the hearing of the case the last date fixed was the 21st June 1924. On that date the applicant judgment-debtor the opposite party was not present and the application was dismissed for default. On the 18th July 1924 the judgment-debtor opposite party put in an application under O. IX, r. 4, C. P. C., for setting aside the order of dismissal, the ground apparently being that he was unable to be present on account of the illness of his mother and of himself. The learned Subordinate Judge entirely disbelieved the story of his mother's illness as explaining the reason why he could not be present and held that he had failed to establish sufficient excuse for his absence and his application under O. IX, r. 4, C. P. C., was rejected. The Court then proceeded to deal with the matter on a ground which had not been raised by the judgment-debtor himself but apparently was raised by the Court, namely, that as the summons on the decree-holder auction-purchaser had been returned unserved the Court could not, under such circumstances, dismiss the application but that it should have dealt with the matter under O. IX, r. 5, C. P. C., and should have waited for one year from the date of the return made to the Court by the officer and if the petitioner did not within that time apply for fresh summons the Court could then dismiss the application. It is rather difficult to understand under which rule and Order the Subordinate Judge had proceeded. Order IX, r. 5, has no application to a case where the plaintiff has failed to appear; and the fact that the summons was returned unserved on the auction-purchaser opposite party, was no ground for setting aside the order of dismissal for default of the judgment-debtor. Under what section the learned Judge proceeded it is difficult to understand. He states that "by virtue of an inherent power of that Court to rectify its mistakes".

But as a matter of fact there was no mistake to rectify. It appears to me that the Court acted entirely without jurisdiction in setting aside the order, having found that the judgment-debtor did not come within the scope of O. IX, r. 4, the section which provides for restoration of a case dismissed for default. As far as I can see the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction. The order of the Subordinate Judge complained of is set aside and this Rule is made absolute with costs, the hearing fee being assessed at one gold mohur.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 30—Wagering contract

—Agent, whether can recover expenses or commission

—Forward contracts, whether wagering contracts.

Where a plaintiff, on behalf of the defendant, has entered into gambling transactions with third parties, the defendant is bound to make good the losses incurred in those transactions to the plaintiff and pay the commission. [p. 677, col. 2.]

The fact that the defendant is a Limited Company would not disentitle the plaintiff to recover, where he has entered into the contracts under arrangement with the manager of the Company, apparently acting in exercise of the powers vested in him. [p. 678, col. 1.]

The fact that forward contracts are made in the rice trade is not one, which of itself indicates anything at all. No doubt such contracts must, in the nature of things, be speculative to a large extent. But the fact that they are speculative does not render them wagering contracts, and there can be no wagering contract where there is not an intention common to both parties that the dealing should be by way of wager or gambling in differences. Appeal against a decree of the Original Side of the Court in C. R. No. 93 of 1923.

Mr. Clifton, for the Appellant.

Mr. Cowasjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit on a promissory-note for Rs. 1,75,000. The defence was that the transactions for which this promissory-note was given were wagering contracts in rice, and, a further defence was put forward, that the promissory-note had been fully satisfied by payment on the 4th December 1922. An amended plaint was filed to explain this alleged payment, in which it was set out that on that date the Corporation's rice manager sent the plaintiff two cheques amounting in all to Rs. 1,75,000, and demanded from him his cheque for the same amount. The plaintiff, having satisfied himself that the two cheques would be honoured and having cashed them, gave his own cheque for Rs. 1,75,000. This was cashed, but paid, not into the Corporation's account but into the account of the Corporation's Managing Agents, Messrs. Henry F. Elliott (India), Limited. There is little or no explanation of this somewhat extraordinary incident, and we are not concerned with it in this appeal.

The facts are not in dispute. The Corporation intended to undertake very large dealings in rice, and they were anxious that this fact should not be known because of the effect it might have on the market. It was, therefore, arranged by Mr. Elliott, the head of the Managing Agents' firm, who was also the Chairman of the Corporation, that the plaintiff should lend his name and enter into contracts on behalf of the Corporation, receiving a commission of Rs. 30 per thousand bags bought or sold. This arrangement was made in the presence of Mr. Evans, who was managing the Rice Department of the Corporation. Accordingly, in December 1920, the plaintiff began to enter into contracts in his own name, but really on behalf of the Corporation, who had undertaken all responsibility in connection with them.

The contracts for deliveries in January were met, and the plaintiff was paid his commission. The contracts to be settled in February were met, but there was a balance of Rs. 1,75,000 due to the plaintiff as his commission. For this, the promissory-note in suit was given. The contracts for the next few succeeding months were also met, and the plaintiff's commission was paid.

The procedure was that the plaintiff should obtain offers and submit the proposed contracts for the approval of Mr. Evans. If Mr. Evans approved, the plaintiff would enter into the contracts and send them to Mr. Evans, accompanied by confirmation slips. Mr. Evans would keep the contracts and return the counterfoils of the confirmation slips to the plaintiff. A long number of these confirmation slips have been filed in the case.

At the time the issues were fixed, the only point raised was whether these contracts were wagering contracts. There was no allegation as to Mr. Evans' authority to enter into such contracts; but it was apparently urged that the plaintiff and Mr. Evans were aware that the contracts were intended to be only gambling contracts in respect of differences, of which the Corporation was wholly ignorant.

The learned Judge held that Mr. Elliott was not only the Chairman of the defendant Corporation, but a partner in the firm of the Managing Agents. He held that, though large purchases and sales were contracted for, in no single instance was delivery taken or given, and that the milling notices were only issued in the case of 18,000 bags. He held that the plaintiff acted in these transactions as agent of the defendants and on their behalf paid the money which he now claims. He then referred to authorities which held that, where a plaintiff, on behalf of a defendant enters into gambling transactions with third parties, the defendant is nevertheless bound to make good the losses incurred in those transactions to the plaintiff and pay the commission claimed. One of those authorities was an authority of the late Chief Court in which it was held that a broker could, notwithstanding the fact that the contracts, were wagering contracts, and that he knew them to be of that nature, recover the brokerage due to him. These facts are all admitted.

It is admitted that, had the plaintiff been acting on behalf of a private person, he would be entitled to recover; but it is urged that he was acting on behalf of a Limited Company, and it is argued that this being so, it was his bounden duty to assure himself that the Corporation were aware of these transactions, and that, they being wagering contracts, he was bound to satisfy himself by enquiry that Mr. Evans was authorised by the Corporation to enter into such wagering contracts.

It is urged that even if the plaintiff originally contemplated genuine rice transactions, the nature, the quantity and the speculative character of the transactions were such as to leave no doubt in his mind that they were purely wagering contracts, that he should, therefore, have obtained the authority of the Corporation and that not having done so, and such speculative contracts being wholly outside the ordinary scope of the business of a rice trading Corporation, he is not entitled to recover.

The fact that forward contracts are made in the rice trade is not one, which of itself indicates anything at all. No doubt such contracts must, in the nature of things, be speculative to a large extent. But the fact that they are speculative does not render them wagering contracts, and there can be no wagering contract where there is not an intention common to both parties that the dealing should be by way of wager or gambling in differences. This was pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Bhagwandas Parasram v. Burjorji Ruttonji Bomanji (1).

There is no proof that the plaintiff and the persons with whom he contracted on behalf of the Corporation intended that there should be no deliveries, or that these were wagering contracts pure and simple. The learned Judge held that it was immaterial whether the contracts were in fact wagering contracts or not, as that would not affect the plaintiff's right to recover moneys that he had paid in connection with such contracts on behalf of the Corporation, or disentitle him to his commission.

It is now urged that it is essential, as the Corporation is a Limited Company, that the question whether these contracts were wagering contracts should be decided. We are entirely unable to accept this argument.

The arrangement with the plaintiff was made with a Director of the Corporation, apparently acting in exercise of the powers vested in him.

Forward purchases and sales are within the every day business of such a Corporation, and there was nothing to put the plaintiff on enquiry nor was there any reason why he should have made any enquiry even if he became aware that there was no intention on the part of the Corporation to give or take deliveries. He was an agent merely lending his name to contracts which were all approved by the Corporation's manager, who would presumably be authorised to enter into such contracts.

We agree, therefore, that it is unnecessary for the Court to have decided the question whether these contracts were wagering contracts or not, and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover.

The decree of the Court below will be confirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 29th August 1924.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only point urged by the Counsel for the appellants in this second appeal is that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is vitiated by admission of inadmissible evidence and should be set aside on that ground and that the case should be remanded for fresh decision.

Before the present civil litigation there had occurred a criminal case between these parties and the Magistrate had in that case inspected the spot and recorded a note as to what he saw there. This note was not proved but the learned District Judge cited it and obviously on the strength of what was stated therein disbelieved the defendants' evidence, as would appear from the following extract from his judgment:—

"The Magistrate who tried the criminal case inspected the spot on the 7th August 1922 and made a note to the effect that the haveli in dispute was a dilapidated one surrounded on all sides by walls; there was a new door way in the western wall and remains of a door on the eastern side. These facts would show that the path in dispute was not an old one. The evidence produced by the defendants for proving that is of no value whatsoever."

The learned District Judge might have come to a contrary conclusion if he had not admitted in evidence this inspection note.

Counsel for the respondents states that the inspection note was admissible if proved and argues by reference to Kalika Nand Singh v. Shiva Nandan Singh (1) that the question of proof of a document is a question of procedure which can be waived and was presumably waived by the plaintiffs in the present case because they did not object in time to its being admitted in evidence. But the document was never produced in evidence and so the plaintiffs had no occasion to object to its admissibility. The record of the Trial Court and the Magistrate's note on the former was referred from that record.

As the finding is based on the unproved and consequently inadmissible document the judgment is vitiated thereby and must be set aside as was done in Ramani Pershad Narain Singh v. Mahanth Adaiya Gossain (2) and Sumitra Kuer v. Ram Kair Chowbey (3). Section 167 of the Evidence Act which is referred by the Counsel for the respondents in the present case is noticed in Sumitra Kuer v. Ram Kair Chowbey (3) where it was held that where an Appellate Court has relied for its decision upon a document which is inadmissible in evidence a Court of Second Appeal would be justified in remanding the case for decision to the Appellate Court with a direction to exclude that document from its consideration.

I accordingly accept this appeal and remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for fresh decision in the light of what has been stated above. The Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal will be refunded. Other costs will abide the event.

Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), s. 13—Pre-emption—Duty of Court—Determination of market value—Finding of fact.

When the plaintiff in a suit under Ch. II of the Oudh Laws Act alleges that the price stated in the sale-deed is fictitious and the allegation is denied, the Court, under s. 13 of the Act, has not to determine what the price paid for the property actually is but whether the price stated in the deed is fictitious as alleged and, if so, what the fair market-value of the property is. [p. 680, col. 1.]

Wazir Begam v. Mohammad Ishaq Khan, 4 O. O. 158, followed.

Abilakh v. Rabban Singh, 10 O. C. 88, explained.

The question of the market-value is one of fact and cannot be discussed in second appeal. [ibid.]

Appeal from the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 18th July 1924, modifying that of the Munsif, North Lucknow, dated the 22nd March 1922.

Mr. Rajeshwar Prasad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava and Kashi Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in their appeal and the defendants in their cross-objections dispute only the price fixed for pre-emption. The right of the plaintiffs to pre-empt is admitted. The only point of interest is whether the lower Court after coming to the conclusion that three of the items entered in the sale-deed were fictitious should have gone on to consider what the fair market price of the property was. I find that the question is not open to discussion but is covered by a Bench ruling of this Court. Under s. 13 of the Oudh Laws Act, XVIII of 1876, if in a case of sale the Court finds that the price was not fixed in good faith the Court shall fix such price as appears to it to be the fair market-value of the property sold,

These words were interpreted as far back as 1901 in Wazir Begam v. Mohammad Ishaq Khan (1) by a Bench of this Court. It was held there that when the plaintiff in a suit under Ch. II of the Oudh Laws Act alleges that the price stated in the sale-deed is fictitious and the allegation is denied, the Court under s. 13 of the Act has not to determine what the price paid for the property actually is, but whether the price stated in the deed is fictitious as alleged, and if so what the fair market-value of the property is. The ruling has been constantly followed in this Court. The learned Counsel for the appellant referred to a decision of one of the Judges of the Bench which decided the case as Wazir Begam v. Mohammad Ishaq Khan (1). What was held there was that in a pre-emption suit in the absence of any other evidence the actual price paid is good evidence of the market-value. Abilakh v. Rabban Singh (2). This decision supports the decision as Wazir Begam v. Mohammad Ishaq Khan (1) and does not give an opinion in conflict therewith because it pre-supposes an inquiry into the market-value of the property even where there is evidence to prove what the actual price paid was. What was decided there was that in case the inquiry regarding market-value resulted in a want of determination of such value the actual price paid may be taken as the market-value. It is certain that in terms of the interpretation of s. 13 made by this Court the duty of the lower Court was not to determine what the price paid by the purchaser was but to determine the market-value.

As regards the market-value the decision is one of fact. Every objection taken by the appellants and by the respondents in this Court has been considered by the lower Appellate Court. It is not as if some point worthy of consideration has been missed out. It is not the province of this Court to examine the reasons given by the lower Appellate Court for accepting or rejecting the contentions of either party. The lower Appellate Court has given reasons for arriving at the finding on the materials before it and this Court will not interfere in second appeal.

I dismiss the appeal and cross-objections with costs.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIX, r. 2—Suit against Railway Company—Description of defendant—Suit filed against Agent, whether competent—Procedure.

Where a suit is brought against a registered Corporation the latter should be described in the plaint by its official name and title. In the case of an unincorporated or unregistered Company the names of the individuals constituting the Company must be given or the ordinary name by which the Company is known and under which it carries on its business should be given. [p. 682, col. 2.]

In the case of a suit against a Railway Company the proper name under which the Company should be sued is the name and the style under which it carries on its business. If a plaintiff deliberately chooses to sue not the Company but the Agent of the Company he cannot by any decree which he obtains in the suit bind the Company. If, however, upon a fair reading of the plaint it is made out that the description of the defendant is a mere error and that the Company is the real defendant then the suit may proceed against the Company. [p. 682, col. 2; p. 683, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal from a decision of Mr. Justice Das, dated the 18th December 1924, setting aside a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Monghyr, dated the 21st July 1924, reversing that of the Munsif, Jamui, dated the 13th December 1923.

Mr. Murari Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. C. Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, A. C. J.—On the 14th January 1922 the firm of Kalu Ram-Brijmohan of Bombay consigned three bales of cloth by Railway to the firm of Ramlal-Lachman Ram of Shaikhpura in the District of Monghyr. While the goods were in transit the latter firm assigned them to the present plaintiffs Radhe Lal and Ganga Prasad. It is admitted that delivery was to be made at Shaikhpura by the East Indian Railway Company. On the 9th February 1922 the Company in question delivered only one bale and on the 24th October 1922 the plaintiffs lodged a suit before the Munsif of Jamui claiming compensation from the Agent of the East Indian Railway for the loss of the two bales. The firm of Ramlal-Lachman Ram were sued as pro forma defendants.

The plaint which was filed on the 24th October was not properly stamped and was returned to the plaintiffs. On the 28th October the plaint was re-filed with a proper Court-fee and was accepted.

On the 21st November 1922 the East Indian Railway appeared and asked for time to file a written statement. Time was granted and the written statement was filed on the 3rd January 1923.

After various adjournments the case was taken up on the 13th December 1923. The defendant Railway then took a new ground and urged that the suit was incompetent against the Agent and that if it was sought to substitute or add the Company the time for doing so had expired. The Munsif accepted this argument and held that the frame of the suit was bad and made a decree in favour of the defendants.

The plaintiffs then went on appeal to the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr who on the 21st July 1924 set aside the Munsif's order and remanded the suit for trial on the merits.

A second appeal was then preferred to the High Court and on the 18th December 1924 Mr. Justice Das disagreeing with the Subordinate Judge restored the order of the Munsif and dismissed the suit.

The present Letters Patent appeal is against the order of Mr Justice Das.

The learned Judge relying on the decisions in Sinehi Ram-Bihari Lal v. Agent, East Indian Railway Co. (1) and East Indian Railway Co. v. Ram Lakhan Ram (2) held that this was a case brought against the Agent of the Railway and not the Railway Company and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief against the Company, and the learned Judge laid down his view of the law in the following words:—"In my opinion when there were two known persons in existence and the plaintiff brings the suit against one of them and afterwards applies to have the other brought on the record as a defendant on the ground that he all along intended to sue the other and that in substance he sued the other, and no question of representation arises in the case, it is impossible to maintain the view that the case is one of mis-description." There is no reason for dissenting from this statement of the law. It has been accepted in other cases and also recently in Agent Bengal Nagpur Railway v. Behari Lal Dutt (3). The question now before us depends not upon the correctness of the proposition as stated above but upon its application to the facts of this case. Was the suit against the Railway in substance or not? If it was a suit against the Agent then obviously no relief can be given against the Railway Company but the point is whether upon a consideration of the plaint and the circumstances of the case it is possible to hold that in truth and substance the plaintiff sued not the Agent as a designated person but the Railway Company as a corporate body. That is a question of fact and must be decided upon the evidence in the case. The decision in the other cases cannot, therefore, be any guide. Now the view that the learned Subordinate Judge took in appeal was that the suit was in substance one against the Railway and that it was competent to proceed. This is a finding of fact which is conclusive in second appeal but it is urged on behalf of the respondent before us that there is no evidence to support it. It is necessary, therefore, for us to see whether there was any evidence upon which the learned Judge was competent to come to the conclusion that this was really a case of mis-description.

In order to a finding upon this point it is necessary to see what the plaintiffs did. In their plaint they describe the first party defendant as the "Agent of the East Indian Railway." In para. 5 they state that the two bales were lost when in the custody of the defendant first party. In para. 6 they state that they made the demand to the Agent. In the relief portion they pray for judgment against the defendant first party as "Agent of the East Indian Railway Company." In their application of the 24th October 1922 asking for issue of process they describe the defendant not as Agent but as the East Indian Railway Company. In filing the deficit Court-fee with their plaint on the 28th October they again repeat this description.

Let us now see what the defendant did. The defendant who appeared on the 21st November 1922 was not the Agent but the Company. The defendant who filed the written statement on the 3rd January was again not the Agent, but the Company and no objection was taken to the competency of the suit until the 12th December 1923. It is pointed out by the appellant that if that ground had been taken at the earliest moment the error could easily have been remedied within the period of limitation which appears to have not expired till about February 1923. In reply it is urged on behalf of the respondent that para. 1 of the written statement does take the objection. That paragraph runs as follows :—That the suit as framed is not maintainable." It is clear, however, from the fact that the Railway Company appeared on the 21st November and also filed a written statement that this objection had reference not to the designation of the defendant but to other grounds upon which the suit of the plaintiffs was liable to fail.

Let us next see what the Court did. In the order sheet it describes the suit as one between Radhe Lal, plaintiffs and the East Indian Railway Company and others defendants. On the 21st November 1922 the Court accepts a petition from the Railway Company for time and on the 3rd January 1923 it accepts the written statement not from the Agent but from the Company. It is true that process was issued upon the Agent but that was clearly in consequence of the provisions of s. 140 of the Indian Railways Act.

It is clear, therefore, that the plaintiffs the Company and the Court till the 13th December 1923 all thought that the suit against the Agent was but against the Railway Company.

Is this, therefore, a case in which the plaintiffs have deliberately chosen to proceed not against the principal but his servant? Clearly the plaint differs from that in East Indian Railway Company v. Ram Lakhan Ram (2) for here in the prayer portion the plaintiffs claim against the defendant first party as Agent and they make it clear that they desire to proceed against the corporation and not against the Agent in his personal capacity.

In my opinion the facts of this case are such that the decision in East Indian Railway Company v. Ram Lakhan Ram (2) has no application.

There was evidence on which the Subordinate Judge could find that this was a case of mis-description and his finding is conclusive.

The appellant also urges that the Munsif's orders of the 21st November 1922 and of the 3rd January 1923 are really orders substituting the Railway Company as a defendant in the suit. Order I, r. 10 of the C. P. C. would, therefore, apply and no question of limitation would arise. It is true that no formal amendment of the plaint was made. This should have been done but the omission was an irregularity and I do not think it vitiates the order of the Subordinate Judge.

With regard to the general question as to what is the correct way of designating the defendant in a claim against a Railway Company the point has been argued but it is unnecessary to deal with it in detail.

The C. P. C. of 1882 and the present Code both contemplate that a registered corporation should be described by its official name and title. In the case of an unincorporated or unregistered Company the names of the individuals must be given or the ordinary name by which the Company is known and under which it carries on its business. There are companies constituted by Statute which are permitted to sue or be sued in the name of an officer or trustee. As to this class provision is made in s. 435 of the Code of 1882 but O. XXIX of the present Code of 1908 is silent. The omission, however, is remedied in the Appendix to the Code which makes it clear that this class of Company may be sued through the designated officer. Therefore, in the case of the East Indian Railway the proper name under which the Company should be sued is the name and style under which it carries on its business. A suit against the Agent would be incompetent and would fix no liability upon the Company. The Company has no registered office in India but the Indian Railways Act provides that an officer named the Agent may be appointed in India upon whom service may be made of all notices and processes addressed to the Company. The appointment of such an officer, however, does not in any way relieve the plaintiff of the duty of suing the proper person and of correctly describing him.

If a plaintiff deliberately chooses to sue not the Company but the Agent he cannot by any decree which he obtains in the suit bind the Company. If, however, upon a fair reading of the plaint it is made out that the description of the defendant is a mere error and that the Company is the real defendant then the suit may proceed against the Company.

Here the Railway did in fact appear and conducted the cases till the 12th December 1923 on the footing that they were the real defendants in the suit.

In these circumstances the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court must be set aside and the appeal must be decreed with costs. The order of the Subordinate Judge will be restored and the case will proceed to trial as directed by him.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—I agree.

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated 29th August 1924.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellant.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Sardar Khan instituted a suit for possession by pre-emption of 2 kanals of land against Prabh Dayal, vendor and Shiv Ram and Bhagwan Das, vendees, and obtained a decree on payment of Rs. 510 after deducting his costs. After Sardar Khan had deposited the amount in Court he transferred the decree to Sher

Khan, appellant. Sher Khan attempted to execute this decree and claimed that he was entitled to the possession of the buildings which stood on the land. A counter application was presented by the judgment-debtors objecting to the execution of the decree by Sher Khan on the ground that a pre-emption decree was not transferable. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the application of Sher Khan for execution of the decree holding that it was not transferable and that in any case he was entitled to possession of two kanals of vacant site only. Sher Khan appealed to the District Judge who held that the decree was merely for possession of the land and not for the possession of the buildings on the land. It may be mentioned that the land sold to the vendees was 2 kanals, 6 marlas, that Sardar Khan by mistake sued for pre-emption in respect of 2 kanals only and that consequently the decree was for possession of 2 kanals only. It also appears that before the suit was instituted the vendees had started building on the land and an injunction was claimed by the plaintiff to restrain them from doing so. On this ground it was claimed by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the land on which the buildings had been constructed was the subject of the suit. The District Judge held that during the trial of the suit the defendants had expressly invited the attention of the plaintiff to the mistake in the plaint as to the area of the land in suit, that the plaintiff did not choose to amend his plaint and that, therefore, he could not be given more than 2 kanals of land and further the District Judge seems to have held that such land only could be given to the decree-holder on which no building stood. As regards the objection by the judgment-debtors that the decree was not transferable, the learned Judge held that it was not transferable, and in doing so he followed a ruling of this Court Mehar Khan v. Ghulam Rasul (1), but differed from the decision, dated the 24th April 1922, of his predecessor-in-office given between the parties in a previous application made by Sher Khan for execution of this decree in which a similar objection had been raised by the judgment-debtors and had been disallowed by the learned District Judge who had held that the decree in question was transferable.

It is contended before me on behalf of the transferee Sher Khan that the decision of the learned District Judge in the former proceedings was res judicata and that in any case the learned District Judge was not, on general grounds, entitled to set aside the order of his predecessor-in-office. He also contended that the ruling relied upon by the learned District Judge was distinguishable from the present case because here the amount ordered to be paid by the pre-emptor had actually been paid in Court and, therefore, the title of the pre-emptor to the property in suit and to execute the decree had become perfect which was not the case in the reported case. It is not necessary for me to consider this point in detail in view of my decision on the objection as to the competency of the learned District Judge to set aside the order of his predecessor-in-office.

I am of opinion that the doctrine of res judicata as contained in s. 11 of the C. P. C. does not apply to the present case because the operation of that section is expressly restricted to a suit subsequently instituted to one in which the matter in controversy has already been decided: but on general grounds when a definite decision has been given between the parties on any matter in controversy and such decision purports finally to adjudicate on such matter, it is not competent to the same Judge or his successor-in-office to set aside the former decision. The parties, if they consider themselves aggrieved, have their remedy by review or appeal to superior Courts.

On behalf of the respondents it was contended that a decision on a point of law could never be res judicata and certain authorities were quoted in support of this contention. I have already stated that it is not strictly on the application of s. 11, C. P. C., that I hold that the learned District Judge was not competent to set aside the order of his predecessor. In Rameshwar Singh v. Hitendra Singh (2), their Lordships of the Privy Council re-affirmed the view which they had on previous occasions taken and which may be stated in the following terms:—

That though matters decided between the parties in the same proceeding are not, strictly speaking, covered by the provision of s. 11, C. P. C., as they could not be said to have been decided in a former suit, yet the former decision is as binding between the parties and those claiming under them as an interlocutory judgment in suit is binding upon the parties in every proceeding in that suit, or as a final judgment in a suit is binding upon them in carrying the judgment into execution. The binding force of such a judgment depends not upon s. 11 but upon general principles of law. If it were not binding there would be no end to litigation.

This view had already been expressed by their Lordships in previous judgments which are mentioned at page 293* of the report. I hold consequently that the judgment-debtors were precluded from raising the objection that the decree was not transferable and, therefore, that Sher Khan was not competent to execute it.

The next question is as to the manner in which the decree should be executed. It was not seriously contended before me that Sher Khan was entitled to the possession of buildings on the land in suit, or that he was entitled to more than 2 kanals of land decreed to him. The only contention of the learned Counsel was that possession should be given to Sher Khan of a plot of 2 kanals of land which may be unencumbered by buildings, and that if possession cannot be given of such land, then the judgment-debtors should be ordered to remove their materials unless they can come to terms with the decree-holder. It was further contended that the judgment-debtors had built on more than 6 marlas of land and had chosen the best part of the land for such building and that in giving possession to the decree-holder regard must be had to the quality of the land, in other words, that inferior land should be apportioned between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtors in the proportion between 2 kanals and 6 marlas. In my opinion this contention of the learned Counsel is correct, and its correctness was not seriously denied by the Counsel for the respondents. I, therefore, order that possession of 2 kanals of land be given to Sher Khan, and, if possible with due regard to the quality of land possession should be given to him of one plot which may be unencumbered by building. If, however, he cannot be given possession of one plot with due regard to the quality of the land, then the judgment-debtors should be ordered to remove their buildings from such portion of the 2 kanals of land which may fall to the share of the decree-holder unless they can come to terms with the decree-holder.

I accept Appeals Nos. 2950 and 2951 and pass an order in the terms mentioned above. The appellant will have his costs in both appeals.

The plaint in a suit to recover the amount of a hundi described the defendants as a firm but it was subsequently discovered that the defendants were not a firm but a joint Hindu family doing business under the name by which they were described in the plaint. The title of the plaint was thereupon amended by substituting the names of the members of the family for the name of the firm. On the date when the substitution was made the suit had become barred by time:

Held, that there was no addition of parties within the meaning of s. 22 (1) of the Limitation Act but a mere substitution in order to correct a misdescription and that, therefore, the suit was not barred by time. [p. 685, col. 2.]

A minor who is the bearer of a shah jog hundi is entitled to maintain a suit to recover the amount of the hundi. [ibid.]

The Court in determining whether a document is sufficiently stamped for the purpose of deciding upon its admissibility in evidence must look at the document itself as it stands and not at any collateral circumstances which may be shown in evidence. [p. 686, col. 1.]

The provisions of s. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act do not affect the question with regard to the admissibility in evidence of a document, which depends entirely upon the document as it stands. [ibid.]

The ordinary rule is that costs should follow the event. It is generally necessary that when costs do not follow the event, particular reasons should be given why the ordinary rule should not be followed. [p. 686, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiff filed this suit to recover the sum of Rs. 15,000 claimed to be due on three hundis drawn by the defendants on one Chhotaram Javer in Bombay payable to Shah which were handed over to the plaintiff. Various objections were raised in the written statement, one of which regarding the non-cancellation of the stamps on two of the hundis was successful. The other objections were disallowed, and the Judge passed a decree against the defendant on the third hundi for Rs. 5,000.

The same objections have been raised before us. The first objection was that the suit was time-barred. The defendants in the plaint were described as "Shivlal Ramprasad a firm doing business as merchants at Ahmedabad," and thereafter, when it was discovered that Shivlal Ramprasad was a joint Hindu family doing business under that name, and that the provisions of O. XXX (C. P. C.), would not apply when defendants were members of an undivided Hindu family, the title of the plaint was amended by substituting the names of the members of the family for the firm's name "Shivlal Ramprasad."

It was then contended that the provisions of s. 22 (1) of the Indian Limitation Act applied, and that the suit was barred, as the suit must be deemed to have been instituted against the defendants when the plaint was amended. The learned Judge considered, on a review of the authorities, that there was not an addition of parties, but only a substitution in order to correct a misdescription. We need only say that we agree with that finding.

It was next contended that the plaintiff could not sue as he was a minor at the date of the suit. The plaintiff was not a party to any contract on which he is suing. He is suing as the bearer of a shah jog hundi. We see no reason why he should not be allowed to sue on such a document. This point does not appear to have been raised in the lower Court.

The next point was that the hundi is inadmissible as it is post-dated. The question of its inadmissibility would arise under the Indian Stamp Act. It is a bearer hundi payable on demand, and requires, therefore, an one-anna stamp. But it is said that it was proved that the document was written, not on February 12, the date it bore, but some date in January 1921, therefore, it was not properly stamped and, therefore, it infringed the provisions of s. 68 of the Indian Stamp Act. There is a series of decisions referred to by the learned Judge which show that the Court, in determining whether a document is sufficiently stamped for the purpose of deciding upon its admissibility in evidence, will look at the document itself as it stands, and not at any collateral circumstances which may be shown in evidence. That was held by the Calcutta High Court in Ramen Chetty v. Mahomed Ghose (1). The various authorities on the question are also fully considered in Motilal v. Jagmohandas (2). We do not think that the provisions of s. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 affect the question at all with regard to the admissibility in evidence of a document which depends entirely upon the document as it stands.

The next point was that the hundis were not drawn on behalf of the joint family firm of the defendants. We entirely agree with the remarks of the learned Judge that that is not an honest defence.

The last question was whether there was any consideration for the hundi. That is a question of fact. The learned Judge said:—

"The assets of the old Ahmedabad firm of Raman and Natumalji were in their hands. These include a profit of Rs. 1,26,000, which was available for distribution among the co-parceners. Plaintiff's case is that defendants agreed to pay him this sum of Rs. 15,000 on account of the share which would come to him at the distribution. Similar payments were made by defendants to other co-parceners. I do not for a moment believe that the payment was promised as a loan. The position was that defendants had joint family funds in their hands. They knew that plaintiff's share would amount to more than Rs. 15,000, and they gave the hundis in part payment. Indirectly if not directly they were bound to account to plaintiff as to the other co-parceners."

The defendants relied upon the evidence of Ramprasad Shivilal to show that when he drew the hundis it was intended that the money should be advanced to the plaintiff as a loan. But his admissions in cross-examination entirely destroy the effect of what he had said in examination-in-chief. The fact that the plaintiff filed the suit to recover the balance of the share due to him as a co-parcener without mentioning these hundis, could not possibly affect the question, because there was no necessity to refer to these hundis, as having been dishonoured nothing had been recovered on them.

We think the decision of the Court below was correct and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff has filed cross-objections against the order as to costs.

The suit was filed on three hundis. I have dealt with the objection taken generally to all the hundis, which have been disallowed. With regard to two of the hundis an objection was taken at the hearing, although no issue was raised thereon, that they were not admissible owing to the stamp not being properly cancelled. The Judge decided that point in favour of the defendants. But in passing the decree for Rs. 5,000 on the third hundi, he made no order at all with regard to the plaintiff's costs without giving any particular reasons, except that he said that in the circumstances of the case he would not allow costs. Now the ordinary rule is that costs should follow the event. It is generally necessary that, when costs do not follow the event, the particular reasons should be given why the ordinary rule should not be followed. With regard to the general costs of the action, the plaintiff has succeeded on all the points, which were raised by the defendants against the plaintiff's claim to make them liable on the hundis, and as the costs of the suit will be taxed according to the High Court Rules and are not ad valorem, the costs in this case are exactly the same whether the suit was filed on one hundi for Rs. 5,000 or three hundis of Rs. 5,000 each. There are no circumstances in the case which show that the plaintiff was in any way guilty of misconduct which might disentitle him, even if successful, to his costs. The only fact before us is that an objection was taken in Court as to two of the hundis, and after argument that objection proved successful. To the extent to which any costs could be attributed to that point on which the defendants succeeded, they are entitled to their costs against the plaintiff. We leave it to the Taxing Master to decide what were the costs of the following issue, which I frame as no issue on the question was raised at the trial: Whether two of the suit hundis are admissible in evidence owing to the non-cancellation of the stamps? With regard to the rest of the costs, we think that the successful plaintiff in the Court below is entitled to them. He will be entitled to the costs of the cross-objections.

Railway Company—Goods consigned for carriage—Risk-Note Form "B"—Suit to recover damages for loss of goods—Burden of proof.

Where a suit is brought to recover damages in respect of loss of goods consigned to a Railway Company for carriage under Risk Note Form "B" the burden lies upon the plaintiff to show that the Railway Company is responsible for the loss of the goods. In such a suit it is open to the Railway Company to admit the loss of the goods and the Company is not in any way bound to prove such loss. [p. 687, col. 2; p. 689, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Saran, dated the 27th November 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, Chapra, dated the 20th January 1922.

Mr. Mohamad Hasan Jan, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sambhu Saran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Bucknill, J.—This is a second appeal. The appeal is from a decision of the District Judge of Saran, dated the 27th November 1922, by which he reversed a decision of the Munsif of Chapra, dated the 20th January of the same year.

The appellants are the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company through its Agent at Bombay; the respondents are Rameshwar Prasad and another. The suit was one of the type with which all the Courts in India are sufficiently familiar, it was for recovery of a sum of money from the Great Indian Peninsula Railway for the price of a bale of cotton goods which should have been delivered to the plaintiffs but which was never delivered to them.

The plaintiffs, in their plaint, after setting out the facts, alleged that they believed that the bale (which was a portion of a consignment of bales) had been lost in transit on account of the gross negligence of the defendants and they claimed that the defendants were bound to indemnify them for the loss. There was no doubt that the consignment of bales of goods was sent from some merchants in Bombay to the plaintiffs who were cloth dealers in Chapra; there is equally no doubt that the goods were delivered to the appellants at Victoria Terminus, Bombay, for carriage under the well-known Risk Note "B." It is also a fact which is common ground that when the goods arrived at Chapra, one whole bale was found missing. Now in answer to the plaintiffs' claim the appellants pleaded firstly that they admitted the loss but that the loss did not occur on their line of Railway; they alleged that they had handed over the goods intact to the East Indian Railway Company which had not been made a party to the suit; in any case they stated further that the loss was not due to the negligence of Railway servants.

Now when the case came before the Munsif, he came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs had entirely failed to prove negligence on the part of the Railway Administration; and he, therefore, held that, on that view of the case, the suit must be dismissed. In this decision he was, of course, following the numerous cases which have been decided in the Courts in India and which are substantially all of one tenor:—namely, that in a suit brought under such circumstances as this suit was brought it is necessary that the plaintiff should show that the Railway Company is responsible for the loss of the goods. The Munsif, however, considered a somewhat curious question which does not seem to have been raised in the pleadings but which appears to have been put forward in the course of the trial before him. It was suggested by the plaintiffs that the Risk Note was not binding on the parties because it had been in fact signed by some person who had no authority so to do from the consignors in Bombay. The Munsif was of the opinion that the individual who in fact signed the Risk Note had no authority so to do given to him by the consignors; he, therefore, came to the conclusion that, as the Risk Note had not been signed by any person who had authority to do so on behalf of the consignors, it did not bind the parties and that, therefore, presumably the appellant Company was not able to avail itself of any of the exceptions in the Risk Note which purport to exempt the appellant Company from liability under the conditions therein specified.

Now when the case went on appeal to the District Judge, the District Judge came to the conclusions precisely opposite on both these points to those at which the Munsif had arrived. He was satisfied in the first place that the person who did sign the Risk Note clearly had authority from the consignors so to do; although that authority was not an express but an implied one. He, therefore, held that the plaintiffs were bound by it. I might, however, point out that there would still be another objection to the endeavour of the plaintiffs successfully to raise this question. It is quite clear that with regard to the consignment as a whole, the plaintiffs, by accepting a large portion of the consignment, adopted the contract which is contained in the Risk Note "B"; they are, therefore, bound by that contract; and, whether or not the person who signed it had the consignors' authority, the plaintiffs would not be able now to contend that they were or are not bound by the terms of the special contract embodied in that Risk Note. Apart from that, however, there is here also the finding of fact by the District Judge that the individual who signed the Risk Note did have authority from the consignors; this finding is based upon the evidence which was given in the case on behalf of the plaintiffs themselves.

With regard to the other question:—that is to say, whether the plaintiffs had proved (what they were bound to prove if they were to be successful) negligence on the part of the appellants, the District Judge again differed from the Munsif. He came to the conclusion for certain reasons to which I will refer seriatim that the plaintiffs had satisfied him that the loss was really due to the negligence of the appellants. These reasons are three in number; one is that the Company produced no evidence of any kind. I need hardly point out that, according to the authorities both in India and in England and notably in the case decided by the House of Lords in Smith Limited v. Great Western Railway Company (1), it is not necessary for the defendant Railway Company in a case such as this to produce any evidence at all. Where a special contract is sued upon by a plaintiff (such as in this suit was sued upon) it is for the plaintiff to show that the Railway Company is liable to him for loss occasioned to the goods which had been carried by the Railway Company on his behalf. This reason, therefore, given by the learned District Judge is not a reason which could be properly held by him as being in any way evidential of negligence on the part of the appellant here. The second reason which he gives is what he refers to as "the admitted facts" in the case. The only admitted facts in the case which are really material were the facts that the consignment was actually made, that the goods were entrusted into the care of the appellant, and that they were lost; there were no other material facts admitted in the case, and, from these facts alone, again the law is clear as laid down in this country and in England that no inference evidential of negligence on the part of the appellant here could possibly be drawn. The third, and undoubtedly the most important, reason which he gives is what he refers to as the "plaintiff's own evidence"; now if the plaintiffs had produced any witness who had been able to prove in any way that there had been any negligence of any kind on the part of the appellant or by their Agents or servants, (for a corporate body can only after all act through its Agents or servants) there is little doubt but that the plaintiffs might have succeeded. It is not sufficient, however, I think for this Court to hold that, merely because the District Judge states that having regard to the plaintiffs' own evidence no other reasonable conclusion can be come to other than that the loss was due to the negligence of the Company's servants, the matter is by such a statement precluded from being considered in second appeal. In a case such as this it is important to see what in fact was said in evidence by any witness who appeared for the plaintiffs. In this case I fear that what was said by the only witness who appeared for the plaintiffs was in no sense any proof of negligence but only an assertion thereof. The only witness who was called by the plaintiffs merely stated as follows.—"Because the bale has not been delivered to me so I say that it has been lost on account of the negligence of the Railway Companies". (I may say that in the suit as originally brought the Bengal and North Western Railway Company through its Agent at Gorakhpur was a second defendant). I need hardly, I think, point out that a mere assertion of this kind is of no evidential value whatever as proof of negligence on the part of the appellant. If one was to hold that it was, all the difficulties which surround plaintiffs in bringing a suit of this kind, would at once disappear; for all that would be necessary for such to do, in order to throw the whole of the onus upon the defendant Company of bringing itself within the exceptions in the Risk Note "B" which purport to exempt him from liability, would be to make a mere assertion by a witness on behalf of the plaintiffs that he believed that the loss which was admitted was due to the negligence of the Railway Company's servants. I think that it is obvious that such a statement as this is as of little evidential value in this case as are the other two reasons which have been given in the decision of the District Judge. The judicial comments which have been passed not only in this country but also in England upon the difficulties which a plaintiff, who has entered into a contract of the nature of Risk Note "B," encounters, have been severe, and, if I may say so well founded. But such strictures on a Railway Company hardly properly lie within the domain of the Courts; for it is, I take it, always open to a person, who wishes to consign his goods for carriage by a Railway, not to enter into a contract such as is set out in the Risk Note "B" which entails upon him such immense difficulties in the event of his wishing to recover from the Railway Company for loss or damage of the goods which he has consigned to it to take to their destination. By this time I think it ought to be publicly known that it would appear that the onus of proving wilful negligence lies upon the plaintiff who brings the suit for recovery of what has been lost on a Railway Company's lines if he sues upon the special contract which is embodied in the Risk Note "B." It has been suggested that in this particular case the mere admission by the Railway Company of the loss is not sufficient to prove that loss; and reference was made to a case decided by a Bench of the Bombay High Court [Ghelabhai Punsiv. East Indian Railway Company (2)] in which their Lordships thought that a mere admission by a Railway Company in their favour that the goods were lost was not sufficient to prove that the goods had been in fact lost. I need only point out that this case was decided before the case in the House of Lords to which I have already referred. There the matter is fully dealt with and I think that an admission of loss must be regarded as a position which it is open to the defendant Railway Company to take up. After all it does not appear to me that it is necessary for a person to give strict proof of what he himself admits. All the points in the present appeal have been recently dealt with by Mullick, J., and myself in the case of G. I. P. Railway Co. v. Jitan Ram-Nirmal Ram (3).

Under these circumstances, and I must confess with some sympathy for the respondents, I feel that the only possible course in this case is that the appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed.

There will be no order as to costs.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), ss. 12, 17, 47—Hundi bearing uncancelled one anna stamp—Date written across stamp by drawee—Hundi, whether duly stamped.

A hundi chargeable with the duty of one anna was presented for payment bearing an uncancelled one anna stamp and the drawee when making the payment wrote across the stamp the date of the payment:

Held, (1) that the writing of the date across the stamp which had not been cancelled at the time of the making of the hundi did not have the effect of converting the hundi from an unstamped document into a stamped document and that the provisions of s. 47 of the Stamp Act had no application to the case;

(2) that consequently the hundi continued to be an unstamped document and that no suit could be brought on the basis of it.

Mr. Coltman (with him Mr. M. J. Mehta), for the Appellant.

Sir Chimanlal Setalvad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff alleged that he was a holder in due course of a shah jog hundi for Rs. 900, dated February 10, 1922, drawn by one Jaggannath Gordhandas of Poona on Joraji Deoraj, the second defendant Firm of Bombay, in favour of Venkatesh Ramchandra Shivnoor of Belgaum. The plaintiff transmitted the said hundi from Gulberga to his branch firm at Secunderabad. In the course of transmission to Secunderabad the said hundi was stolen by some person not known to the plaintiff. It then came into the hands of the first defendant firm, who presented it for payment to the drawees, the second defendant firm. The first defendant received payment from the second defendant. The plaintiff claimed that the first defendant had no title to the hundi, and that the first defendant was bound to pay the same with interest as moneys had and received for and on behalf of the plaintiff. The plaintiff further submitted that the second defendant firm was not entitled to pay the amount to the first defendant firm as they had no title to the same. The plaintiff, therefore, prayed that the defendants be ordered to pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs 1,035 with interest on Rs. 900 at the rate of nine per cent. per annum from October 10, 1923, till judgment, and costs of the suit.

We are not concerned with any other issues which were raised at the trial, except the issue whether the hundi was properly stamped. The Judge found on this issue that the instrument was unstamped, and, therefore, was inadmissible in evidence. The plaintiff's suit was then dismissed.

According to the evidence the hundi bore an uncancelled one anna stamp when it came into the hands of the first defendant firm. It was not, therefore, duly stamped at the time of execution. Under s. 12 (2) of the Indian Stamp Act:—

"Any instrument bearing an adhesive stamp which has not been cancelled so that it cannot be used again, shall, so far as such stamp is concerned, be deemed to be unstamped."

Under s. 17:—

"All instruments chargeable with duty and executed by any person in British India shall be stamped before or at the time of execution."

There is one exception provided by s. 47 of the Act which enables certain documents chargeable with the duty of one anna, if unstamped, to be stamped at a later date. Section 47 says:—

"When any Bill of Exchange, promissory note or cheque chargeable with the duty of one anna is presented for payment unstamped, the person to whom it is so presented may affix thereto the necessary adhesive stamp, and, upon cancelling the same in manner hereinbefore provided, may pay the sum payable upon such bill, note or cheque, and may charge the duty against the person who ought to have paid the same, or deduct it from the sum payable as aforesaid, and such bill, note or cheque shall, so far as respects the duty, be deemed good and valid."

If the second defendant firm, when the hundi was presented, had affixed the stamp and cancelled it, then the hundi would have been considered with regard to the payment of duty, a good and valid document. The evidence shows that some time on February 12, when the hundi was paid by the second defendant firm, Nagardas, a partner in the first defendant firm, noticing that the stamp on the hundi had not been cancelled, wrote across it the date "February 12, 1922." That would not, according to the provisions of the Act, make a document, which up to that time had been unstamped, stamped.

It is clear, therefore, that there has been no attempt whatever to comply with the provisions of s. 47 of the Act, and the document still continues to be unstamped. We think then that the decision of the Judge was right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Santhal Parganas—Death of proprietor—Settlement of

On the death of a Hindu widow who had succeeded to the estate of her husband in the Santal Parganas the Sub-Divisional Officer passed an order that as no heir of the deceased was traceable the prodhan might settle the lands according to the village Record of Rights. The prodhan subsequently reported that he had settled the lands with certain persons and on that report the Sub-Divisional Officer recorded an order "File." The heir of the deceased subsequently appeared and filed an objection but his claim was rejected and an order was passed that he should go to the Civil Court and that if he succeeded in establishing his claim he would be entitled to get possession of his land. Shortly thereafter the heir who had filed the objection died and his sons filed a suit for a declaration that they being the next reversioners of the deceased widow were entitled to get the lands left by her and that the defendants with whom the lands had been settled by the prodhan were not entitled to retain the lands under the guise of a settlement at fouti. This suit was filed more than a year after the date of the order rejecting the objection filed by the plaintiffs' father:

Mr. Janak Kishore for Mr. Dinesh
Chandra Varma, for the Respondents.JUDGMENT.

Adami, J.—This second appeal comes from the Santhal Parganas. It appears that one Musammatt Sahodramani succeeded to the properties of her husband, that is to say 63 bighas 16 kathas in village Sour Pachisa. Shamlal Mandal the prodhan of the village was her bhoulidar and in Mr. Wood's Settlement in 1873 and Mr. Craven's Settlement in 1879 Sahodramani and Shamlal were recorded jointly for the lands; but an entry was made that Shamlal was the bhoulidar. In the Settlement of 1908 the Settlement Officer refused to record Shamlal as having a joint interest on the ground that the interest of any reversioners there might be would be prejudiced. Then Sahodramani and Shamlal put in a petition of compromise before the Settlement Officer asking that they might be jointly recorded, but this was refused in 1909. On appeal the order of the Settlement Officer was affirmed on the ground given by the Settlement Officer. Thus Sahodramani was alone recorded in the Settlement of 1908; she remained in possession till January 1916 when she died. On her death Rako Mandal son of Shamlal, who had succeeded as prodhan declared that Sahodramani had died issueless and without heirs and, therefore, the jote was faut ferari and asked to be allowed to re-settle it with some raiya of the village. The Sub-Divisional Officer remembered what had happened in the settlement proceedings and ordered an inquiry to be made as to the whereabouts and existence of Jhumak, the brother of Sahodramani's husband, who had put in an objection during the settlement proceedings. A peon was sent out to report if Jhumak existed and whether Sahodramani had left any one else claiming to be her heirs. The peon came back and reported that he could not find Jhumak or any heir of Sahodramani. On the 17th November 1916 the Sub-Divisional Officer passed the following order:—

"Read the peon's and chaukidar's report. They failed to trace out any heir of the deceased ryot; the prodhan may settle the land according to the village Record of Rights; any one aggrieved by his action may come up to Court with an objection".

As a matter of fact Jhumak was at Bousi a village only eight miles from Sour Pachisa. Rako Mandal, however, reported on the 5th of January 1917 that he had settled the lands with the defendants Mohan Lal Mandal, his nephew, and Haro Mandal his brother. On that report the Sub-Divisional Officer recorded the order "File" on the 11th January 1917.

On the 11th May 1917, Jhumak Das, having heard what had happened, came forward and filed an objection but it was rejected, and he then filed another objection which was again rejected on the 23rd August 1918 on the ground that as Jhumak had been absent from the village and had no lands there, r. 27 of the Santhal Rules would apply to the effect that in the settlement of fouti lands a resident jamabandi raiyat should be preferred to an heir of the recorded raiyat living miles off from the village in which the land was situate. The order of the Settlement Officer on the 23rd August 1918 was to the following effect:—

"As already ordered Jhumak Das should go to the Civil Court to establish his claim to get the land as legal heir of the deceased recorded raiyat, Musammatt Sahodramani, and that if he succeeds he would be entitled to get possession of the land on payment of whatever sum the settlement takers may be found to have actually paid to the prodhan as arrear rents for the holding. I may note here that the defendants Mohan Lal Mandal and Haro Mandal had been allowed settlement of the jote on condition that they paid up the sum due as arrears which amounted altogether to Rs. 778-11-6 and this sum was paid by them to the prodhan.

Jhumak Das died in 1919 before he could move the Civil Court, and it was not until the 31st August 1921 that his sons, the present respondents filed the suit out of which this second appeal arises.

The plaintiffs in this suit prayed for a declaration that they, being the next reversioners of Musammatt Sahodramani, were entitled to get the lands left by her, and that the defendants were not entitled to retain the property under the guise of its settlement at fouti. They asked also for a declaration that the order of the 17th November 1916, allowing the prodhan to settle the land was obtained by fraud since the land was not fouti. Thirdly, they asked that the order of the 23rd August 1918, passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer, in Revenue Miscellaneous Case No. 302 of 1916-1917, should be set aside, and they asked that they should be given possession of the lands in suit without being required to pay any rent to the prodhan, who, with the other defendants, had been in possession throughout.

The Trial Court found that the plaintiffs had proved that their father Jhumak was the reversionary heir of Musammatt Sahodramani, and after his death they were the next reversioners. It was found, too, that Jhumak Das was the brother of Sahodramani's husband.

The question whether the suit was barred by Art. 14 was considered by the Subordinate Judge and he held that that Article would not apply, as the success of the plaintiffs in the suit was not contingent on the setting aside of the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer.

He decided that the payment of Rs. 778-11-6 by the defendants to the prodhan was proved, and considered the contention that r. 27 of the Attestation Rules would prevent settlement with Jhumak or his heirs. The Subordinate Judge held that r. 27 could not operate to change the order of succession laid down by the system of law and religion to which a family belongs. He found that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover possession without further payment to the defendants. He, therefore, decreed the plaintiffs' suit.

The learned District Judge has upheld the Subordinate Judge on every point and dismissed the appeal which was brought before him.

The only points brought before us in second appeal are the point of limitation and the point of the liability of the plaintiffs to re-pay the defendants the sum of Rs. 778-11-6 which the defendants paid to the prodhan.

It is strenuously contended before us that Art. 14 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act barred the suit, since it would be necessary to set aside the orders of the Sub-Divisional Officer before the plaintiffs could recover possession.

The learned District Judge has dealt with this contention and overruled it. The learned Vakil relies on the cases of Parbati Nath Dutt v. Raj Mahan Dutt (1), Ganesh Shesho Deshpande v. Secretary of State for India (2) and Raghunath Prasad v. Kaniz Rasul (3) also on the case of Nagu v. Salu (4).

Now, if in the present case it would be necessary, in order to allow the plaintiff to succeed, to set aside any order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, there is no doubt that Art. 14 would apply. But in the present case the relief sought is primarily a declaration that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed Musammatt Sahodramani as her next reversioners, and for such a declaration the setting aside of the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer would not be necessary. It is true that the third relief asked for by the plaintiffs is the setting aside of the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer; if the first relief is granted, the third relief would not be required and then, if we examine the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer made on the 23rd August, 1915, which I have cited above, it is clear that there is no final order and the plaintiff was told that, if he succeeded in obtaining a decree establishing his claim to get the land as legal heir, he would be entitled to get possession of the land on payment of whatever sum had been paid by the defendants. Therefore, it is quite clear that there would be no necessity to set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, for the suit is really a compliance with the order; nor would it be necessary to set aside the order of "File," passed when the prodhan reported that he had settled the jote with the defendants. The plaintiffs having obtained a decree declaring their title would enter on the land as heirs of Sahodramani. Therefore, I think, that the learned District Judge was quite correct in refusing to set aside the decree of the lower Court on the ground of limitation.

There is another view which might be taken also, and that is, that in the plaint the plaintiffs asserted fraud, and though there is no distinct finding as to fraud in the judgments of the lower Courts, the tenor of those judgments is to show that Rako Mandal, the prodhan, acted somewhat fraudulently in allowing the existence of Jhumak to be concealed. If there were fraud found, then the question of limitation would not come in; but it is unnecessary to consider this view of the question.

The only point in which I would differ from the learned District Judge is with regard to the payment of Rs. 778. The reason given by the lower Courts for refusing to order payment of this amount by the plaintiffs is that the defendants, during the years they have been in possession, have been able to obtain profits from the land exceeding in value the amount of Rs. 778 paid by them. I do not think that this is the right view to take. The Courts below in fact have entered into the question of mesne profits, and have set off those mesne profits against the payment. In their plaint para. 18, the plaintiffs state that they will bring a separate suit for mesne profits and they do not ask in the present suit for mesne profits. If there is to be a set off that set off should be in the suit for mesne profits. It is not open to the Courts in the present suit to reckon what the mesne profits are and to set them off against the Rs. 778. It seems to be assumed, too, that the Rs. 778 went into the hands of the prodhan; the amount represented the arrears due and would have to be paid to Government by the prodhan. It is only right, in my opinion, that the plaintiffs should re-pay to the defendants, when they recover possession, this sum of Rs. 778-11-6 paid towards arrears by the defendants, and I would, therefore, modify the decree of the lower Courts to this extent that it be declared that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover possession of the lands on their payment to the defendants of the sum of Rs. 778-11-6 within a period of six months from this date. To that extent the decree of the lower Courts will be modified. Each party will bear its own costs in this Court.

U THA NYO—APPELLANT

versus

MG. KYAW THA AND ANOTHER—

RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 105—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 2, 17—Burma Registration Directions—"Lease", meaning of—Agreement by tenant to cultivate land—Registration.

An agreement executed by a tenant only, agreeing to cultivate land and to pay rent, is not a "lease" under s. 105, Transfer of Property Act, because the document, being not executed by the lessor, the landowner, cannot transfer any right in the property within the definition as given in the section. [p. 694, col. 1.]

Direction 46 (d) (i) in the Burma Registration Directions has no application to such a document as the above. The document, however, is a "lease" within the wider definition given in s. 2 of the Registration Act, and is compulsorily registrable if it falls under s. 17 of the Act. [p. 694, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Court, Thaton, in O. A. No. 4 of 1924.

Mr. Ba Thein, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. M. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for rent of paddy land. The plaintiff claimed under an agreement, which has been marked Ex. A, but is filed in the process file, which was, he alleged, executed by the three defendants. The rent fixed was 350 baskets of paddy.

The first defendant filed a written statement confessing judgment. A decree has since been passed against him on this and he is not a party to this appeal.

The second defendant denied execution of the agreement and the third defendant did not appear at all. The case was fixed for hearing and one of the defendants appeared, but no evidence was taken and the suit was dismissed on the ground that Ex. A was compulsorily registrable and, therefore, could not be admitted in evidence and that the agreement could not be proved.

So far as regards the 2nd and 3rd defendants, this decision was upheld by the District Court, which, however, gave a decree against the 1st defendant on his confession.

The only question now for decision is whether this document required registration.

The document is of a kind very common in Burma, and which is usually called a lease. It is, however, an agreement executed by the tenants only, who agree to cultivate the land and pay the rent, and also agree to certain other conditions.

A "Lease" is defined in s. 105 of the Transfer of Property Act, which reads as follows:—

"A lease of immoveable property is a transfer of a right to enjoy such property, made for a certain time, express or implied, or in perpetuity, in consideration of a price paid or promised, or of money, a share of crops, service or any other thing of value, to be rendered periodically or on specified occasions to the transferor by the transferee, who accepts the transfer on such terms....."

It is quite clear that the document now in question is not a lease within this definition. It is not executed by the lessor, the land-owner, and, consequently, it cannot transfer any right to the property. It is in fact merely an agreement to cultivate and pay rent. The document, therefore, does not come within the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act at all and it is unnecessary to consider those provisions further.

The Registration Act, however, in s. 2 (7) says:—"Lease includes a counter-part, kabuliyat, an undertaking to cultivate or occupy, and an agreement to lease." This document, therefore, comes within the definition of a lease, for purposes of the Registration Act, as being an undertaking to cultivate or occupy. But whether registration is compulsory or not depends on s. 17. Section 17 (d) provides that leases of immoveable property from year to year, or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent are compulsorily registrable, provided that the Local Government may exempt certain kinds of leases.

Now, the present document, considered as a lease, does not fall within this clause, for it is not for a term exceeding one year. So far, therefore, s. 17 does not require it to be registered.

The only other clause which might apply is cl. (d), and that could only apply if the instrument purported, or operated, to create a right or interest in immoveable property of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards. This condition, as I have pointed out above, is not fulfilled by the present document.

I can, therefore, see no sufficient reason for holding that this document required registration.

The Courts below have acted, in part, on Direction 46 (d) (i) of the Registration Directions. This embodies a ruling by the Inspector General of Registration. This Direction says:—"A lease for agricultural purposes for a year or less must be made by oral agreement with or without delivery of possession or by a document either registered or unregistered; but when the value of the right created is Rs. 100 or upwards, if there is a document, it must be registered."

As regards leases within the definition in the Transfer of Property Act, I express no opinion as to the correctness or otherwise of this ruling; but it appears to me to be quite wrong in respect of a document, such as that now under consideration which is not, strictly speaking, a lease at all, but is a lease within the wider definition in the Registration Act.

I have been referred also to an unpublished judgment of this Court in Special Civil Second Appeal No. 274 of 1921. In that case a document of a kind similar to the present one was involved, and the learned Judge remarked that it was abundantly clear that it required compulsory registration. He did not, however, give any reasons for this view, and the point, although it was taken up by the appellant in that case, had not been pressed and does not appear to have been fully argued.

I do not consider, therefore, that I am bound by that decision. I hold, therefore, that the document now in question did not require compulsory registration.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed, the judgments and decrees of the Courts below, as regards the two respondents (the 2nd and 3rd defendants) in the suit, are set aside, and the suit is remanded to the Township Court for a decision on the merits as against these two defendants.

The appellant will be given a certificate for the refund of the Court-fees paid on this appeal. The other costs of this appeal will be costs in the suit and, together with the costs in the District Court, will follow the final result.

I would point out to the Township Judge that, although Ex. A does not require registration, it does appear to require to be stamped, but it is unstamped at present. It will be necessary, therefore, for him to decide whether this document requires a stamp and, if so, to require the duty and penalty to be paid before admitting it in evidence.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION APPEAL No. 45
OF 1925.

July 13, 1925.

Present:—Sir Norman Macleod, Kt.,
Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Coyajee.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION OF BOMBAY—APPELLANT

versus

RANCHORDAS VANDRAVANDAS—
RESPONDENT.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), ss. 4, 6 (3)—City of Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888), s. 63 (k)—Compulsory acquisition of land—Declaration by Local Government, whether conclusive as to purpose for which land required—Suit to challenge nature of purpose, whether maintainable—Erection of quarters for Municipal servants, whether public purpose—Erection of shops, effect of.

A declaration by the Local Government under s. 6 (3) of the Land Acquisition Act that a certain piece of land is required for a public purpose is not conclusive with regard to the character of the purpose for which the land is required and it is open to a person who is likely to be affected by the acquisition of land in pursuance to the declaration to institute a suit to have it declared that the land in question cannot be acquired by compulsion inasmuch as it is not required for a public purpose. [p. 697, col. 2; p. 698, col. 1.]

Under the provisions of s. 63 (k) of the City of Bombay Municipal Act a Municipality is empowered to acquire land for the purpose of building quarters for Municipal servants, as that is a measure likely to promote public safety, health, convenience or instruction. [p. 698, col. 1.]

Where a Municipality determines that a certain measure is likely to promote public convenience within the meaning of s. 63 (k) of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, it is not open to a Court of Law to interfere with the exercise of that discretion. [p. 698, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a Municipality proposes to acquire a piece of land for the purposes of a school, a play ground, recreation park and for erecting residential quarters for Municipal servants, it cannot be said that the acquisition is not being made for a public purpose merely because as a part of the scheme the Municipality proposes to erect certain shops on a portion of the land to be acquired in order to recoup itself for the expenses to be incurred in connection with the scheme. [p. 699, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Shah.

Mr. Coltman (with him Mr. Daphtary,) for the Appellant.

Sir Chimanlal Setalvad (with him Mr. Kemp), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 5 in this suit are the trustees of the Tulsidas Gopalji Charitable Trust. As such trustees they are in possession of certain immovable property which defendants Nos. 2 and 3 desire the Government of Bombay to acquire for them under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act I of 1894. Plaintiff No. 6 is in occupation of a portion of the property as the lessee from plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 5.

The plan of the land appears at p. 23 of the print. The land marked yellow was acquired by the Corporation in or about the year 1917 for certain purposes including the building of a Primary School. It does not seem, however, that up to now the Corporation has proceeded with the construction of the school. On September 27, 1920, the Municipal Commissioner addressed a letter to the Corporation which appears at p. 23A of the print:—

"I have the honour to refer to Corporation Resolution No. 1609, dated June 14, 1915, approving of the acquisition of a site for the construction of the Primary School at Mazagaon and to state that after further enquiries the site proposed has been found to be inadequate for the needs of primary education in this locality. On making enquiries as to how this difficulty could be remedied, Mr. Mackison has come to the conclusion that the area in question to the East of Mazagaon Road is at present very badly developed and furnished an opportunity not only for the construction of school accommodation but for development as quarters for Municipal servants and the provision of a public park. I attach a plan No. 67 of August 12, 1920, showing the existing site already acquired for the Primary School, and Mr. Mackison's proposed development. I do not think that this development can be considered to be final, but there is no doubt that an opportunity exists for acquiring land in this locality at a reasonable rate to meet several Municipal needs. The Corporation in their Resolution No. 4775, dated September 15, 1919 have requested us to expedite the submission of proposals for the housing of certain of the Municipal servants. The locality in question would be very suitable. As I have already stated the land is at present very badly developed and the present lease will expire in a few years.

It is estimated that the total cost of the land with the quarters to be constructed thereon will be approximately Rs. 23½ lakhs. From the development as proposed by Mr. Mackison, it is anticipated that it would be possible to provide a public park and the play-ground for the school and still to derive a return of about four per cent. on the capital outlay. The development suggested provides eighty-four shops and one hundred and twenty-six quarters of four rooms each. The area to be acquired is 27,213 square yards which with the area already acquired 2,225 square yards will give a total area of 29,438 square yards. It is estimated that the number of people to be dishoused will be three or four hundred, whereas accommodation would be provided by the proposed development for about 750 people in addition to the school and the park.

As already stated I am not entirely satisfied that the development proposed is the best suited to the locality but I am emphatically of opinion that the land in question should be acquired for development as a Municipal estate comprising a school and a play-ground, quarters for Municipal servants and a public recreation ground. The details to be laid out can be adequately arranged at a subsequent date after full discussion.

I, therefore, request the sanction of the Standing Committee and the Corporation to the acquisition of an area of approximately 27,213 square yards on the east side of Mazagaon Road between Dockyard Road and Matharpakhady Road and to my making an application to Government for the acquisition under the Land Acquisition Act of the area mentioned above."

The said letter was thereafter referred to, and considered by, the Roads Committee, and eventually the Municipal Commissioner addressed a letter to Government on March 28, 1922, which appears at p. 16 of Part III of the print :—

"I have the honour to state that the Standing Committee have authorized me to apply to Government for the acquisition under the Land Acquisition Act of the property bearing N. S. No. 3607 at Mazagaon and Dock Yard Roads shown in crimson colour on the accompanying plan marked, J. M. F. No. 3607 (in duplicate) in connection with its development as a Municipal estate comprising a school, a play-ground, quarters for Municipal servants, etc.

I request that Government will be pleased to take necessary steps in the matter and place me in possession at as early a date as practicable.

The usual draft notification under s. 4 in duplicate is herewith forwarded."

A notification was thereafter published under the provisions of s. 4 of Act I of 1894. On June 27, 1922, a notification under s. 6 of the Land Acquisition Act was published. The preamble states :—

"Whereas it appears to the Governor in Council that land is required to be taken by Government at the expense of the Municipality of Bombay for a public purpose, viz., the development as Municipal estate comprising a school, a play-ground, quarters for Municipal servants, etc., it is hereby declared that for the above purpose the following plots of land are to be acquired in the aforesaid city of Bombay."

The plaintiffs' Solicitors then wrote to the 1st defendant complaining about the property being acquired by the Municipality "under the guise of a public purpose, not in the interests of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood, but with a view to profiteering." Similar letters were written to the Corporation and to the Municipal Commissioner. On September 18, 1922, a notice was given that the plaintiffs intended to institute a suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council and the Municipality of Bombay.

On June 21, 1923, the plaintiffs filed this suit praying that it might be declared that all the proceedings taken in connection with the acquisition of the property were invalid and of no effect, and that the defendants, their officers and or agents forthwith pending the hearing of the suit and thereafter permanently be restrained from taking any further steps to acquire possession of the property. The plaintiffs contended that the 2nd and 3rd defendants had no power to acquire the property for the purpose for which they proposed to acquire the same. In particular they had no power to acquire the property for the purpose of "(a) erecting quarters for the accommodation of Municipal servants; (b) erecting shops to be let out on hire for profit; and (c) recoupment of expenses incurred in the acquisition of other land acquired or to be acquired for legitimate purposes."

Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have put in their written statement, and the real defence to the plaintiffs' claim is contained in para. 10 thereof:—

"Referring to para. 9 of the plaint these defendants without prejudice to the contention contained in para. 9 hereof deny each and every contention contained in the said para. and say that they have power to acquire land for the purposes therein mentioned. These defendants say further that in fact the purposes (b) and (c) mentioned in the said para. are not mentioned in the said declaration which states the purposes for which the said land is required. These defendants deny that they in fact propose to acquire the said land for the said purposes (b) and (c). The erection of shops if within the powers of the 2nd defendants (as they say it is) is merely incidental to the said proposed scheme. These defendants say further that the 2nd defendants would in any event be entitled to use the said land for any purpose for which the Municipal Act authorized its use although such purpose was not that mentioned in the said declaration."

Defendants Nos. 1 and 4 have filed their written statement, their main contention being that by reason of s. 6 (3) of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 the said declaration is conclusive evidence that the land is needed for a public purpose and the plaintiffs are debarred from alleging the contrary.

Numerous issues were raised at the hearing. A large number of them were purely on technical points which the defendants might well have conceded. On Issues Nos. 2 and 7, whether the suit was maintainable as against all the defendants, viz., Nos. 1 to 4, the learned Judge held that the suit was maintainable in spite of s. 6, cl. (3), of the Land Acquisition Act; it even seems to have been conceded before the learned Judge by the defendants that the suit was maintainable. However, in any event it is perfectly clear there is nothing in the point.

In Amulya Chandra Banerjee v. Corporation of Calcutta (1), a suit was brought for a declaration that the Municipality of Calcutta was not competent, according to law, to acquire certain land in Calcutta, the property of the appellants. The District Judge held that the declaration made by the Governor on September 6, 1915 under the Land Acquisition Act, that the land was required for a public purpose was conclusive against the plaintiffs. On appeal to the High Court a different opinion was expressed by the Judges in appeal. They considered that the declaration of the Governor under s. 6 (3) of the Land Acquisition Act was not conclusive. The case went to the Privy Council, but the point does not appear to have been argued before their Lordships. It may be presumed that it was thought that the point was not worth arguing.

But in Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chanara Kanta Ghosh (2) the point does seem to have been taken, and at page 506* there is the following passage:—

"Whenever the Local Government does sanction an improvement scheme, there is a duty to announce the fact by notification, and the publication of a notification is conclusive evidence that the scheme has been duly framed and sanctioned. This provision does not affect the right of the respondent to institute a suit to have it declared that the Board in framing the scheme acted ultra vires, or that the scheme as sanctioned does not authorize the appellants to acquire by compulsion the land in question."

It was open then to the plaintiffs to seek the declaration they ask for in the suit. If the Corporation were not empowered by the provisions of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888, to acquire the land in suit, then the plaintiffs would be entitled to the injunction they asked for. The learned Trial Judge has held that the Municipality were empowered by the provisions of s. 63, cl. (k), to acquire land for the purpose of building quarters for Municipal servants, as that was a measure likely to promote public safety, health, convenience or instruction.

That question also arose in the case just referred to, viz., Amulya Chandra Banerjee v. Corporation of Calcutta (1). There the Municipality desired to acquire surplus land for the purpose of erecting, at the expense of a private benefactor, a dharmashala for the use of the numerous worshippers resorting at certain seasons of the year to a Hindu temple within the area of the improvement scheme. Their Lordships said (page 814*):—

"The construction and maintenance of a dharmashala cannot be said to be ruled out of (s. 14) (xi), which covers 'any other matter which is likely to promote the public health, safety or convenience, or the carrying out of this Act.' This being so, their Lordships would be the last to question the opinion of, or the exercise of discretion by, the Municipality of Calcutta, even if they differed from it, which they certainly do not. The Act by s. 14 and s. 556 has expressly placed the discretion, not with this Board or with a Court of Law, but with the Municipality itself. The Corporation has the power of acquisition of land which may in their opinion be needed for carrying out any of the purposes of the Act."

The grounds on which the Municipal Commissioner considered that the land in suit should be acquired for the purpose of housing Municipal servants appear in his letter of July 23, 1919. See Ex. 1. We agree with the Trial Judge that the building of quarters for Municipal servants should be held to be a measure likely to promote public convenience. In any event if the Municipal Commissioner and the Corporation think that such measure is likely to promote public convenience, the matter lies within their discretion, and it would not be for a Court of Law to interfere with the exercise of that discretion.

The only other point in the case is whether the fact that the Municipal Commissioner had recommended that a portion of the land so acquired should be built upon not only for the purpose of providing quarters for Municipal servants, but also for providing shops, was a sufficient ground for saying that the whole object of the Corporation in acquiring this land was contrary to the provisions of the Act. The learned Judge on this question said:—

"It is not suggested before me and cannot be suggested that it is open to the Corporation to acquire land to put up shops with a view to earn any dividend or interest on the outlay. It is urged, however, that here the purpose of acquisition is different, and that the putting up of shops is merely incidental to it. After a careful consideration of this argument, I have come to the conclusion that the putting up of eighty-four shops would not be merely an incidental thing. It was a part of the scheme which was supposed to reduce the burden of a heavy outlay in building quarters for Municipal servants and in acquiring the property. Indeed as suggested by the Municipal Commissioner in his letter of September 27, 1920, it may be possible to alter the scheme after the whole land is acquired and even to make it more profitable. But on the record as it stands I am clear that the putting up of eighty-four shops is a substantial part of the development scheme for which this land is acquired. The public body which is given powers to acquire land for the purposes of the Act must be properly confined to the limits of those powers, and cannot be allowed to exceed the same by treating acquisition of land for shops as merely incidental to the main scheme. In other words, when the acquisition of an area is based upon the development scheme which contemplates an appreciable part thereof to be put to use not permissible under the Act, the acquisition cannot be justified. It is possible for the Corporation to require the whole or a part of this area for school, recreation ground and building quarters for Municipal servants so far as they reasonably and bona fide require it for those purposes only. But the present acquisition is for the purpose of developing it as a Municipal estate not only for purposes for which it is permissible to the Corporation to acquire land but also for a purpose for which it is not permissible to the Corporation to acquire any land. It is not possible to say how much of the acquired land would be put to such use. It is sufficient to say that the putting up of shops which could be let to the public on rack rent is a substantial part of the scheme for which the land is required by the Municipality and would take up an appreciable area of the land acquired. No decided cases bearing on this point have been cited before me, and I have to decide the question with reference to this acquisition on the particular facts before me. Whether the shops come in incidentally in the whole scheme or form a real and practical basis of the whole scheme, it is undoubtedly a part, and, in my opinion, a substantial part and by no means a negligible part, of the scheme; and I do not see how under the cover of acquisition for recognized purposes any land could be acquired for a purpose not recognized by the Municipal Act."

The result was that a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiffs, and it was declared that all the proceedings taken by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in connection with the application of the property in suit were invalid and of no effect, and that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were restrained permanently from taking any further steps to acquire possession of the property under the declaration dated June 27, 1922.

Now it will be seen from the plan on p. 23 what part of the area to be acquired was intended to be built upon to provide quarters for Municipal servants. It was contended for the appellants that merely because the Municipality had in contemplation the utilization of the ground floor of the premises to be built upon that area as shops, there was no sufficient ground for holding that the Municipality could not proceed with the scheme, and could not be allowed to ask Government to continue the proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act. We cannot agree with the conclusion of the learned Judge that because the Commissioner and the Corporation contemplated building these shops, that was a substantial part of the scheme, or as the learned Judge has in effect held, a part of the scheme, on which the whole of the acquisition proceedings depended, so that the acquisition of this large area was entirely outside the powers of the Corporation. It may be inferred from the Municipal Commissioner's letter of September 27, 1920, that the rents which were expected to be collected from the tenants of the shops on the ground floor would be higher than the rents of the same premises if they were occupied for living purposes by Municipal servants. But the only result of ground floor premises being occupied by Municipal servants would be that the return on the capital outlay would be less. It is really a matter of administration for the Corporation to decide, when the land has been acquired and the plans for providing quarters for Municipal servants have been made out, whether, a certain portion of the premises can be more conveniently let out for other purposes. That is a matter which has to be decided when the land has been acquired, and the mere fact that the provision of shops is contemplated would not be sufficient, in our opinion, to invalidate the whole scheme.

That really is the main question in the appeal. There is no necessity for us to deal with the other points that arise from the remaining issues which were considered by the learned Judge. There are twenty-four grounds in the memorandum of appeal, and the learned Counsel who argued the case for the appellants has wisely touched upon only those with which we have dealt. It would be better in a case of this description if technicalities were avoided, as much time would be saved thereby.

The appeal will be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout. One set of costs allowed. Cross-objections dismissed with costs. The Taxing Master can tax the costs of Issues Nos. 1, 2, 3, 6 and 7 which are decided against the defendants, and the plaintiffs will be entitled to the costs of those issues.

Section 51 of the Bengal Village Self-Government Act does not debar a suit contesting the validity of an election in a Civil Court. Such a suit can be heard by a Civil Court under s. 9 of the C. P. C. [p. 701, col. 1.]

The rules framed under cl. (e) sub-s. (2) of s. 101 of the Bengal Village Self-Government Act do not apply to a meeting held under the presidency of a Government Official to elect a President of a newly constituted Union Board. [p. 703, col. 1.]

There is a very considerable difference between the nature of a meeting of members summoned under s. 8 and the rules made thereunder and a meeting of the Board summoned under rules framed under cl. (e), sub-s. (2) of s. 101 of the Bengal Village Self-Government Act. [p. 702, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Officiating District Judge, Hooghly, dated the 20th of August 1924, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court, Hooghly, dated the 25th of July 1924.

Babus Rupendra Kumar Mitter and Dharmdas Set, for the Appellant.Babu Baranosibashi Mukherjee, Dr. Bijan Kumar Mukherjee, for the Respondents.JUDGMENT.

Duval, J.—In this matter the plaintiff-respondent brought a suit to have the election of one Nasaruddin Mandal as President of Bhandarhati Union Board declared void. The facts of this case are as follows and are not disputed. The period of office of the members of this Union having come to an end a fresh election and nomination of members took place and the names of the members elected and nominated were notified in the Calcutta Gazette on the 5th March 1924. In accordance with r. 32 of the Rules issued under the Government Notification No. 630, T. L. S. G. of the 13th October 1919, the Magistrate of Hooghly on the 11th March passed an order on the Sub-Divisional Officer to proceed with the election of a new President. Under r. 36 of these Rules the members had to elect the new President within one month of the order and on the 17th March 1923, the Sub-Divisional Officer posted notices on the new members and to the old President for service on them, fixing the 26th March as the day on which the members of the Union should elect a President under his Presidentship. The plaintiff, the old President, received these notices on the 19th March and he served them on the members on the 20th and 21st March. On the 26th March, the meeting was held under the Presidentship of the Sub-Divisional Officer. Eight out of the nine members attended the meeting. The one member, who did not attend has also put in an affidavit saying that he was unable to attend for personal reasons and that if he could have attended he would have voted for the defendant. At the election held by the members, five voted for the defendant and three for the plaintiff. No one alleged at the meeting that it was not duly summoned. Thereafter the plaintiff brought the present suit his main contention being that defendant No. 1 was not duly elected because seven days' clear notice had not been given of the meeting for the election. Before he did so, he appealed to the Commissioner who overruled his objection. The case came up before the learned Munsif, who found against the plaintiff and dismissed the suit holding that the election of defendant No. 1 was duly made. In appeal the learned Officiating District Judge of Hooghly has found that as there was not clear seven days' notice before the meeting was held the election is invalid and must be set aside. He has, therefore, issued a permanent injunction restraining the defendant No. 1 from sitting as a President of the Union Board and from taking over office from the old President. Against this order the present appeal is preferred.

In appeal, the following points are raised: first; that the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit; secondly, that there is no rule prescribing any period of notice to members of the Union Board for the election of a new President; thirdly, if r. 8 of the Rules issued under Notification No. 4267 L. S. G. of the 5th January 1920 which requires that at least seven days' notice of all meetings of Union Board shall be given to every member, applies to this meeting also, that the rule is not mandatory but merely directory and the non-observance of it would not by itself make the election void; fourthly, if this rule applies, anyhow the plaintiff cannot raise it as he attended the meeting, raised no objection at the time that the meeting was not duly called but himself offered himself as a candidate for the election. He, therefore, cannot afterwards turn round and say that the whole proceedings are void; fifthly; the Civil Court should not set aside the election as any irregularity which occurred did not affect the result.

Now as to the first point, the argument is put before us that in view of s. 51 of the Bengal Village Self-Government Act, 1919, no civil suit would lie in such a matter as this. That section reads thus: "It shall be the duty of all Commissioners, District Magistrates, Sub-Divisional Magistrates, etc., to see that the proceedings of Union Boards are in conformity with law and with the rules in force thereunder. The Commissioner may, by order in writing, annul any proceeding which he considers not to be in conformity with law and with the said rules, and may do all things necessary to secure such conformity." It is urged on behalf of the appellant that in view of this section the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a civil suit of this nature and reference was made to certain reported cases in support of this contention. Those cases, however, only go so far as to establish that where the Legislature has set up a special Tribunal for the purpose of deciding certain matters, such matters shall be heard by that Tribunal and that Tribunal alone. As I read s. 51, I cannot believe that it was the intention of the Legislature to set up the Divisional Commissioner as the person finally to decide questions of franchise to the annulment of the ordinary Civil Courts' right to decide such questions; and I must hold that this section is not broad enough, any more than s. 120 of the corresponding Village Self-Government Act, 1885, has been held to be, to debar Civil Courts from exercising their ordinary powers in this connection to try all suits under their general power under s. 9, C. P. C., which says, that "the Courts shall have jurisdiction (subject to the provisions contained in the Code) to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred. A suit in which the right to property or to an office is contested is a suit of a civil nature notwithstanding that such right may depend entirely on the decision of questions as to religious rites or ceremonies." In this view I must hold that the Civil Court has full power to entertain the suit.

The next question is whether the election is bad because seven clear days' notice (which admittedly was not given) is necessary under the rules for a meeting of the members for the election of a President. Now the rules to which I have referred of the 13th October 1919 lay down the procedure for the election of a President in two contingencies, first, the election of a President at the formation of a new Board which is contained in rr. 32 to 36, the election taking place by virtue of the provisions of s. 8 of the Act and secondly, an election owing to a casual vacancy which might arise by death, removal or resignation of a President during the duration of a Board under s. 17 of the Act, the procedure for the latter being set out in r. 40 of the Rules. In the latter cases the rule is perfectly clear. The new election has to be made at a meeting of the Union Board within a certain period and it is clear that it can only be made at a meeting of the Union Board. The election of a President of the new Board after the election of the members stands on a different footing. The election has to be made at a meeting of the members presided over by the Circle Officer or other officer (in the present case the Sub-Divisional Officer). The Presiding Officer asks each member to record his vote in writing and each of the members voting hands to him a signed voting paper containing the name of the person for whom he votes and the Presiding Officer then declares the candidate for whom there is the largest number of votes to be the President of the Board; or if there is an equality of votes the Presiding Officer gives a casting vote. The section of the Act which refers to the election of the President of the Union Board is s. 8 which reads thus: "Every Union Board shall be presided over by a President who shall be elected by the members of the Union Board from among their own number." Under s. 101 (2) (a) the Local Government has power to make rules generally regulating all elections under the Act. It would appear therefore at first sight that this meeting for the election of a President is different from an ordinary meeting of the Union Board, the regulations of which meetings are prescribed under rules made under s. 101 (2) (e). The meeting is not convened by the old President or by any member. It is convened by a Government Officer. It is presided over by a Government Officer. The Government Officer has a casting vote and the voting takes place not in the ordinary way by show of hands but by each member individually recording his vote on a piece of paper and handing it over to the President. Section 8 too of the Act does not refer to the President being elected by the Union Board, but by the members of Union Board and it is only by virtue of rules which the Government has made under its power to make under s. 101 (2) (a) that the election is one in which all the members meet in one place and record their votes in writing in the presence of the Circle Officer or other Government Officer. These rules for the election of the Presidents of Union Boards were issued in October 1919. Further rules were issued in January 1920 and these were issued under s. 101 (2) (e) as "rules regulating the conduct of meetings of Union Boards and the method of forming a quorum." It is urged for the respondent that as r. 8 of these rules requires seven clear days' notice to be given, and as seven clear days' notice was not given, and as this is a meeting of the Union Board, the whole election is ultra vires. Now the first question is, can these rules which apply to meetings of Union Boards also apply to meetings of members of Union Board called together under statutory rules made under another rule making power for the purpose of electing a President? An examination of these rules shows that the meetings of Union Boards differ largely from the rules made in the previous Notification for the election of a first President of a new Board but are by no means inconsistent with the rule as to the election of a President in a casual vacancy. Thus these rules lay down that meetings shall be held at the office of the Union Board or at such other place as the President determines. Meetings shall be either ordinary or special. Seven days' notice must be given to each member of the Union Board. At special meetings the quorum shall be formed by at least one-half of the number of members. The President or in his absence the Vice President shall preside at every meeting; provided that the provisions of the rule shall not apply to a meeting convened for electing a President or Vice President. There is a subsequent rule to the effect that if a meeting fails for want of quorum the members shall be informed of the date of an adjourned meeting by a fresh notice and then r. 8 requiring full seven days' notice will not apply.

Now the main question in the second point urged in this appeal is, do these rules at all apply to a meeting convened by the Government Officer for the election of a new President after a general election? It is seen that under r. 40 the election of a President in the case of a casual vacancy must be made at a meeting of the Board, but it does not follow that a meeting for the election of a new President to be elected under s. 8 of the Act rendered with the rules passed under s. 101 (2) (a) of the Act, presided over by and summoned by one who is not a member of the Board is a meeting in which the rules under s. 101 (2) (e) have any application. In my opinion, the rules framed under cl. (e), sub-s. (2) of s. 101 cannot apply to such a meeting. As I have pointed out, there is a very considerable difference between the nature of meetings of members summoned under s. 8 and the rules made thereunder and a meeting of the Board summoned under rules framed by cl. (e) of sub-s. (2) of s. 101, Bengal Village Self-Government. The difference between the nature of these meetings is clear as I have already set out and it appears to me, therefore, that we cannot import the ordinary rules for ordinary and special meetings of a Union Board into the procedure for the election of a new President after a new election. No doubt stress was laid on the provisos to rr. 11 and 12 in the latter rules which say that the provisions of rr. 11 and 12 do not apply to a meeting convened for the election of a President or Vice President. But as I have pointed casual vacancies are to be filled up at ordinary meetings and the proviso is necessary in order to provide that rr. 11 and 12 do not apply to meetings held under r. 40 of the election of a new President in a casual vacancy and for no other purpose. It does not follow that because this proviso (rendered necessary by the wording of the rules promulgated under the earlier rules for the procedure for election in casual vacancies at meetings of the Union Board) finds a place therein, that these rules have any application at all to the meetings held under the presidentship of the Government Officer for the election of a new President.

after a general election; nor indeed can they, for the nature of the two classes of meetings is clearly fundamentally different. A meeting of the Union Board held by virtue of the rules framed under cl. (e) is at the office or such place as the President may appoint. At a meeting after a new election, the President does not appoint the place of meeting for the members who meet to elect a new President; the method of voting at ordinary meetings is entirely different from meetings of the members to elect a President. In the latter case the President has a casting vote only. In ordinary meetings the President as a member has a vote and also his casting vote. The method of election is different. In an election under s. 8 the Government Official has a casting vote. In an election under s. 17 the Presiding Officer as a member of the Board has his vote and also a casting vote. The conclusion, therefore, I can only come to is that, as a matter of fact, r. 8 and other rules relating to meetings under cl. (e) do not govern meetings of the members of the Union Board convened by the Government Officer for the purpose of electing a President after a general election.

Holding this, the further questions as to whether r. 8 is mandatory, whether the plaintiff is debarred by his conduct from contesting this election and whether the Civil Court should set aside the election on such irregularity as a defect of notice alone need not be determined in this litigation. Holding then that there is no time provided by any rule as to the period of notice to be given to the new members to meet and proceed to an election, the only question remaining (there is no other question of irregularity raised before us in the appeal, the other questions having been given up) is whether reasonable notice was given to the members of the Board to meet under the Presidentship of the Sub-Divisional Officer to elect their new President? Now as to this, we have the fact that eight out of nine members attended to elect the President and the remaining one explained why he could not attend the meeting. No one objected at the time of the meeting as to the insufficiency of the notice. A clear majority wished the defendant to be the President; the absence of the ninth member could not have affected the result. A suggestion that a few days' extra time for lobbying or log-rolling would be to the advantage of the old President was mentioned but naturally and honorably not pressed by the Vakil of this Court appearing for the respondent. In this view, I hold that the election was validly held with sufficient notice and in conformity with the rules that apply and that the plaintiff, therefore, cannot succeed.

We, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the learned Officiating District Judge and restore that of the learned Munsif dismissing the suit with costs of all the Courts.

Let the record be sent down as early as possible.

Suhrawardy, J.—I agree.

It is not the practice of the Court to stay execution for costs except in a case where it is abundantly clear that there will be no chance of recovering the costs if they are allowed to go unprotected to the person entitled to them under the decree which is the subject-matter of an appeal. [p. 704, col. 2.]

When in an affidavit on an interlocutory application the declarant makes a statement of his belief he must, if the facts are ascertained from another person, give such details of such person as are required by r. 8 of Ch. III of the Patna High Court Rules, Part II. If the facts are ascertained from a document or copy of a document then the declarant must state the source from which the document or the copy was procured and must state his belief as to the truth of such facts. [p. 704, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. L. N. Singh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. C. Manuk, B. B. Lal and S. Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application on behalf of the appellant to England asking that the money deposited in Court to set aside a sale in execution of the respondent's decree for costs amounting to Rs. 61,261 should remain in Court pending the hearing of the appeal to the Privy Council. There was a further execution in respect of an additional sum for costs awarded at a later period amounting to Rs. 31,817. With regard to the first sum the appellant has withdrawn his objection. Therefore the respondent will be entitled to take that sum out of the Court the sale being set aside. With regard to the smaller sum of Rs. 31,817 the execution proceedings have not yet terminated but the appellant contends that the respondent if he receives this money will not be able to re-pay it in the event of the appeal to the Privy Council being successful. In support of that the petition states that the appellant is informed and believes it to be true that the opposite party have not sufficient property over and above the property in dispute which will enable the petitioner to realise his just dues under the decree and costs in case the Privy Council reverses the decree of the High Court. He further says that in the event of the decree being reversed by the Privy Council the petitioner will not be able to realise anything by way of restitution from the opposite party as the petitioner is informed that he has not sufficient property to meet the obligation arising out of the decree in case the High Court's decree is reversed. In that petition the source of the petitioner's information is not stated. The petition, however, is supported by an affidavit signed by one Panchdeo Narayan who describes himself as the karpardaz of the petitioner and states: "I am fully aware of the facts stated in the petition. The facts stated in the petition are true to my knowledge" It is very difficult to know exactly what that affidavit is referring to. The facts stated in the petition are that the petitioner has been informed that the opposite party will not be in a position to refund the money if the appeal to the Privy Council should succeed. It may be that the person who swore the affidavit is aware that the petitioner was so informed but that is not sufficient to entitle the Court to act in a matter of this sort. The rules are clearly laid down in the High Court Rules, Part 11, Ch. III, r. 12 which state that when in an affidavit on an interlocutory application the declarant makes a statement of his belief he shall if the facts are ascertained from another person give such details of such person as are required by r. 8. If the facts are ascertained from a document or copy of a document then he must state the source from which it was procured and shall state his belief as to the truth of such facts. Here the only statement is that the petitioner has been informed of certain things. We are not told where he gets his information and it makes it none the better that somebody has sworn an affidavit saying that the facts alleged in the petition are true. The petition before us and the affidavit are totally inadequate in our opinion to entitle the Court to act in such a case.

But the matter does not rest there for the respondent has himself filed a petition supported by an affidavit in which he states that he has property in Bihar in addition to the property in dispute worth 20 lakhs of rupees and he refers to an admission made by the appellant in 1921 during the course of execution proceedings when the appellant had got a decree from the Trial Court in which the appellant admits that the respondent had at that time property in Bihar worth Rs. 9,85,000. It is quite clear, therefore, that the respondent is not devoid of means and even on the petitioner's own showing he certainly is in a position to restore this sum of Rs. 31,817 if the petitioner should succeed in his appeal to the Privy Council. In our opinion this application should be dismissed with costs.

We wish to add that where a party has been successful in a Court of Appeal and has been awarded his costs it is not the practice of this Court to stay execution for costs except in cases where it is abundantly clear that there will be no chance of recovering the costs if they are allowed to go unprotected to the person entitled to them. This application is dismissed and the order of the 19th May directing that the sum paid into Court should remain there pending the hearing of this application is discharged. The respondent is entitled to his costs of this application. Hearing fee five gold mohurs.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 34, 149, 325—Unlawful assembly—Rioting—Common intention under s. 34, proof of.

Where in a case in which the accused are charged under s. 325 read with s. 149 of the Penal Code, it is not found possible to bring home the offence to the accused with the aid of the provisions of the latter section, a fortiori it would be more difficult to bring home the offence to them with the aid of s. 34 of the Penal Code. In order to bring the accused within the scope of s. 34 it is necessary to come to a definite finding that the accused were acting in furtherance of the common intention of all. [p. 708, col. 2.]

Application in revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Manbhum, Sambalpur, dated the 7th February 1925, modifying that of the Deputy Magistrate, Purulia, dated the 14th November 1924.

Mr. Atul Krishna Roy, for the Petitioners.

Mr. H. L. Nand Keolyar, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision by eleven accused who were tried and convicted under s. 147 of the Indian Penal Code. In addition to the order of conviction under s. 147 passed against all the eleven petitioners, petitioner No. 11 has also been convicted under s. 325 of the Indian Penal Code and petitioners Nos. 1, 4, 5 and 6 under s. 325 read with s. 34 of the Indian Penal Code. The following are the undisputed facts of the case: In July 1914 two brothers Dinu and Panu Bagal executed a simple mortgage of their three-annas share in Chitabdi chak in favour of Bishto, father of petitioner No. 1. In 1918 Dinu and Panu gave darmokarrari lease of certain plots of land in the village to four brothers Sujan, Nitai, Jadu and Ghanu of the prosecution party while some other plots were given in darmokarrari to Narsingh, Banimadhab, Panchanan and Shama Charan. Bisto Charan sued on his mortgage aforesaid making Dinu and Panu, the lessees of 1918, parties to the suit. Usual mortgage-decree was passed and in execution of the decree the decree-holder purchased the property. On the 4th July 1913 the decree-holder purchaser, the father of petitioner No. 1, obtained delivery of possession of the property through Court under O. XXI, r. 95 of the C. P. C. The case of the prosecution was that on the 30th June 1924 the petitioners with others went to the disputed land and ploughed it up and destroyed the paddy seedlings sowed by the four brothers Sujan, Nitai, Jadu and Ghanu; that a quarrel and a fight ensued in which the complainants were chased far out of the plot and Sujan up to a jor tree and they were there belaboured with the result that Ghanu sustained a fractured leg and Sujan a fractured forearm. The defence was that the petitioners were in possession of the land in dispute. It was the complainants' party that trespassed and upon that the petitioners remonstrated, upon which a quarrel arose and the petitioners felt bound in self defence to resist the invasion of their rights by the prosecution party. The First Court held that the mortgage sale having passed the unascertained 3-annas share of the motgagor did not affect the *raiya*ti possession "in *bhag dakh*al" as they had occupancy rights therein. Hence the complainants had the right to be on the land and they sowed paddy thinking that their possession was not affected. He also found that the story of chase was untrue and that it was subsequently introduced to avoid the consequence of law as to right of private defence of property arising from the fact of delivery of possession through the Court. The learned Deputy Magistrate convicted all the accused under s. 147 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced them to six months' rigorous imprisonment except Nitai, petitioner No. 8, who was fined Rs. 200. He also convicted petitioners Nos. 1, 4, 5 and 6 under s. 325 read with s. 149 and sentenced them to six months' rigorous imprisonment. He further convicted Iswar, petitioner No. 11, under s. 325 for giving the lathi blow to Ghanu and sentenced him to six months' rigorous imprisonment, the sentences to run concurrently. On appeal the learned Sessions Judge of Purulia thought that the occupancy rights of the four brothers had not been established and he came to the conclusion that the auction-purchaser obtained possession from the Court, but the parties not being clear as to their rights, the Bagals continued to be in possession and they cultivated the land in 1923 and harvested the crop. He also found as a fact that the Bagals were the residents of the village; that they re mained in actual possession inspite of the delivery of possession to the auction-purchaser up to the date of occurrence under consideration, and that in the circumstances set out by the prosecution, the appellants came in force in order to oust the Bagals from possession and themselves re-take possession. He also found that "the details of the prosecution story are hardly challenged at all and are abundantly proved." Upon this altered finding as to possession, the learned Sessions Judge then proceeded to re-consider the sentences. He reduced the sentence passed against the accused under s. 147 to a fine of Rs. 20 each, in default to one month's rigorous imprisonment, except against Jitu, petitioner No. 4, who injured Bhiku Bagalin with lathi and who was, therefore, sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment. As regards petitioners Nos. 1, 4, 5 and 6, petitioner No. 1 was further fined Rs. 50 and petitioners Nos. 4, 5 and 6 sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment, under s. 325 read with s. 34. Petitioner No. 11 was convicted under s. 325 for having fractured Ghanu's leg and sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment. So far as the conviction and sentence under s. 147 is concerned, I think that on the findings of the two Courts it is not possible for this Court to interfere in revision. The learned Vakil for the petitioners at first urged that the sentence of one month's rigorous imprisonment on petitioner No. 4 should be set aside as there was no such person as Bhiku Bagalin on the record, but it being pointed out to him that evidently it was a mistake for Bidhu Bagalin he did not press that point. As regards the conviction of petitioner No. 11 under s. 325 I feel that this is concluded by findings of facts. With reference to the conviction and sentence under s. 325 read with s. 34, it is urged that the conviction under s. 325 read with s. 34 is illegal and ultra vires and the Trial Court having convicted under s. 325 read with s. 149, the Appeal Court was not entitled to convict the petitioners Nos. 1, 4, 5 and 6 under s. 325 read with s. 34 without coming to a definite finding as to common intention and that in any event separate sentences passed under ss. 147 and 325 read with s. 34 are illegal. Now it is not easy to make out under what circumstances the learned Sessions Judge convicted the petitioners Nos. 1, 4, 5 and 6 under s. 325 read with

s. 34 of the Indian Penal Code. If it is not possible to bring home the guilt to the accused under s. 325 read with s. 149 of the Indian Penal Code one would think that a fortiori it would be more difficult to bring home the guilt with the aid of s. 34 of the Indian Penal Code. I find from his judgment that he observes that "the appellants came prepared for a marpit. They became an unlawful assembly when they all started to chase the mildly protesting Bagals with the common object of assaulting them". Now, the common object suggested in the passage above quoted is different from the common object charged, viz., that of committing mischief and by criminal force or show of criminal force to take possession of the land in dispute. It has been laid down in various judicial pronouncements that in order to bring the accused within the scope of s. 34, it is necessary to come to a definite finding that the accused were acting in furtherance of the common intention of all. The common object charged in this case being quite different and it being found that conviction would not follow under s. 325 read with s. 149 of the Indian Penal Code, I think a conviction under s. 325 read with s. 34 would be scarcely sustainable without a clear finding that the accused Nos. 1, 4, 5 and 6 were acting in furtherance of a common intention.

In the circumstances, I set aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge so far as it relates to the conviction and sentence of petitioners Nos. 1, 4, 5 and 6 under s. 325 of the Indian Penal Code read with s. 34.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 211 OF 1925.

July 11, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Dalal, J. C.

Rai Sahib BISHAMBHAR NATH
TONDON AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 196A, 234, 239—Conspiracy—Charge of cheating—Forgery committed to cheat—Object of conspiracy—Abetment of forgery—Sanction of Local Government—Trial for object of conspiracy not within Court's cognizance—Other objects within Court's cognizance—Omission of one head beyond Court's cognizance, whether affects jurisdiction—Agreement between conspirators sufficient for charge of conspiracy—"Former part" in s. 239, meaning of.

Where the object of a conspiracy is to commit forgery there can be no prosecution for such a criminal conspiracy without the sanction of the Local Government under s. 196A of the Cr. P. C. But this is not so, where the main charge is that of cheating, in which it is not necessary at all to mention, as the object of the conspiracy, forgery committed not for its own sake but in order to cheat a person in a way, in which, if he had known the fact, he would not have parted with the money. [p. 708, col. 2; p. 710, col. 1.]

If cheating is carried out by means of forgery it does not follow that the provisions of s. 196A of the Cr. P. C. would apply. For a prosecution of an offence of forgery no sanction is necessary under s. 196A and no distinction can be drawn between the offence of forgery and the offence of abetment thereof. [p. 710, col. 2.]

Where a trial starts for an object of the conspiracy, which is beyond the cognizance of the Court, and other objects of the conspiracy which are within the cognizance of the Court, the omission of the head, which is beyond the cognizance of the Court, cannot affect the jurisdiction of the Court as regards the rest of the charge. [p. 709, col. 2.]

For a charge of conspiracy only an agreement between the conspirators is sufficient, and an accused person can be tried of all other offences committed in the course of the conspiracy even if those offences are more than three. [p. 710, col. 2.]

The expression "former part" in the direction at the end of s. 239 of the Cr. P. C., that "the provisions contained in the former part of this Chapter shall, so far as may be, apply to all such charges" means the part under the heading "form of charge" prior to the part headed "joinder of charges." Section 234, therefore, will not control the provisions of s. 239 of the Cr. P. C. [p. 711, col. 1.]

In deciding whether a particular series of events do or do not form one transaction within the meaning of s. 239 of the Cr. P. C., the real and substantial test is whether they are so related to one another in point of purpose or as cause and effect or as principal and subsidiary acts, as to constitute one continuous action. Each event must be a link in the chain, and there must be no hiatus or rupture in the sequence. [ibid.]

Appeal against an order of the Special Sessions Judge, Lucknow, dated the 27th March 1925.

Messrs. J. Jackson, R. F. Bahadurji and Jai Krishna Tondon (with him Messrs. Banwari Shankar, H. C. Dutt, Bisheshwar Nath Mhandro and Radhe Krishna Sirivastava), for the Appellants.

Messrs. H. S. Gupta and Shiva Shankar Nath, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The principal appellant in this case Bishambhar Nath Tondon was a khazanchi (treasurer) of the local branch of the Imperial Bank of India. The case for the prosecution is that he wanted to get rich quickly. In this order I shall state the facts as alleged by the prosecution without any indication whether I accept them or not. In this order I am only concerned with the charge on which the appellants were committed. That charge cannot be commented upon until I have stated what the facts, as alleged by the prosecution, are: Like most fools the khazanchi thought that if he had ready cash he could invest it in such a way as to increase it enormously. He was, therefore, out to find out means of obtaining cash in hand for the time being hoping that by the time that the cash had to be refunded he would have made much more money by investment, speculation and other gambling transaction. His position as a khazanchi gave him opportunities to obtain ready cash. The system of high finance is at the bottom, one of purchase and sale. The business of a Bank is what is called accommodation of merchants. Suppose a merchant in Lucknow has sold 1,000 maunds of wheat at Rs. 5 per maund to a merchant in Calcutta and has to be paid Rs. 5,000. He wants to pay money to the cultivators from whom he made the purchase and at the same time the merchant in Calcutta is not ready to give him the sum of Rs. 5,000 before he has seen the colour of the wheat. To accommodate these parties a Bank comes in. The merchant in Lucknow writes out a hundi called in this case a usance bill, requesting the merchant in Calcutta to pay Rs. 5,000 after the lapse of a certain period. The Bank here gives money, which in business parlance is known as discounting the hundi. The word discounting means that the Bank deducts a certain amount out of the money for the help which it has given with ready cash. The merchant here obtains this sum for payment to the cultivators and his profit and by the time the hundi is presented in Calcutta possibly the wheat has reached there and the merchant in Calcutta is ready with money to pay the price of the commodity. This is really legitimate business. The khazanchi of a Bank is supposed to be acquainted with Indian customers and to know how far they may be trusted to pay up the money given to them by the Bank in discounting the hundis. This legitimate means of business may easily lead to illegitimate means to get cash. What the khazanchi is supposed to have done is to get cash not for the purpose of accommodation, but for gambling purposes. To take a concrete example: just after the war the exchange with England fluctuated a great deal. Suppose there was a man who believed in luck and thought that if he had a certain amount of money and purchased sovereigns he could after a month get back many more rupees for the same number of sovereigns. Suppose he procured Rs. 10,000 in a particular month on a certain date by discounting a hundi for that amount to be paid in Calcutta after a month. Here there is no commodity at the back and no desire for honest business. He may invest it in sovereigns, say at the rate of 2s. and 6d. per rupee. If at the end of the month the exchange goes down to 2 shillings he clears a sum of Rs. 2,500. He pays Rs. 10,000 in Calcutta and has a large profit himself. In the meanwhile, however, if luck does not favour him and the exchange has risen to 3s. 4d. at the time when he has to meet the demand of Rs. 10,000 he will have in his pocket only Rs. 7,500. Such a contingency if he is not ready to give out money of his own can only be met by discounting further bills, on the same fraudulent principle. One can easily see that if the speculation and investment went against the khazanchi there will always be a continuous deficit. This continuous deficit will have to be met by fresh bills to be discounted. Such according to the prosecution, has been the case here. It was alleged by the prosecution that the khazanchi formed a conspiracy with others to forge bills, to cheat the Bank by means of such forged bills and to embezzle money.

I shall first of all deal with the conspiracy charge. The charge framed of conspiracy was that between July 1920 and October 1921, at Lucknow, Biswan in the Sitapur District, Calcutta, Cawnpore and other places the appellants agreed with one another and with Bhola Nath Tandon since deceased to do or cause to be done illegal acts. These illegal acts have been detailed in the charge. One was to forge hundis, demand drafts, vouchers and letters and to use them fraudulently and dishonestly as genuine knowing or having reason to believe them to be forged. The second object of the conspiracy stated in the charge was to commit criminal breach of trust by criminally mis-appropriating the money of the Bank of Bengal, afterwards the Imperial Bank of India, contrary to a contract expressed or implied as an agent or broker or khazanchi in respect of the said money. The third object of the conspiracy was stated to be to cheat by giving false opinions as to the financial position and commercial standing of certain firms and their location and as to the existence of other firms knowing them not to be in existence at all and by starting bogus firms and forging usance bills and demand drafts and verifying the same to be genuine knowing them to be forged, and forging receipts of payees and using the name of genuine firms, and forging hundis in their name and forging their signature on vouchers.

Out of the three objects admittedly if the object of the conspiracy is to commit forgery there can be no prosecution for such a criminal conspiracy without the sanction of the Local Government under s. 196A of the Cr. P. C. Offences under ss. 465, 468, 471 are non-cognizable offences and that is why sanction of the Local Government is necessary under cl. (2) of the section. Unfortunately the prosecution omitted to obtain such sanction. This is amazing to me because the prosecution Counsel has told the Court more than once that he moulded the prosecution on the ruling in the case of Abdul Salim v. Emperor (1). If that ruling is read, the necessity of sanction for prosecution for a conspiracy to forge documents will be found to be staring in the face of the reader at every page. However the slip may have been made, it has been made and led to considerable difficulty both in the Sessions Court and here and to a large waste of valuable time.

The Sessions Judge, when his attention was drawn to this want of sanction at a very late stage of the proceedings before him, omitted that object of the conspiracy from the charge that was framed by the Magistrate. It was argued there, and it is again argued here, that this cancellation or omission of a part of the charge necessarily implied a cancellation of the entire charge of conspiracy and that the prosecution should, therefore, fail under that head. It is obvious that if the prosecution fails for criminal conspiracy it must fail of the other charges also because the different appellants have been tried of different charges of abetment of forgery together, because there is the common link between them of the conspiracy. If this common link disappears there could not be a joint trial of different offences committed by different appellants. I have, therefore, to decide a point of importance whether by the omission of one object of the conspiracy from the charge the entire charge of conspiracy fails or not.

No ruling has been discovered by me to meet this case in its entirety. The ruling in Abdul Salim v. Emperor (1) does not deal with this matter because in that case the original charge was only of criminal conspiracy to cheat. There was no charge added of a criminal conspiracy to commit forgery and there was no amendment of the charge subsequently. Section 227 of the Cr. P. C. lays down that any Court may alter or add to any charge at any time before judgment was pronounced or in the case of trials before the Court of Session before the opinions of assessors are expressed. In the present case the amendment was made, though very late in the proceedings before the opinions of the assessors were expressed. On behalf of the defence a ruling of the Calcutta High Court under Act X of 1872 was quoted [Empress v. Porehollah Sheikh (2)]. It was held there by a Bench of that Court that where an accused person is committed to take his trial on specific charges before the Sessions Court the Judge has no power under s. 446 of Act X of 1872 to expunge a charge before calling upon the accused to plead to it. In the present case, however, a separate charge has not been expunged but one of the objects of the conspiracy charge has been deleted. Mr. Justice Mukerji of the Calcutta High Court has not approved of this ruling in Pulin Behary Das v. Emperor (3). In that case there was an application for the withdrawal of charges under ss. 122 and 123, leaving only a charge under s. 121A. The learned Judge observed at page 1136* of the report. "In my opinion the application for withdrawal of the charges to which exception has been taken ought to have been allowed and the Court had inherent power to make the appropriate order. Criminal Courts, no less than Civil Courts, exist for the administration of justice, and Courts of both descriptions have inherent power to mould the procedure, subject to the statutory provisions applicable to the matter in hand, to enable them to discharge their functions as Courts of Justice."

The present case is not similar to the one of Manavala Chetty v. Emperor (4). There the trial began with four charges and it was held by the learned Chief Justice Sir Arnold White that the omission of one charge at a subsequent stage of the proceedings, did not cure the original defect of starting trial for more than three charges. What happened in the present case is that the trial started for an object of the conspiracy which was beyond the cognizance of the Court of Session. At the same time other objects of the conspiracy were within the cognizance of that Court, and I do not think that the omission of one head which was beyond the cognizance of the Court could affect the jurisdiction as regards the rest of the charge.

Surat Bahadur v. Emperor (5) decided by a Bench of this Court was another case quoted on behalf of the defence. In that case one Bhagwati Prasad had been convicted of two offences one of them under s. 474, Indian Penal Code. The charge under s. 474 was framed by the Sessions Judge because in his opinion the accused was committed without the sanction of the Court before whom a particular document was produced and so the commitment under s. 471 was not a proper commitment. This Court held that a Judge's power to alter a charge after commitment was laid down under s. 226 of the Cr. P. C., and was limited to imperfect or erroneous charges. In the opinion of this Court there was nothing erroneous in the charge under s. 471 in that case and it was exactly the offence for which the Sessions Judge had convicted the accused although to save the technical difficulty he had employed another section, nor was the charge imperfect, a word which implied defect in form. It was held that in altering the charge from ss. 471 to 474 the Sessions Judge had acted without jurisdiction. In the present case there was no alteration of the charge. The two heads of criminal conspiracy for which the charge has been maintained were in the charge and one of the heads of the charge was eliminated. The present case, therefore, is distinguishable from the Bench case of this Court where there was no proper commitment on any charge before the Sessions Court.

Similarly it is not the case here that to avoid the necessity of a sanction resort is had to a different section of the Indian Penal Code. Such practice was disapproved of by the Allahabad High Court in Ram Nath v. Emperor (6) and Kohna Ram v. Emperor (7). In the present case the main charge is that of cheating. It was not necessary at all to mention forgery as the object of the conspiracy because forgery also was committed not for its own sake but in order to cheat the Bank and obtain money from it in a way in which, if it had known the fact, it would not have parted with the money. There is no attempt here to circumvent the law regarding sanction. The object of the conspiracy as to cheating was also mentioned from the very beginning. The matter would have been different if commitment had been made on a charge of committing criminal conspiracy for the purpose of forging documents and subsequently on discovering that such a charge required sanction another object that of cheating the Bank had been substituted. I hold that the lower Court was justified in omitting one head of the charge of criminal conspiracy and that the entire charge did not fail in consequence.

Along with the charge of conspiracy there are separate charges of abetment of forgery. The learned Judge of the lower Court has given no reasons why the appellants could not equally well be tried for the offence of forgery along with the offence of the conspiracy. What he has observed in his order of 24th December 1924 is:— "It is also to be noted that the abetment of offence under ss. 467 and 471, Indian Penal Code, does not fall within the scope of s. 196A, cl. (2) like a substantive offence under those sections." The meaning of this sentence it is difficult to understand. For a prosecution of an offence of forgery no sanction is necessary under s. 196A and no distinction can be drawn between the offence of forgery and the offence of abetment thereof.

In this connection the prosecution is on firmer ground. There is a large number of rulings of the Calcutta High Court in support of the view that when there is a charge of conspiracy a prisoner can be tried of all other offences committed in the course of the conspiracy even if those offences are more than three. In Abdul Salim v. Emperor (1) already quoted it was held that the charges under ss. 120B and 420 of conspiracy to cheat between certain dates may be legally joined with individual charges of other distinct offences committed in pursuance of the conspiracy by different members of it on different intermediate dates. In support of the view the Bench quoted three previous rulings of that Court. Barindra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor (8), Amritlal Hazra v. Emperor (9) and Harsha Nath Chatterjee v. Emperor (10). In Pulin Behari Das v. Emperor (3), Harington, J., observed at page 1110*: "The prisoners were charged under ss. 121A, 122 and 123 of the Indian Penal Code. It was argued that a charge under s. 123 could not be legally joined with one under s. 121A. I do not agree with that contention. The charge under s. 121A is that of conspiring to wage war against the King and to deprive him of the sovereignty of British India and overawe by means of criminal force or show of criminal force the Government of India. Now in furtherance of that conspiracy the persons engaged therein may actively conspire or they may collect arms or they may conceal the existence of the conspiracy from the authorities. All these acts, if done, are in furtherance of the one transaction and, therefore, may clearly be charged against these persons under s. 235 of the Cr. P. C., and the prisoners may be tried at one trial for all these offences." In the same case Mr. Justice Mukerji held that where offences charged were committed in the same transaction within the meaning of s. 239 they may all be tried at the same trial (1136*, column 2). Similarly in the case of Sanuman v. Emperor (11), Mr. Justice Stuart observed: "It is not the law that in no circumstances can more than three offences be combined at one trial even if more than three offences have been committed in the same transaction. In deciding whether a particular series of events do or do not form one transaction within the meaning of s. 235 of the Cr. P. C., the real and substantial test is whether they are so related to one another in point of purpose, or as cause and effect, or as principal and subsidiary acts, as to constitute one continuous action. Each event must be a link in the chain, and there must be no hiatus or rupture in the sequence."

Section 239 of the Cr. P. C. as amended on 1st September 1923 lays down that the following persons may be charged and tried together, namely, (d) persons accused of different offences committed in the course of the same transaction. The direction at the end of the section is "and the provisions contained in the former part of this Chapter shall, so far as may be, apply to all such charges." The former part obviously means the part prior to the part headed "joinder of charges." The Chapter XIX "of the charge" is not divided into parts but different subjects have different headings. The first heading is "form of charges" from s. 221 of s. 232 inclusive. Then there is a heading "joinder of charges" and s. 239 falls under this heading. By the former part I understand the meaning to be the part under the heading "form of charge," prior to the part beginning with the heading "joinder of charges." Section 234, therefore, will not control the provisions of s. 239.

There was an ingenious argument advanced by Mr. John Jackson that even the charge as it stands requires sanction because mention is made that cheating was carried out by means of forgery. The charge, however, is of cheating whatever the means may have been employed to effect that cheating. If cheating is carried out by means of forgery it does not follow that the provisions of s. 196A would apply.

Another complaint made was that the charge was vague. In the nature of things a charge of conspiracy would be vague if the defence expects the proof of the conspiracy to be included in the charge. For a charge of conspiracy only an agreement is sufficient, so, in my opinion, it is sufficient to include in the charge the agreement which is alleged to have been arrived at between the conspirators. However, that may be, it cannot be pretended by the defence that any injustice has been done to them. The trial lasted for many months and all the various stages of the conspiracy were unfolded during the trial. It is not submitted here that the defence was in any way confined in meeting the charges disclosed during the trial. It is quite true that an enormous number of documents have been put in by the prosecution and possibly the facts disclosed are bewildering. Personally if I had been running the prosecution I would have either split up the charges into individual charges with short and sharp trials of every one of the appellants separately or confined myself to the one charge of conspiracy without adding individual charges. Another point urged was that the lower Court had held that there were two conspiracies one to cheat and the other between a few members of embezzlement. It was argued that men cannot be jointly charged for two different conspiracies. We have, however, to look at the charges from the point of view of the prosecution and not from the result. The prosecution alleged that there was one conspiracy both to cheat and to commit embezzlement, so the trial as held was for one conspiracy and one conspiracy only. I shall, however, be prepared to do one thing in this appeal. I shall confine my attention entirely to the charge of conspiracy to cheat. I shall order the sentences on the other charges to run concurrently with the sentence of this charge if I hold that the conspiracy is proved; if I hold that the conspiracy is not proved; I shall further hold that the trial of the other charges was improper of all the appellants jointly when there was not a common thread of conspiracy between them. Confining their attention to this one charge the appellants will be better able to meet the case tried to be made out against them by the prosecution. I may also mention another point. In considering the conspiracy I shall confine myself to facts relating to conspiracy during the period of the charge and not earlier. I hope that thereby the facts to be referred to before the Court will be narrowed. Mr. Bahadurji has already argued before me upon one aspect of the case from the point of view of facts that there was no cheating because the agent well knew what was happening and to establish a case of cheating even against a corporation the prosecution ought to point to one particular person who has been imposed upon. In the light of the observation made by me. I hope that Mr. John Jackson and Mr. Bahadurji will argue the case of their particular clients confining themselves to these two points: (1) Whether a conspiracy to cheat did exist, and (2) whether any of their clients took part in it. Possibly as regards the other appellants, Mr. Vikramajit may desire to argue on the general subject of the existence of a conspiracy. I hope that as regards the other represented appellants the learned Counsel will see their way to confine themselves only to the second point whether their clients were members of the conspiracy or not. After three learned Counsel have addressed the Court on the existence or otherwise of the conspiracy I do not think that anything would be left for other Counsel to argue on the subject. After Mr. John K. Jackson and Mr. Bahadurji have addressed the Court with respect to their own clients Mr. Vikramajit will address the Court, after that Mr. Radha Krishna and Mr. Bisheshar Nath Mahendra and Mr. Bhawani Shankar.

When these arguments are completed Counsel for the Crown will give a reply confining himself only to these two points as to conspiracy to cheat and the persons who were members thereof. There will be a right of reply in the order already mentioned by me.

June 12, 1925.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 147—Attempt by Police to arrest persons not engaged in commission of offence—Resistance to arrest—Rioting, conviction for, legality of.

A party of Policemen, on receiving information that certain persons were waiting near a railway line with the intention of robbing a train, arrived at the scene and found the accused and certain other persons, sitting or roaming about near the railway line. The Police attempted to arrest those present and a fight ensued but the accused were eventually secured and taken to the Police Station. They were subsequently charged with and convicted of an offence under s. 147 of the Penal Code:

Held, that the Police had no justification for attempting to arrest the accused and that consequently in resisting the arrest the accused were not guilty of the offence of rioting. [p. 713, col. 2.]

The detention or arrest of members of the public are not matters of caprice but are governed by and must be conducted upon certain rules and principles which the law clearly lays down. To arrest persons without any justification is one of the most serious encroachments upon the liberty of the subject which can well be contemplated. [ibid.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Shahabad, dated the 24th April 1925, affirming that of the Magistrate, Arrah, dated the 25th March 1925.

Messrs. P. C. Manuk and B. P. Varma, for the Petitioners.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This was an application in criminal revisional jurisdiction made by six men. They were tried before an Honorary Magistrate of the First Class at Arrah and were convicted by him of an offence punishable under s. 147, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced each to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six months. The applicants appealed to the Sessions Judge of Sahabad, who on the 24th of April last dismissed their appeal and upheld the convictions and sentences. The matter has now come up before me, a rule having been issued by a Bench of this Court on the 14th of May last. The circumstances in the case are very simple although somewhat unusual.

It would seem that some Police received some sort of information that it was likely that if they, the Police, went to a certain place along the railway line they would discover some people there who, it was said, were probably about to try and rob a train with commendable zeal a party of Police acting upon this information proceeded to the locality indicated and there sure enough they found the applicants and some other men who were, so far as one can gather, sitting or roaming about somewhere near the railway line. It is said that some or perhaps all of them had actually encroached within the fencing or wire which usually runs along the side of the railway marking what I suppose is the railway property; but even if this was so it hardly constitutes an offence for which one would suppose that it was possible for the Police rightly to arrest such individuals. There is no doubt as to what actually took place; when the Police arrived at the place, and I may say that it was at night, they immediately caught hold of these persons who were standing there and endeavoured to arrest them. The applicants and their friends or the persons with whom they were put up a fight; they did not see why they should be arrested; it seems doubtful indeed whether the Police were in uniform and from what I gather they appear to have been in mufti; when the applicants were seized by the Police, they fought; it is perhaps not surprising that they did. At any rate the applicants and others were eventually secured and taken to the Police Station. They were then charged with the offence which I have indicated and were convicted and sentenced in the manner to which I have referred.

Now the learned Counsel who has appeared for the applicants points out that it does not seem that the Police had any right to arrest these persons; and the learned Assistant Government Advocate who has appeared in support of the convictions has not been able to disclose any clear indication as to the powers under which it might be suggested that the Police had the right, under the circumstances to which I have referred, to arrest these individuals it may possibly be, although we cannot say with certainty, that the applicants and their friends were at the locality where they were found for some purpose of a criminal nature; on the other hand, we have no authority for assuming that because a party of persons are in a certain place at a certain time they are simply from those circumstances about to engage in a criminal fact. I must confess that I can see no legal justification for the arrest of these persons by the Police. Whilst I support and shall continue to support to the best of my ability the maintenance of law and order and the powers exercised by the Police when they are properly exercised, I, at the same time, have the utmost respect for the rights of the subject. The detention and arrest of members of the public are not matters of caprice but are governed by and must be conducted upon certain rules and principles which the law clearly lays down. To arrest persons without any justification is perhaps one of the most serious encroachments upon the liberty of the subject which can well be contemplated. In this case, therefore, I have come to the conclusion without the least hesitation that there was no good ground shown for arresting these persons and that the convictions and sentences are bad and must be quashed.

Public Gambling Act (III of 1867), ss. 3, 4, 5, 6—Cauries, whether instruments of gaming—Cauries found in house on search—Presumption of common gaming house—Intention to pass time—Conviction, whether legal.

Where on a search under s. 5 of the Public Gambling Act, cauries are found in a house, there is a presumption that the house was used as a common gaming house, and further that the persons found were present there for the purpose of gambling. [ibid.]

The presumption raised, however, is rebuttable; and when it is shown that the object of the persons was to indulge in a friendly amusement and to pass time, and the idea of making any gain was entirely foreign to the mind of the entire party, the presumption is rebutted, and the persons cannot be convicted of an offence under ss. 3 and 4 of the Public Gambling Act. [p. 714, col. 2; p. 715, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against an order of the District Magistrate, Lucknow, dated the 13th March 1925, upholding that of the District Magistrate, First Class, Lucknow, dated the 16th December 1924.

Mr. Ali Zaheer, for the Applicants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under s. 439 of the Cr. P. C. The applicants are 20 in number. They have been convicted by a Special Magistrate of the First Class, exercising jurisdiction in the City of Lucknow, under ss. 3 and 4 of the Public Gambling Act, 1867. One of the applicants, Chhote Lal, has been sentenced to a fine of Rs. 50 and the other applicants to a fine of Rs. 10 each. The applicants were dissatisfied with the order of the Trial Court and challenged it by an application in revision presented to the District Magistrate of Lucknow. The learned District Magistrate rejected that application. Hence this application before me.

On the night following the 11th November there was a katha at the house of Chhote Lal applicant in the early part of the evening. The katha was followed by a dinner in the same house. A large number of persons were invited by Chhote Lal both to the katha and to the dinner and a large number of persons took part in both. The dinner proceeded for a long time and did not come to an end until sometime between 10 and 11 p. m. In those days a sort of curfew order was in force in the City of Lucknow and, as the learned Magistrate in the Trial Court observes, people were forbidden to go about after 10 p. m. The congregation assembled at the house of Chhote Lal naturally, in the circumstances, prepared itself to pass the night in Chhote Lal's house. At 2 a. m. in the morning the Police made a raid of the house under a warrant issued by a competent Magistrate and arrested the applicants under s. 5 of the Public Gambling Act. Some cauries were also found by the Police on the spot but nothing else of any incriminating nature.

It was first contended on behalf of the applicants that cauries were not instruments of gaming and reliance was placed upon a decision of Mr. Justice Aikman in the case of Queen-Empress v. Bhawani (1). That decision entirely supports the contention but is no longer good law. By U. P. Act I of 1917 the definition of "common gaming house" in the Act of 1867 was amended and within the substituted definition is included the following:—

"Instruments of gaming include any article used as a means or appurtenance of, or for the purpose of carrying on or facilitating gaming". I have no doubt in my mind that cauries well fall within the definition of instruments of gaming as set forth above.

It was next argued that it was not proved that Chhote Lal kept or used the house for any profit or gain, such a proof being necessary to constitute the house a common gaming house within the definition in the Act. It is true that there is no such proof on the record of the case. In answer to this argument the prosecution, however, relies on the presumption raised by s. 6 of the Public Gambling Act. I am of opinion that that presumption is applicable to the facts of the present case. I have already found that the cauries are instruments of gaming. It is proved, indeed it is admitted, that they were found in Chhote Lal's house at the time of the Police raid. It is also admitted that Chhote Lal's house was searched under the provisions of s. 5 of the Public Gambling Act. It follows that there is a presumption that Chhote Lal's house was used as a common gaming house and further that the persons found therein were there present for the purpose of gambling. Within the presumption that Chhote Lal's house was used as a common gaming house is included the ingredient that he kept or used the house for profit or gain.

It was lastly urged that the presumption is rebuttable and is rebutted in the present case. That it is rebuttable is not disputed. The real question, therefore, which I have to decide is whether on the facts found the presumption in question is rebutted. I am of opinion that it is. In considering this aspect of the case I take into account the fact that there is no proof on the record that Chhote Lal stood to gain by the recreation in which the people at his house indulged after they had decided to stay in the house over the night. It also follows from the circumstances stated above that there was no intention on the part of those persons to gamble for the purpose of any gain. As observed by Pandit Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. C., in the case of Ram Shanker v. Emperor (2), "their object was merely to indulge in a common friendly amusement" and I may add with a view to pass time and the idea of making any gain was entirely foreign to the mind of the entire party. I, therefore, accept the application, set aside the convictions and sentences of each of the applicants and direct that the fine, if paid, will be refunded forthwith.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 193—Perjury—False answers to questions which witness could not have been compelled to answer—Offence.

Where a person answers questions put to him in a judicial proceeding after he has sworn to tell the truth and the answers are not true, he commits perjury; even though the questions which he has answered were such as he could not have been compelled to answer. [p. 716, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Arrah, dated the 1st June 1925, summarily dismissing an appeal against an order of the Magistrate, Arrah, dated the 30th May 1925.

Mr. P. C. Roy, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Niamutulla, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Bucknill, J.—This was an application made in criminal revisional jurisdiction. It was made by one Musammât Tunia, a young woman, who was convicted by a Magistrate of the First Class at Arrah of an offence punishable under the provisions of s. 193 of the Indian Penal Code, that is to say, with having committed perjury in the course of a judicial proceeding. She was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six months and to pay a fine of Rs. 200, and in default of payment thereof to serve a further term of two months' rigorous imprisonment. From her conviction and sentence the applicant appealed to the Sessions Judge of Shahabad; but on the 1st of June last the appeal was dismissed summarily.

The circumstances which have led up to the prosecution of this woman and her conviction are certainly somewhat peculiar. It would seem that at the end of July last year a burglary took place in the house of a lady residing in the town of Arrah. A man named Tara Prasad, who is in the employment of this lady, reported the burglary to the Police; and, upon being asked whether he had any suspicion as to by whom the offence had been committed, he is said to have replied that he thought that it was not improbable that one Ramsakal Singh of Gonouli might have been concerned in the matter. He added that this Ramsakal Singh lived in the same mahalla where the burglary had been perpetrated, that his (Ramsakal's) uncle was on bad terms with the lady whose house had been broken into and that Ramsakal himself was the associate of evil persons.

As a result of what had taken place at the Police Station it would seem that on the 27th of August last this Ramsakal instituted proceedings against Tara Prasad charging him with having committed an offence punishable under the provisions of s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code, that is to say, with having committed defamation. Tara Prasad was put on his trial; we are informed at the Bar that he was eventually acquitted. What defence he put forward I do not know; but it would seem that, amongst them, must have been one which contemplated some plea in the nature of justification; for he called as a witness in his defence the applicant here. So far as I can gather his object in calling this woman was to show that she was a woman of easy virtue and had been the kept mistress of the man Ramsakal Singh, and I suppose that it would have been urged that if it could have been shown that Ramsakal Singh had kept company with a woman of ill-repute, the suggestion made by Tara Prasad in the statement which he made to the Police, when reporting the burglary, that Ramsakal was the associate of evil companions might have been held in some measure to be justifiable. Now, when the applicant was put into the witness-box, she does not appear to have realized that it was in no way incumbent upon her to answer any questions which might have reflected upon her own probity or virtue and it is somewhat remarkable to notice that no attempt at protecting her from having to reply to questions of that nature appears to have been offered to her by the officer who was trying the case. On the other hand it would seem that she was interrogated very fully as to her morality and as to her immoral association with Ramsakal Singh; how such a proceeding could have been allowed unless she had been (which she was obviously not) willing to assist Tara Prasad by blackening her own character, it is difficult to understand. However, the fact remains that she was asked a variety of questions of the character which I have mentioned and that she answered in a manner protective of her own character. There is, however, not the least doubt that a number of her answers were not true; she had been put upon her oath and it is, of course, needless for me to point out that if one answers questions put to one in a judicial proceeding when one has sworn to tell the truth and if one's answers are not true, one commits perjury, whether those questions which one answers are questions which should have been or could have been properly asked. After the applicant had given her evidence, which I may point out was, of course, not in favour of Tara Prasad, she was eventually charged as I have mentioned above, tried, convicted and sentenced. I think that it must be admitted that the circumstances were extremely difficult and painful for the applicant, she was placed in an unenviable position and, no doubt, was completely ignorant of her right to refuse to answer questions which would reflect upon her own character and had the unpleasant alternative either of telling the truth and admitting that she was a loose woman or, as she did, of telling untruths and making herself out better than perhaps she really was.

It is, however, I think, not unimportant to observe the actual averments which were made against her which formed the basis of the charge of perjury brought against her. Although it is true that superficially some of these questions do not appear in themselves to be such as if answered truthfully would have thrown any discredit upon the applicant's character, yet, on further examination, they will all be found to be connected more or less closely with the illicit association which it was being attempted to be proved had existed between the applicant and Ramsakal Singh. The first untrue statement which she is alleged to have made is that she did not know this man at all. There can be no doubt from the evidence of at least six witnesses and from documentary evidence as well that this was not true. The second statement was that she had never stated that Ramsakal Singh, this particular individual, used to visit her frequently. This again was, undoubtedly, not a true statement. The third statement, in which she is alleged to have perjured herself, was that she denied that the person named Ramsakal against whom and herself a woman named Dularia in 1923 had brought some criminal proceeding was the same Ramsakal as that concerned in the case which was being brought against Tara Prasad. Again there can be no doubt that this statement was not true. The fourth question which she is said to have answered untruthfully was that she denied that when her house had been entered for the purpose of executing some legal purposes Ramsakal had been found there in her company. This, however, again was undoubtedly shown to be a falsehood. The fifth and the last answer which she is said to have made falsely is the point blank avowal that she was not the mistress of this Ramsakal. The Magistrate has stated that the evidence of all the witnesses for the defence and indeed of the main prosecution witnesses shows that this statement was, as he terms it, "a deliberate lie". There can, therefore, be no doubt whatever that this woman in the witness-box made statements which were untrue and which she knew to be untrue. There are, however, obviously reasons for coming to the conclusion that her position was allowed to be one which it ought not to have been allowed to be. I think that she ought to have been informed that it was in no way incumbent upon her to reply to questions her answers to which might, if true, have reflected upon her moral character.

Under these circumstances, although there undoubtedly has been a commission of the offence to which I have referred, it seems to me that the sentence is altogether too severe. We are informed by the learned Advocate who appears for the applicant that the applicant has already served 21 days in jail. I am satisfied, in my own mind, that this is an ample punishment for the offence committed under the remarkable circumstances to which I have drawn attention. Whilst, therefore, affirming the conviction, the sentence of imprisonment which was passed upon the applicant will be reduced to that period of imprisonment which she has already served. The fine of Rs. 200 will be remitted and if it has already been paid it must be refunded.

Ross, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH was delivered by

Robinson, C. J.—The question referred for decision of a Full Bench is: "Except in the case of widows and divorcees, can a girl under 20 years contract a valid marriage without the consent, either express or implied, of her parents or guardians under Burmese Buddhist Law?"

The question is one of very great importance, but it is not one which, to my mind, presents any real difficulty.

In the case of Queen-Empress v. Ne U (1), it was held by the Special Court that by Buddhist Law a man cannot contract a valid marriage with the minor without her guardian's consent, and that sexual intercourse with the minor without such consent is 'illicit intercourse' within the meaning of s. 366, Indian Penal Code. That ruling was followed in King-Emperor v. Nga Po Saw (2).

In the case of Crown v. Chan Mya (3),

(2) U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I, 328.

three questions were referred to a Full Bench: (1) Can a Burmese Buddhist minor girl, under any circumstances, contract a valid marriage without the consent of her guardian? (2) If a Burmese Buddhist girl under 16 years of age elopes with a lover of her own free-will intending to co-habit with him, is the resulting sexual intercourse necessarily illicit? (3) Does s. 366 of the Indian Penal Code apply to a case in which a minor girl, at the time of the kidnapping from lawful guardianship, intends to co-habit of her own free-will with the kidnapper? The last of these three questions was the only one that was necessary for the decision of the appeal. Irwin, J., referring to ss. 21, 22 and 23, Book VI of the Manukye, held that the real test was the intention of the parties, "and that if the girl is steadfastly determined to marry her lover, and he continues of the same mind, the rights of the guardian must give way before accomplished facts." Fox, J., merely concurred; but Thirkell White, C. J., while concurring as to the answer to the third question, declined to express an opinion on the first and second questions. He said that the questions had not been fully argued, and that he would not like to commit himself to an opinion on these important questions of Buddhist Law without hearing arguments on both sides and without a full examination of all the texts bearing on the points. No reference was made in that decision to the Rajabala or to s. 28, Ch. VI of the Manukye.

In the case of King-Emperor v. Nga Ni Ta (4), Adamson, J. C., held with reference to this question of marriage, "It appears to be the opinion of two of the Honourable Judges of the Chief Court that the test is the real intention of the parties, and that if the intention is to marry, the marriage is an accomplished fact from the date of elopement. I cannot but think that this interpretation of the law would appear to be rather startling to Buddhist parents, and I doubt whether any would be found who would admit it." He pointed out that the provision of the dhammathats as regards three elopements is obsolete and would not receive countenance at the present day.

In King-Emperor v. Nga Nge (5), Irwin, J., as Judicial Commissioner, adhered to (5) U. B. R. (1904-06) Penal Code, 17; 2 Cr. L. J. 476.

the view previously expressed by him in Chan Mya's case (3).

I myself in the case of Maung Chit Pe v. Ma Tin (6) dealing with the question as to whether the consent of parents is essential to the validity of the marriage of a minor who elopes, doubted the correctness of the decision in Chan Mya's case (3).

That decision is thus the only one to support that view of the question.

There are decisions to the contrary, and doubts have been thrown on the correctness of the decision in Chan Mya's case (3) on two subsequent occasions.

There is no doubt that the dharmathas contain a large number of texts relating to the rights and duties of parents and guardians, and that the control that they exercise over minors is a distinct and marked feature of Burmese Buddhist Law; and to hold that a minor girl could, by the exercise of her unguided impulse by running away with a lover, absolutely set at naught and take no account of the control of her parents or guardians is entirely contrary to a very prominent provision of Burmese Buddhist Law.

The dharmathas, no doubt, enjoin upon parents and guardians the necessity to marry minors at the age of 15 or 16 so as to prevent their falling into sin, but they expressly, as it seems to me, maintain the position that even though parents or guardians do not pay any regard to the rule enjoined upon them, it is only when the girl has reached the age of 20 years that she has a right to contract a valid marriage without their consent.

In Ch. VI of s. 33, Kinwun Mingyi's Digest, Vol. II, we find a passage from the Rajabala, which runs as follows:—"After her attaining the age of twenty years a woman may marry a man of her choice although her guardians may not approve of the marriage." The reason is that her guardians did not give her in marriage when she arrived at the marriageable age.

None of the authorities that have been quoted have referred to s. 28 of Volume VI of the Manukye. It deals with the case of women who are under the protection of their parents; and it provides that "as regards the eight women above noted, if their protectors do not give them in marriage to a proper person and they shall willingly have connection with a young man, provided they are above twenty years of age, let them have a right to live with the man of their choice. Why is this? because their protector watched them without regard to their desires." Earlier, it lays down as follows: "If carnal knowledge be had of any of these eight classes of women with their consent, there is no punishment in a future state. If the person under whose care they be, shall not give consent, they shall not be claimed as a wife. Why is this? because their protector is not willing."

Having regard to these provisions and having regard to the position accorded to parents and guardians with reference to control over the children, especially in the matter of their marriage, there can, in my opinion, be no doubt that no minor girl under the age of twenty can contract a valid marriage without the consent or against the will of her parents or guardians, or the relation under whose protection she is living.

The 21st section shows that the parents can reclaim the daughter, and that the man with whom she had eloped, even if she had ten children by him, has no right to say that she is his wife; but it is equally clear that the consent of the parents or guardians may be implied, and the lack of it be made good by subsequent conduct.

Thus in the 22nd section it provides that if a minor, who has eloped subsequently returns to the village and lives with the man, and has children by him, openly and to the knowledge of her parents or guardians, and they do not enforce their rights of reclaiming the girl and separating her from the man without unreasonable delay, they no longer have the power of reclaiming the girl. This, no doubt, is that the consent is to be implied from their conduct, and that the consent, though subsequently given or implied, will convert the connection into a valid marriage which the Courts would, no doubt, recognise with effect from the time of that elopement. It may, therefore, be that although there was no valid marriage to start with, the connection may be converted into a valid marriage by the consent, express or implied, of the parents or guardians given to it afterwards.

For these reasons I would answer the question referred in the negative.

N. H. Reference answered in negative.

The Cr. P. C. being silent as to whether two counter-criminal cases should be tried simultaneously or one after the other, no absolute rule of law can be laid down and each case must be decided according to its requirements. [p. 720, col. 2.]

If the complainant in one of the two counter-cases wishes that his case may be taken up after the case against him has been decided, on the ground that in the case against him a large number of witnesses have been examined and he does not want to be subjected to his adversary's cross-examination in the other case in which he is the complainant, it will serve the ends of justice if the case against him is disposed of first, as it is not fair to force him, so long as he is the accused in one case, to throw himself open to cross-examination in the case in which he is the complainant. [ibid.]

Case-law discussed.

Criminal revision against an order of the Additional District Magistrate, 24-Parganas, dated the 30th March 1925, confirming that of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Diamond Harbour, dated the 3rd March 1925.

Mr. Narendra Kumar Basu and Babu Jatindra Nath Sanyal, for the Petitioner.

Babu Santosh Kumar Bose, for the Opposite Party.

Mr. Khondkar, (Deputy Legal Remembrancer), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule has been issued on two grounds; first, why the case should not be transferred from the file of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Diamond Harbour to the file of some other competent Magistrate, and, secondly, why the case in which the petitioner is the complainant should not be postponed pending the hearing of the case in which the petitioner is the accused.

With regard to the first ground, we have gone through all the papers in connection with this litigation which has been hanging for a long time mainly on account of the conduct of the petitioner and we do not think that any ground has been made out for our interference on that ground. The allegations made against the Trying

Magistrate have all been denied; and there is one fact which makes it undesirable that the case should be transferred from the file of the Sub-Divisional Officer. An application was made previously to this Court for the transfer of the case in which the petitioner is the accused from the file of the Sub-Divisional Officer. That application was refused with the result that the case against the petitioner will be tried and is being tried by the Sub-Divisional Officer. It will not be desirable that the case in which the petitioner is the complainant should be tried by another Magistrate.

With regard to the second ground there have been several decisions of this Court which cannot at first sight be easily reconciled. The petitioner and the opposite party have been fighting over a piece of land. There was fight between them on the 22nd November 1924. The opposite party lodged a complaint on that day before the Kulpi Police charging the petitioner and his men with rioting and causing grievous hurt. On the 25th November 1924, the petitioner filed a complaint before the Deputy Magistrate of Diamond Harbour charging the opposite party with the same offence. The matter was sent to the Police for enquiry and it appears that both the cases were sent up by the Police.

It appears that both the cases were fixed for hearing on the 26th February. On that date some witnesses were examined in the case against the petitioner and the case in which the petitioner was the complainant was adjourned to the 3rd March. The learned Trial Magistrate in his explanation submits that the complainants in both cases wanted their cases to be taken up first. As this was physically impossible he took up the case against the petitioner first and as he had no time on that date to take the petitioner's case it was adjourned to the 3rd March. On the 3rd March the petitioner made several applications one of which was that the trial of his case might be adjourned till the disposal of the case against him. The application was rejected by the Sub-Divisional Officer. The petitioner thereupon moved the District Magistrate of 24-Parganas for transfer of both the cases from the file of the Sub-Divisional Officer and in the alternative for stay of the case in which he was the complainant pending the disposal of the case against him. The learned District Magistrate overruled these objections and the petitioner obtained this Rule.

The first case that has been placed before us dealing with this point is the case of Bachu Mollah v. Sia Ram Singh (1). There are some very emphatic expressions of opinion by Petheram, C. J., and the practice of having counter-cases tried together is strongly condemned. This decision was not considered as good law by a Bench consisting of three Judges in the case of Queen-Empress v. Chandra Bhuiya (2) and it was distinguished or its authority attempted to be belittled by the fact that in the case of Bachu Mollah v. Sia Ram Singh (1), the learned Judges did not base their decision upon the opinion there expressed and though the Rule was issued upon that ground it was ultimately discharged. In the case of Queen-Empress v. Chandra Bhuiya (2) also though the learned Judges did not accept the dictum in Bachu Molla's case (1) they did not interfere with the procedure adopted by the Trial Court on the ground that the accused was not prejudiced and that it was a mere irregularity which had occasioned no failure of justice. These cases may be distinguished because the question arose for consideration in them after the decision of the cases. The question arose for consideration in them after the conclusion of the cases and the final orders passed in them did not rest on the conflicting views taken. The point has arisen before us with reference to pending cases. In Garibulla Akanda v. Sadar Akanda (3), the learned Judges were of opinion that two cross-cases should not be heard at one and the same time and the evidence in one should not be taken into consideration in the other case. It does not appear from the report that the cases above cited were placed before their Lordships. In Judhisthir Gope v. Sheikh Samir (4), it was held that cross-cases should be tried one after the other. The peculiar feature of that case was that one of the cases had already reached the final stage whereas very little was done in the other case. In Sheikh Bahatur v. Nobadali (5) decided by the Criminal Bench dealing with undefended cases it was held that counter-cases should be tried simultaneously and contemporaneously but should be dealt with wholly separately from each other, each on its own merits and upon facts and circumstances appearing therein; the judgment in two cases being pronounced, if possible, after both the trials are over. There is an unreported case (Criminal Revision Case No. 662 of 1919 decided by Sanderson, C. J., and Duval, J., on the 27th August 1919) in which the view expressed in Bachu Molla's case (1) was accepted. In this state of the case-law we feel that there is no authority which is absolutely binding upon us. The Code is silent with regard to the procedure to be adopted in such circumstances. It should not, therefore, be laid down as an absolute rule of law that a particular course must be adopted. Each case has to be decided according to its requirements. In the present case the petitioner wants that his case should be taken up after the case against him has been decided. He apprehends that as an accused in the case against him he cannot be cross-examined but as a complainant he will be subjected to cross-examination by his adversary. The law does not allow an accused person to be cross-examined and we do not think that it will be proper that he should be compelled to place himself in the box for examination, though not in the capacity of an accused person. In the cases that have been decided and to which we have referred grievance was made by one of the parties as to simultaneous or separate trial of the cases. In some cases a party wanted that his case should be tried simultaneously with the cross-case against him and he was willing to take the risk of his being cross-examined in his case. The petitioner in this case does not want to run that risk and it is not fair to force a person in the position of an accused to throw himself open to cross-examination by the other side. Furthermore, in the present case we find that 16 witnesses have been examined in the case against him. We think, therefore, that it will serve the ends of justice if we direct that the case against the petitioner should be disposed of first and then the petitioner's case, if he so wishes, be taken up, and we order accordingly.

The Rule is made absolute to this extent. Let the record be sent down at once.

Petitioner.

Mr. K. Rajah Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit as originally framed was based on the liability arising out of a promissory note executed by defendants Nos. 1 to 3. The petitioner has been added as 4th defendant as being the transferee of the debtor's liability, and he seeks to have the order making him a party set aside in these proceedings under s. 116, C. P. C.The addition of a party under O. I., r. 10 is ordinarily a matter within the discretion of the Court trying the suit, and an erroneous exercise of discretion in a matter ofprocedure should not be regarded as something done illegally in the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction. Sitaramaya v. Ramapaya (1) is an authority of a Single Judge of this Court for the view that even in such cases the High Court can interfere in revision, but I respectfully doubt its correctness, and I think that the law will soon make it clear that that view was wrong, if the recommendations of the Civil Justice Committee are accepted.But in the present case the liability of the petitioner under his sale-deed and the liability of defendants Nos 1 to 3 under the promissory note are quite distinct and prima facie there would appear to be here not only a misjoinder of parties, but a mis-joinder of causes of action in which case a Bench of this Court has held in Aru-nachalam Chettyar v. Arunachalam Chettyar (2) that a Court of Revision should interfere unless and until the law is amended. I think I am bound by that decision.But I find that besides adding the petitioner as a party to the suit, the lower Court allowed the plaintiff to amend the plaint by adding a paragraph in which this petitioner's liability as a transferee of the contractual liability of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 is put in issue. The petitioner has not asked this Court to interfere with the order of the lower Court permitting this alteration of the character of the suit, and I do not think it necessary to declare that the trial should not be allowed to proceed in the manner permitted by the Trying Court. In *Deb Narain Dutt v. Ram
Sadhan Mandal* (3) and *Ajudhia Nath v.
Anant Das* (4), the liability of a transferee of a debtor's liability was held to be a question on which the Court could adjudicate without referring the plaintiff to a separate suit. In para. 7 of the defendant's written statement he has raised a question of estoppel which will have to be disposed of in the suit. It cannot be decided in these proceedings.The civil revision petition is, therefore dismissed with costs.

Proper custody, production from, proof of.*

A chitta relating to a private partition among certain persons of certain property and purporting to be more than 30 years old was produced in Court by an officer of the Collectorate who stated that the document had been handed over to him by the record keeper to be produced in Court:

Held, that the genuineness of the document could not be presumed under s. 90 of the Evidence Act inasmuch as (a) there was nothing to show that the document was actually in the custody of the Collectorate before it was produced in Court, and
(b) there was nothing to show that the custody of the Collectorate was proper custody within the meaning of the section. [p. 722, col. 2.]

jee and Kebati Mohan Chatterjee, for the

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—These two Appeals Nos. 328 and 329 of 1924 arise out of two suits. The first suit out of which Appeal No. 329 arises was a suit for partition of a certain howlah and the suit out of which the second appeal arises was a suit for declaration of title and for recovery of possession on the basis of a previous partition of the property in 1212 by virtue of a certain chitta. With regard to the first suit, it was dismissed by the First Court on the ground that the property had already been partitioned. The lower Appellate Court held that no previous partition had been proved and made a preliminary decree for partition. With regard to the second suit the First Court decreed it on the finding that there was a previous partition and, therefore, the chitta of 1212

B. S. on which the plaintiff in that suit relied was genuine. The Second Court dismissed the suit finding that there had been no previous partition. The defendant in the first suit who is the plaintiff in the second suit has appealed to this Court against both the decrees.

It will be seen that the decision of the second suit would depend on the view to be taken of the first suit, for clearly if we hold that the decision of the first Appellate Court is correct, then the order in the second appeal will also be correct. I would, therefore, deal, first of all, with Appeal No.
328 of 1924, which is a suit for partition.

The first point that has been argued by the learned Advocate for the appellant is that the Judge was wrong because he refused to apply the presumption of genuineness under s. 90 of the Evidence Act to a certain chitta of 1212 B. S. On the ground that it had not been proved that this chitta had been produced from proper custody, I have no hesitation in holding that the Judge was quite right in the view he has taken, namely, that it had not been proved that the chitta had been produced from proper custody. The custody alleged by the defendant was that of the Collectorate.
Now in the first place there is no evidence to clearly show that this document had been in the custody of the Collectorate. An Officer of the Collectorate was examined and he stated that the record-keeper had given him this document to produce in Court. He himself was neither the record-keeper nor an officer of the record-room, and the document had not been in his custody. All he proved was that the record-keeper had given him the document to be produced in Court; that does not certainly prove that this document was actually in the custody of the Collectorate and the learned Judge was quite right in the conclusion he came to on this point. Then there is a further fact that even if it be admitted for the sake of argument that this document was produced from the Collectorate there is nothing to show that the custody of the Collectorate was a proper custody. The document in questions is a chitta relating apparently to a private partition among certain persons of certain property. Normally there is no reason for its being in the Collectorate and, therefore, normally the Collectorate could not be considered the proper custodian of this document; an endeavour had been made by the defendant-appellant to prove that this document was filed in the Collectorate in 1865 in connection with a petition for registration of their howlah. The learned Judge points out and I may incidentally note that this is purely a question of fact that this document is not included in the list of documents which were filed in 1865 at the time when the petition for registration of the howlah was made. Mr. Roy has endeavoured to persuade us that the record was not in proper order and he seems to suggest that there has been some change in a certain document, namely, Ex. 2, a list of papers which was filed with the application for registration. Now this ground of appeal finds no place whatever in the twenty-nine grounds of appeal in this case. It is a ground which depends on question of facts and no notice whatever had been given of it to the opposite party. Moreover it is a remarkable fact that this suggestion was never made in the Court of First Appeal. Had there been any substitution or suspicious change in the document obviously the matter would have suggested itself to the learned Vakil who conducted the appeal in the lower Court. Mr. Roy then urged that the parties have been in separate possession of this property ever since 1212 B. S. and he argued that the learned Judge was wrong in saying that nothing could be inferred from that circumstance this way or that way. As a matter of fact the learned Judge in dealing with this point was considering not the separate possession of the whole of the property by different co-sharers, but was referring to the separate possession of certain shares of the homestead by the owners and I am not prepared to say that any inference can be drawn necessarily from the fact that the parties had been in separate possession of their shares of the homestead for many years that there must have been a partition of the whole property.

Then Mr. Roy referred us to a large number of documents in the case in which reference is made to a partition and he seems to argue, if I understand him rightly, that the only inference that the Judge could legally draw from a reference to these documents is that there had been a previous partition. I am not prepared to accept this contention. The learned Judge has so far as I can see dealt with every document in the case, and it is not contended by Mr.

Roy that in this case he has wrongly considered the terms of any of these documents. After a very careful consideration of all the documents produced by both the parties, he has come to the finding of fact, namely, that there was no previous partition. Whether I should come myself to the same finding if it were open to me to go into the facts, I am not prepared to say. Possibly I might not have; but the first Appellate Court was the Judge of facts and we are not sitting in a Court of second appeal able to deal with questions of fact. On consideration of all the evidence he came to a certain finding of fact and he cannot be said to have arrived at this finding without taking into consideration the evidence before him or to have wrongly construed any document that was before him.

For these reasons, the appeals fail and are, therefore, dismissed with costs.

A final order within the meaning of s. 109 of the C. P. C. is an order which finally decides any matter which is directly at issue in the case in respect of the rights of the parties.

An order extending the time for presenting an appeal under s. 5 of the Limitation Act is not a "final order" within the meaning of s. 109 of the C. P. C., and is not, therefore, open to appeal to the Privy Council.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council; and the only question which we have to decide is whether the order complained of is a final order within the meaning of s. 109 of the C. P. C. The order to which objection is taken in substance extended the time for presenting an appeal to this Court under s. 5 of the Limitation Act. A final order within the meaning of the section is an order which finally decides any matter which is directly at issue in the case in respect to the rights of the parties. We quite agree that if we had refused the application made to us under s. 5 of the Limitation Act, that refusal would have operated as a dismissal of the appeal, and subject to the other provision of the section the order would be appealable not indeed as a final order but as "a decree passed on appeal." But where time is allowed under statutory sanction, and the appeal is admitted, the case obviously stands on a different footing. We have not decided, finally or otherwise, any of the matters in controversy between the parties in the litigation. All that we have done is to remove the bar under the Limitation Act, thereby enabling this Court to take cognizance of the appeal and to decide the rights of the parties. We must accordingly refuse the application with costs. Hearing fee five gold mohurs.

A mortgage suit was decreed ex parte but the stipulated rate of interest was not allowed from the date of the institution of the suit. After the preliminary decree was signed the defendant applied under r. 13 of O. IX of the C. P. C. to have the matter re-opened. The plaintiff preferred an appeal against the decree with regard to the dismissal of his claim for interest from the date of the institution of the suit. The appeal was allowed and the Appellate Court passed a fresh decree in lieu of the decree passed by the Trial Court. Thereafter the defendant's application to set aside the ex parte decree was rejected by the Trial Court on the ground that the decree sought to be set aside had ceased to exist and had merged in the decree of the Appellate Court.

Held, that the defendant's application under r. 13 of O. IX of the C. P. C. was rightly dismissed inasmuch as there was no decree of the Trial Court in existence which could be set aside.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—An ex parte decree was passed in a mortgage suit on the 5th December 1923. The suit was decreed in full but the stipulated rate of interest was not allowed from the date of the institution of the suit. After the preliminary decree was signed on the 12th December 1923 and on the same day the petitioner applied under O. IX, r. 13 to have the matter re-opened. Meantime on the 22nd January 1924 the decree-holders preferred an appeal to this Court with regard to the dismissal of their claim for interest from the date of the institution of the suit. On the 16th July 1924 that appeal was allowed and a decree was passed, so far as is material in these terms: "It is ordered and decreed that the decree of the lower Courts be and the same is hereby set aside and in lieu thereof it is hereby declared that there is due and owing the sum of Rs. 2,40,429-12-3 on account of principal and so much on account of costs" and interest was allowed as mentioned in the decree. On the 1st November 1924 the application under O. IX, r. 13 came up for hearing. This was dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge on the ground that there was no decree against which the application could be directed and no decree which could be set aside. He accordingly dismissed the application on this ground. Against this dismissal this Rule was granted and we were referred to a recent decision reported as *Kalimuddin Ahammad v. parte decree and notwithstanding the decree of this Court he was entitled to raise them. It seems to us that that case stands as a decision upon the particular facts for in that case the appeal to the High Court had been dismissed as it could not proceed owing to the death of one of the respondents her heirs not having been brought on the record. But the matter is different here. Moreover there are no merits and the petitioner merely delayed with a view to avoid payment of her just dues which she had really admitted by asking adjournments in order that she might raise money elsewhere for the discharge of the mortgage.

Under the circumstances, it would be deplorable if we are to aid her in her delaying tactics by acceding to her prayer.

JUDGMENT.

Coutts-Trotter, C. J.—In this case the plaintiffs are the owners of an agraharam village in the sense that they own both the melvaram and the kudivaram rights. In the year 1909, there was a grant of the kudivaram right to the 1st and 2nd defendants and in consideration for that, they promised to pay a rent and they also promised to pay what is described as nazarana to the landlords and that may be roughly described as a premium for the granting of the kudivaram which no doubt was in perpetuity. They gave a promissory note for the amount and the question is whether the debt—because it, undoubtedly, was a debt—was a mere personal debt affecting to the makers of the promissory note or whether it is a charge on the land. In the view that we take of this case the further question, which arose at the trial, viz., whether the 3rd and 4th defendants were bona fide purchasers for value without notice, does not arise. It is, no doubt, true that there is a direct decision in England: Shepherd v. Beetham (1), a decision of Malins, V. C., which treats a premium as creating a lien upon the leasehold premises. Whether that decision is correct or not, we are not concerned to enquire although it does seem certainly an astounding result. But, in our opinion, in India the matter is entirely regulated by Statute. There is a fundamental distinction under the Transfer of Property Act between a transfer of immoveable property and a transfer of the right to the enjoyment of immoveable property; and a lease is defined by s. 105 of the Transfer of Property Act as a transfer of a right to enjoy immoveable property made for a certain time, express or implied, or in perpetuity in consideration of the price paid or promised or of money, etc. It is perfectly clear, therefore, that the Transfer of Property Act regards a lease in perpetuity as merely a transfer of the right to enjoy property. Does it or does it not create a charge upon the land? The answer is that the only charge, valid in Indian Law, on landed property, is to be found in the section of the Act which creates such a charge and s. 55 is obviously confined to cases which deal not merely with the transfer of the mere right of enjoyment but with the transfer of the property itself, for, for any other lien or charge, the Act makes no provision at all. In our opinion we are bound to hold that we cannot but regard the Act as intended to be exhaustive and that we are not at liberty to follow English Common Law rules. On this ground we think the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs. The Second Appeals (Nos. 623 of 1921, 624 of 1921 and 625 of 1921) will follow and are also dismissed with costs.

Krishnan, J.—The question that arises for our decision in this case is, whether when the owner of a land grants a perpetual lease of it in consideration of rent to be paid, as well as of a premium, he has got a charge on the lease-hold right he has so created for the premium so payable.

The promissory note in this case was executed for such a premium and it is now sought in appeal before us to be enforced not against the makers of the note nor against the persons who took the lease but against certain third parties who have now become transferees or assignees of the lease right. Against them the amount of the note could be claimed if at all, only if there is a charge created in favour of the landlords on the property in their hands.

The English Law is apparently that such a lien does not exist; but it is not necessary to consider that position here, for, we are concerned only with the Indian Law on the point. The appellant has to show us how he gets the charge. The document by which the lease was created gives him no charge whatever for the amount. Therefore the charge must be rested by him upon the general law of this country. Now so far as it appears the only lien that is recognised in the Transfer of Property Act in this country is a lien in favour of the vendor. That being so, a strenuous effort was made by the appellant's Vakil to persuade us that the grant of a lease like this really amounted to a sale or transfer of a fractional right in the property for a price, namely, the premium payable for the grant and he argued that as vendors of that right the plaintiffs have a charge on the lease-hold estate which has been given to defendants Nos. 1 and 2. It is impossible to accept this view, for the Transfer of Property Act makes a very clear distinction between a sale and a lease. This is a transaction that falls clearly within the definition of a lease in the Transfer of Property Act, s. 105; I do not see how then it could be brought under the definition of a sale. The payment of premium is only one of the incidents of the lease just as payment of rent is. It is certainly not a price paid for the transfer of immoveable property as defined in s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is impossible, it seems to me, to hold that the relationship between the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was anything but that of a lessor and a lessee. Apart from the Transfer of Property Act it has not been shown that there is any Common Law in India on which the right of lien claimed could be founded. It is true that in one of the decisions brought to our notice, viz., Kandasami Pillai v. Ramasami Mannadi (2), there is an observation by the then learned Chief Justice that a lien like that which exists in England may be claimed here. But that observation cannot be treated as authority as it is only an obiter dictum of the learned Judge. When that case came on appeal before three other learned Judges of this Court, these learned Judges held that the principles of equity in England could not be introduced into India for purposes of creating rights like the one in question. The view of the Chief Justice cannot be treated as of weight after the expression of opinion by the Appellate Judges. There is no other decision which has been brought to our notice where such a lien has been recognised in India.

I am, therefore, entirely in agreement with the learned Chief Justice in holding that whatever the position may be in England, we are not justified in introducing new conceptions of charges in India which are not supported by our Statute Law. When the Estates Land Act was passed the Legislature had to consider what kind of charges should be given to the land-holder on a lease-hold estate. That was the only instance in which the Legislature dealt with a lien of the kind claimed and there we find that the lien was not allowed, see s. 25 of the Estates Land Act. It seems quite clear that such a lien as is now set up cannot be supported. In the result, the appeal and all the second appeals must be dismissed with costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 16—Mortgage—Interest, high rate of—Court, power of, to reduce rate of interest—Undue influence, finding of, whether necessary.

A finding in a suit to recover money due on a mortgage-bond that the parties are near relations, that there was good security given for the debt and that the interest charged is excessive is not sufficient to enable the Court to reduce the rate of interest. There must be a further finding that the mortgagee had unduly taken advantage of his position and that he was in a position to dominate the will of the mortgagor and to exercise undue influence over him. Unless it can be shown that undue advantage was taken, the Court cannot interfere with the contract.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Jessore, dated the 4th of April 1923, modifying that of the Munsif, Third Court, Narail, dated the 6th of January 1922.

Babu Bireswar Bagchi, for the Appellant,

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover a certain sum of money borrowed on a mortgage-bond at an interest of $37\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum. The Trial Court decreed the plaintiff's suit in full. The lower Appellate Court modified the decree of the first Court by reducing the rate of interest to $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum on the ground that the rate of interest was excessive and the transaction as between the parties was substantially unfair. In dealing with this point the learned District Judge says: "I am of opinion that the argument is valid. The parties were near relations and there was good security given for the debt. In the circumstances the interest charged was clearly excessive and as between the parties the transaction was substantially unfair". This finding, however, by itself is not sufficient to justify the Court in reducing the rate of interest. The learned Judge ought to have gone further and it was necessary for him to find that the money lender had unduly taken advantage of his position and that he was in a position to dominate the Will of the borrower and to exercise an undue influence over him. Unless it can be shown that undue advantage has been taken, the Court cannot interfere with the contract. The only finding that the learned Judge has come to is that there was good security given for the debt. There is no suggestion by any of the parties that the one dominated the other or had exercised undue influence over him.

In these circumstances I allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs in all the Courts, including this Court.

The defendant will be allowed one month's time from the date of receipt of this order and record in the lower Court for the payment of the decretal amount. In default, the mortgaged property will be sold in satisfaction of the decretal amount. Interest at the bond rate will run up to the date fixed by the Trial Court as the due date of payment and at 6 per cent. per annum from that date until realisation.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 15—Jurisdiction of Court—Suit lying in Court of lower grade—Higher Court, whether can try—Valuation by plaintiff.

Section 15 of the C. P. C. is imperative, but it is imperative only on the suitor, who is bound to bring his suit in the Court of the lowest grade. The section is not imperative on the Courts, and does not deprive a higher Court of jurisdiction to try a suit that should have been brought in a Court of a lower grade. [p. 728, col 2.]

The valuation put by the plaintiff prima facie determines the jurisdiction of the Court unless the suit is obviously over-valued and such over-valuation is mala fide. [ibid.]

Mr. Ankelsaria, for the Appellants.

Mr. Thein Maung, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which this appeal arises there has been a waste of valuable time probably due to a misapprehension on the part of the Judge of the effect of s. 15 of the C. P. C.

The facts of this case are that the plaintiff filed a suit to recover a piece of land measuring about 40 acres. He valued the land at Rs. 5,000 and adding to that sum Rs. 802 which he claimed as mesne profits, he valued the whole for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 5,802. The written statement challenged this valuation and alleged that the land was not worth more than Rs. 3,000 and that even adding the value of the claim for mesne profits the suit was well under Rs. 5,000 which was the limit of the jurisdiction of the Sub-Divisional Court. The learned Judge seems to have imagined that the objection was one against his own jurisdiction, which it most certainly was not, and framed a preliminary issue as to the value of the land in suit. He made an elaborate enquiry, examined eight witnesses besides the plaintiff and the defendant, and arrived at the conclusion that the land was worth Rs. 75 per acre only, then the suit would be beyond the jurisdiction of the Sub-Divisional Judge and triable only by the District Court.

Before analysing the evidence on the question of the value of the land it may be well to draw the attention of the District Judge to the mistake he made. He seems to have thought that s. 15 of the C. P. C., which enacts that every suit "shall" be instituted in the lowest Court having jurisdiction was imperative and that, therefore, he, the District Judge, had no jurisdiction to try the case. This is apparent from the concluding paragraph of his judgment. In this he is entirely mistaken. Section 15 of the C. P. C., is imperative, undoubtedly, but it is so framed to show that it is imperative on the suitor who is bound to bring his suit in the Court of lowest grade. The word "shall" is certainly not imperative on the Courts and does not deprive the higher Court of its jurisdiction to try the suit: Nidhi Lal v. Mazhar Husain (1). That section is intended to prevent the Courts of higher grade from being overcrowded with suits and is intended for the benefit of such Courts. The higher Court is not bound to take advantage of it and can try such suits. It is also well-established that the valuation put by the plaintiff prima facie determines the jurisdiction of the Court unless the suit is obviously over-valued and such over-valuation is mala fide.

Turning to the evidence, it is quite clear that there is a good deal of diversity of opinion as to the value of the land. In a case where the value is doubtful it is much safer that the Court of higher jurisdiction should entertain the suit and decide it. The plaintiff in this suit examined himself and a number of witnesses. He says that he was offered Rs. 130 by one Ali, who later raised the offer to Rs. 135 per acre. Mg. Kyaw Hla also offered to buy the land at Rs. 135 per acre. U Ogh Doke, a Headman, acting on behalf of others, also offered to buy this land at Rs. 145 per acre. Haji Ali and Ogh Doke support the statement. Maung Ogh Doke was not even cross-examined. This means that his statement that he offered to buy the land was accepted by the defendant. He also states that the plaintiff wanted Rs. 170 per acre. Tun Myaing gives evidence that he sold a piece of land on the other side of the creek measuring 24 acres for Rs. 3,000 that is at the rate of Rs. 125 per acre. He also adds that the lands which he sold are not so good as the plaintiff's land. Maung Kya Byu, who bought the land from Maung Tun Myaing, gives evidence to the same effect that the plaintiff's land is more valuable than the land bought by him. He also files the sale-deed Ex. A. He was not cross-examined. If the statement of these two witnesses is accepted that the plaintiff's land is better than the land which was the subject of sale between them then it follows it must be worth at least Rs. 125. The learned Judge discredited all this evidence for no conceivable reason and proceeded on the ground that the sale-deed by which the first defendant purchased the land in suit and other lands works out at Rs. 75 per acre, and that the land in suit must, therefore, be worth only that much, since four years ago when the plaintiff bought the land in suit he paid only Rs. 44 per acre. We do not think that either of these is a reliable test and we, therefore, have come to the conclusion that the land in suit has been properly valued by the plaintiff at Rs. 5,000. We set aside the order of the Trial Court and order him to re-admit the plaint in his file and hear the suit on the merits. The respondent will pay the appellant's costs of this appeal. JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge in Probate proceeding, holding that a certain person had a locus standi to oppose the application for the grant of Letters of Administration with the Will annexed. A preliminary objection was taken that no appeal lay and we think that the objection is well-founded.
Apparently, there is some conflict of decisions in this Court and it is urged before us that by virtue of the provisions of s. 86 of the Probate and Administration Act there is always an appeal from an interlocutory order in Probate and Administration proceedings and it is stated that the reference to the C. P. C. in the section is merely referable to the procedure to be adopted in such an appeal. We think that it is not so and that the appeal by s. 86 is subject to there being a right of appeal against an interlocutory order under the C. P. C. This is the view taken in the case of Lakhi Narain Shaw v. Dhanada Kumar Ghose (1). As pointed out in this case, the older cases to which we were referred were decisions founded on the provisions of s.
588, sub-s. (2) of the old C. P. C., which is not reproduced in the Code of 1908. We agree with the view expressed in Lakhi Narain Shaw v. Dhanada Kumar Ghose (1), that there is no interlocutory appeal from the order that has been passed by the District Judge.

The appeal, accordingly, fails and is dismissed with costs, hearing-fee 2 gold mohurs.

Cuming, J.—I agree.

Landlord and tenant—Two leases, grant of, to same person—Implication of surrender of first—Indian and English Law, difference between.

The rule of English Law that the acceptance of a new lease operates as a surrender of a prior lease to the same person of the same property is applicable only in cases where there is such incompatibility between the enjoyment under the new lease and the enjoyment under the prior lease that the second will involve a surrender of the first. [p. 730, col. 2; 731, col. 1.]

The plaintiff, a landlord, leased to the defendant a large plot of land for purposes of coffee cultivation for a period of 91 years. Less than 20 years thereafter, the plaintiff again granted 20 acres out of the same area to the same person on lease for gold washing purposes for a period of 36 years. The lessee specifically agreed to pay rent on both the leases without any abatement. On the expiry of the period of the second lease, in a suit by the landlord for damages for use and occupation in respect of the 20 acres of land and for value of buildings and machinery alleged to have been wrongly carried away:

Held, (1) that the grant of the second lease was not inconsistent with the continuation of the first; [p. 731, col. 1.]

(2) that the plaintiff was not, during the existence of the first and the longer lease, entitled to ask for relief on the ground of expiry of the second lease. [ibid.]

Per Ramesam, J.—Under the Indian Law, where there are two leases to the same person, a surrender of the first lease need not necessarily be implied from the grant of the second. [p. 731, col. 2.]

Even where the leases are of the same kind and they are overlapping and the terms of the second are somewhat inconsistent with the terms of the first, all that is necessary to imply is a cancellation of the first only for a period which is overlapped by the second. [ibid.]

Unlike under the English Law, delivery of possession by the lessor to the lessee is not a necessary part of the transaction of a lease in India and the implication on a second lease of the surrender of the first lease is, therefore, not also necessary under the Indian Law. [p. 731, col. 2; p. 732, col. 1.]

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer and T. S. Anantraman, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. P. M. Menon and Krishna Wariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—This suit was brought by Nilambur Rajah for recovery of possession, together with damages for use and occupation, of 20 acres of land and for value of buildings and machinery removed by the defendant upon a certain area which had been granted on lease by the plaintiff's predecessor on 14th August 1879 to Mr. Minchin for gold washing for a period of 36 years which expired on 14th August 1915.

In 1862 the plaintiff's predecessor granted a lease of 500 cawnies in the same locality for a rent of Rs. 500 to be paid annually for coffee cultivation to the same Mr. Minchin for a period of 91 years. That lease has not expired and will not expire till 1953. Messrs. Parry and Company, who are the defendants in this suit, obtained an assignment from Mr. Minchin of all his rights in both leases. The contention on the part of the plaintiff, who is the appellant in this Court, is that the grant of a mining lease implied a surrender of the lease for coffee cultivation for the area over which gold washing operations were conducted. This contention is based upon the English rule of law that the acceptance of a new lease operates as a surrender of a prior lease. In Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant the learned author explains this rule as being founded upon estoppel. He says that as a lessee is estopped from saying that his lessor has not power to give him the lease and as the lessor cannot grant a new lease during the continuance of the old lease, it follows that the acceptance of the new lease implies a surrender of the first lease. An exception to this rule occurs if what is accepted by the lessee is the grant of a thing collateral to and consistent with the lease of the land. Instances are given in which the grant of a new thing does not imply the surrender of the thing first granted. Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar argues that the two operations, coffee planting and gold mining, cannot be carried on simultaneously, as one operation would interfere with the peaceful enjoyment of the other right over the soil. We must, therefore, see what was the intention of the parties when they gave and received the two lease deeds, Exs. I and II. In the first place it is noteworthy that the lessee in both the leases is the same person, and, therefore, the lessee is in a position to make arrangements for the two operations of coffee planting and gold washing being carried on side by side in such a way as not to interfere with each other. Next it is noticeable that the rent under the two agreements was agreed to be paid simultaneously and that under cl. 4 of Ex. A, which is a counterpart executed by the lessee in favour of the lessor, he agreed that he would not ask for any diminution of the rent due under the lease for cultivation on account of the execution of the gold sifting works in the same area, thus showing that the two operations might go on side by side and that the mining lease was not intended to involve a surrender of any portion of the land leased for coffee planting. Taking all the circumstances into consideration I feel clear that the grant of the second lease was not inconsistent with the continuation of the first, and that it is only in case where there is some such incompatibility between the enjoyment under the new lease and the enjoyment under the prior lease that the second will involve a surrender of the first.

As regards the removal of machinery, etc., under the cultivation lease the lessee is entitled to keep the machinery upon the land leased to him until that lease expires, and the fact that under cl. 7 of Ex. A his landlord was expressly exempted from liability to pay compensation for machinery and buildings left upon the land itself indicates that the property in them was regarded as remaining with the tenant who erected them. Thus whether the gold mining plant is removed or left standing, the landlord cannot now demand to be paid anything on that account. In this view the plaintiff has no legal claim against the defendant and his suit was rightly dismissed in the lower Court. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Ramesam, J.—I agree. The learned Vakil who argued the case for the appellant relied in support of his proposition on Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant, page 363, Redman on Landlord and Tenant, page 561, Foa on Landlord and Tenant, page 697, Bacon's Abridgment of the Law, Vol. IV and Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XVIII, page 1061. These references no doubt lay down that when there is a second lease by the same lessor to the same lessee there is an implied surrender of the first lease. In England at one time it was necessary for the validity of the lease that the lessor should be in possession of the land leased: see Woodfall, p. 2. (It has now been changed by the Real Property Act of 1845). It seems to follow from this that when a second lease was made, the lessee admitted that the lessor was in possession, or at any rate, was estopped from questioning that the lessor was in possession. The result is that the surrender of the first lease was implied; but it does not seem to me that this implication is necessary in the law as it stands now in India. Section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act defines a lease as a transfer of the right to enjoy certain properties. Section 107 says, that a lease for any term can be made only by a registered instrument and no delivery of possession is necessary. Section 108 A (b) says that the lessor is bound to put the lessee in possession of the property only at the lessee's request; so that delivery of possession is not a necessary part of the transaction of a lease in India. Where the land is in possession of a trespasser, the owner can lease the land to a lessee and the lessee can file a suit to recover it. Section 111 says "A lease of immoveable property determines by implied surrender". But I do not see why where there are two leases to the same person, the surrender of the first lease should be implied. Even where the leases are of the same kind, they are overlapping and the terms of the second are somewhat inconsistent with the terms of the first, all that is necessary to imply is a cancellation of the first, only for a period which is overlapped by the second. In the present case even assuming that the mining lease is not totally inconsistent with coffee plantation, it seems to me that all the necessary implication is a cancellation of the first lease for a period of 36 years and no more. All the passages in the reference relied on by the learned Vakil for the appellant seem to refer to leases of the same kind and it is admitted by him that there is no case available where the second lease is of a different kind from the first. It is a fortiori case where the second lease is of a different kind. On this point I need not deal with the case in detail as it has been discussed by my learned brother with whose conclusion I agree, viz., that the two leases are of an entirely different kind. Clauses 5 and 4 of the documents Exs. A and I, which are practically identical, seem to imply that the 20 acres covered by the second lease was not necessarily excluded from the first lease. Clause 7 relied on by Mr. Ramachandra Iyer no doubt seems at first to support his contention; but all that it says is that in the case of eviction by the lessor compensation shall not be payable. Under what circumstances such an eviction is going to happen the clause does not state and there is nothing to compel us to infer that the eviction should necessarily be under the terms of the second lease and irrespective of the conditions of the first lease. I do not think, therefore, that cl. 7 necessarily supports the appellant.

The English Law seems to have been laid down in very wide terms. It is sometime said that even if the intention of the parties is not to cancel the first lease, the law will imply a surrender. This does not seem to have been adopted in America, and I do not see why such a rule of law should be adopted in India.

For all these reasons I agree to the order proposed by my learned brother.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Widow—Alienation to provide for marriage expenses of daughter of co-parcener—Legal necessity.

Where a person takes property either by inheritance or survivorship under the Hindu Law he is bound to provide for the maintenance, education, marriage, shrads and other usual religious expenses of the co-parceners and of such members of their family as they are, or were when alive, legally or morally bound to maintain, and a female heir is under exactly the same obligation to maintain the members of the family as a male would have been by virtue of succeeding to the same estate. Therefore, a Hindu widow who has succeeded to the property of a childless son is bound to provide for the marriage expenses of the daughter of a deceased co-parcener and is for that purpose entitled to alienate the property. JUDGMENT.

Sen, J.—The appellant instituted a suit out of which this appeal arises for redemption and possession of certain specified shares in the properties set out in the plaint which he alleged were in the wrongful possession of the defendants first party. The following facts appear to be undisputed the questions raised being only as to the character and legal effect of some of the transactions.

Upon the death of one Ram Ratan Singh the family property, except certain parcels which went to some widows in lieu of their maintenance, came into the hands of one Dhuna Singh his grandson, by his son Maniar Singh. Subsequently on the death of Dhuna Singh the estate went by inheritance to his mother Musammam Ramdularee Kuer, the widow of Maniar Singh. On the 11th April 1896 Ramdularee executed a mortgage-bond (Ex. 8) for Rs. 1,000 in favour of one Jagarnath Sahi cousin of Durga Prasad Narain Sahi (the father of the plaintiff). By this mortgage-bond the Musammam purported to hypothecate 12-annas of Touzi Nos. 2345 and 2346 by way of security for the loan which she purported to raise for defraying the expenses of marriage of Musammam Ramsumaree Kuer with the plaintiff. Musammam Ramsumaree was the son's daughter of Jhonti Singh, the elder brother of Maniar Singh. On the 19th August 1897 an ex parte decree was obtained on foot of the mortgage above mentioned and the properties mortgaged brought to sale and purchased in the name of Jagarnath Sahi. On the 16th November 1898 Dhanpat Singh, the next reversioner, instituted a suit being Suit No. 110 of 1898 challenging the mortgage in favour of Jagarnath Singh and all proceedings based thereon. This suit was compromised and the result was that on the 22nd August 1899 an ekrarnama (Ex. 11) was executed whereby Jagarnath Sahi relinquished his claim to 12-annas of Touzi Nos. 2345 and 2346 and accepted a third share of the estate subject to all debts and liabilities of Dhuna Singh. Ramdularee also took one-third and Dhanpat Singh, the next reversioner, took the remaining one-third share. On the 24th September 1899 Jagarnath sold his entire interest by kobala (Ex. 1) to plaintiff for a consideration, it is alleged, of Rs. 3,500. Hence the plaintiff claims to have become entitled to the shares in the mouzas claimed in the suit.

Then came another set of transactions which brings us to the immediate cause of the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff alleges that on the 18th September 1909 he and the then presumptive heir Dhanpat Singh borrowed a sum of Rs. 1,995 from Bechan Sahi, father of defendant No. 9, and Basist Sahi defendant No. 10, and executed a zer-peshgi bond in respect of the Touzi numbers comprised within the estate of Dhuna Singh in favour of Bechan and Basist Narain. It is said that out of the sum of Rs. 1,995 the plaintiff got Rs. 595 only and Basist Narain the balance of Rs. 1,400. Thereafter Dhanpat Singh the presumptive reversioner died and his son Ramparichan Singh came into possession of all his estate. He applied for mutation of his name before the Collector, the application was opposed by the actual reversioners of Dhuna Singh who are the defendants first party in the suit (for by that time Musammāt Ramdularee had died and succession had opened to the reversioners). On the 28th November, 1918, it is alleged by the plaintiff, a collusive and fraudulent ekrarnama was entered into between Ramparichan Singh and the defendants first party, whereby the defendants first party got a portion of the zerpeshgi property and on the strength thereof on the 14th March 1919 collusively got the entire amount of zerpeshgi, that is, Rs. 1,995 deposited in Court in the name of the creditors, that is, the defendants third party without the knowledge of the plaintiff, and the defendants third party collusively withdrew the said bond money from the Court and gave up possession of the zerpeshgi property to them. Hence the plaintiff was denied the opportunity of depositing his proportionate share of the debt. As a result the defendants first party got possession of the entire zerpeshgi property and are still in possession thereof. On the facts above mentioned the plaintiff prayed for a declaration that he was entitled to get possession of his share of the properties given in zerpeshgi on payment of his share of the debt and for a decree for redemption and possession in his favour. The defendants first party, the present reversioners, were the contesting defendants. They assailed the mortgage (Ex. 8) as unsupported by any legal necessity and the transaction entered into under Ex. 8, Ex. 11 and Ex. 1 as being void and of no effect as they were alleged to be parts of a device to deprive the reversioners of their just right and to divide up the estate between the limited owner Ramdularee and the presumptive owner Dhanpat Singh. They alleged that Jagarnath was a mere farzidar of Ramdularee and no interest passed under the krarnama (Ex. 11) to Jagarnath and consequently none passed to the plaintiff under the sale-deed (Ex. 1). As regards the zerpeshgi deed dated the 18th September 1909, their case was that that was really a transaction entered into by Ramdularee in the name of the plaintiff and Dhanpat Singh for the purpose of paying up the debts of Dhuna Singh due to Gopal Sahi and others that they were just debts of the last male-holder, and, therefore, binding on the reversioners and on the estate, that the allegation of the plaintiff that a portion of the zerpeshgi money was due from him was utterly false, that upon the death of Dhanpat his son Ramparichan realized that the estate had passed to the defendants first party, the present reversioners, and he thereupon saw the necessity of executing the ekrarnama, dated the 28th November 1918, to discharge the aforesaid debt, that the defendants first party have as such reversioners paid off the zerpeshgi debts and secured possession of the property to which they were justly entitled and that the plaintiff's claim to redemption and possession should be dismissed.

Two main points of law have been put forward before us. First, whether the expenses of marriage of Ramsumaree Kaur could come within the description of legal necessity, and consequently whether the mortgage (Ex. 8) or any rights thereunder could be deemed to be valid beyond the lifetime of the limited owner. Secondly, did the ekrarnama (Ex. 11) pass a valid title to Jagarnath Singh or was it invalid and of no effect? Was it a mere device by the limited owner to defeat the right of the reversioners?

As a question of fact it is now beyond all dispute that the amount of Rs. 1,000 which was raised upon the mortgage (Ex. 8) was actually employed on the marriage expenses of Musammāt Ramsumaree Kaur. What is disputed is that there was any duty cast upon the limited owner Musammāt Ramdularee to defray the marriage expenses of Ramsumaree Kaur out of the estate in her hands. It is urged that the duty of marrying Musammāt Ramsumaree lay on Jhonti Singh, or in the last instance, upon Dhuna Singh the last male-holder. It is also urged that directly the estate passed by inheritance to Musammāt Ramdularee Kaur it ceased to be bound to pay the marriage expenses of Jhonti's son's daughter. This view appears to me clearly untenable. The true principle as laid down in the Shastras is that where a person takes a property either by inheritance or survivorship he is legally bound to maintain those whose maintenance was a charge upon it in the hands of the last holder (see Mayne's Hindu Law, Art. 453): "A female heir is under exactly the same obligation to maintain the members of a family as a male heir would have been by virtue of succeeding to the same estate. "The obligation extends even to the King when he takes the estate by escheat or by forfeiture." (see Mayne's Hindu Law, Art. 458). In fact the duty of the person who inherits is to provide for the maintenance, education, marriages, sraddhs and other usual religious expenses of the co-parceners and of such members of their family as they are, or were, when alive, legally or morally bound to maintain. Now, Ramsumaree Kaur would easily come within the description of such members as were dependent on the male co-parceners when they were alive. In this view it appears that the mortgage (Ex. 8) was for legal necessity and the mortgagee decree-holder got a valid right and title to the properties purchased by him at the execution sale.

The next question relating to the validity or otherwise of the ekrarnama (Ex. 11) calls for a somewhat detailed investigation. The Munsif held that the ekrarnama was not supportable on the ground of alienation by Ramdularee for legal necessity, nor was it supportable on the doctrine of surrender or renunciation. He further held that Dhanpat Singh, the presumptive reversioner had no right or interest in presenti in the property which Ramdularee held for life until it vested in him on her death should he survive her. He had no substantial claim on which to litigate with her at the time and that, therefore, the ekrarnama which purported to compromise the matters in dispute and difference between the parties to that suit could not be held to be legally valid. On this ground he held that the plaintiff who derived his title from Jagarnath on foot of the said ekrarnama could not recover possession by redemption of any portion of the estate as against the reversioners. He accordingly dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff's vendor Jagarnath had derived a good title under the mortgage; that he could not be blamed for suing on it when the mortgage-money was not paid; that the ekrarnama whereby Jagarnath relinquished what he had purchased under the decree, and took what was given to him as one-third of the estate plus the encumbrance thereon was good and valid so far as Jagarnath was concerned and it conferred a title on him. With regard to the other parties to the ekrarnama he observes: "Whether it operated as surrender or alienation on behalf of the lady in favour of Dhanpat is a different question with which we are not concerned in the present suit." Upon these findings he proceeded to hold that the plaintiff had a right to redeem the zerpeshgi which Dhanpat executed in favour of the defendant third party and he allowed the appeal.

It has been urged before us that a disposition by compromise such as that effected by the ekrarnama (Ex. 11) is perfectly valid as the entire estate was then in the hands of Musammam Ramdularee and that although a limited owner, she was still the manager and as such manager was quite competent to dispose of the estate to the best of her discretion. The subject of the power of a limited owner to deal with the estate of the last male holder as against the rights of the reversioner was dealt with very fully in the case of Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (1). The Judicial Committee in that case observed:—

"This raises the consideration of the whole subject of the power of a Hindu widow over an estate which belonged to her husband to which she has succeeded, either immediately on the death of her husband, or as heir on the death of her own childless son, her husband being already dead. This subject has been dealt with in many cases which are too numerous to cite individually; it has given rise to different currents of judicial opinion, and, as in this case and some others, to actual difference in judicial determination..... It has often been noticed before, but it is worth while to repeat, that the rights of a Hindu widow in her late husband's estate are not aptly represented by any of the terms of English Law applicable to what might seem analogous circumstances. Phrased in English Law terms, her estate is neither a fee nor an estate for life, nor an estate tail. Accordingly one must not, in judging of the question, become entangled in Western notions of what a holder of one or other of these estates might do. On the other hand, what a Hindu widow may do has often been authoritatively settled. Here arises that distinction which, as Seshagiri Ayyar, J., most justly observed in the present case, will, if not kept clearly in view, inevitably lead to confusion—the distinction between the power of surrender or renunciation, which is the first head of the subject, and the power of alienation for certain specific purposes, which is the second.

To consider first the power of surrender. The foundation of the doctrine has been sought in certain texts of the Smritis. It is unnecessary to quote them. They will be found in the opinions of the learned Judges in some of the cases to be cited. But in any case it is settled by long practice and confirmed by decision that a Hindu widow can renounce in favour of the nearest reversioner if there be only one or of all the reversioners nearest in degree* if more than one at the moment. That is to say, she can, so to speak, by voluntary act operate her own death." (Pages 531 and 532*).

"The result of the consideration of the decided cases may be summarised thus: (1) An alienation by a widow of her deceased husband's estate held by her may be validated if it can be shown to be a surrender of her whole interest in the whole estate in favour of the nearest reversioner or reversioners at the time of the alienation. In such circumstances the question of necessity does not fall to be considered. But the surrender must be a bona fide surrender, not a device to divide the estate with the reversioner. (2) When the alienation of the whole or part of the estate is to be supported on the ground of necessity, then, if such necessity is not proved aliunde and the alienee does not prove inquiry on his part and honest belief in the necessity, the consent of such reversioners as might fairly be expected to be interested to quarrel with the transaction will be held to afford a presumptive proof which, if not rebutted by contrary proof, will validate the transaction as a right and proper one. These propositions are substantially the same as those laid down by Jenkins, C. J. and Mookerjee J., in the case of Debi Prasad Chowdhry v. Golap Bhagat (2)."

The question to be considered, therefore, is whether the ekrarnama in question can be supported on either of the principles above laid down. There can be no valid contention in this case that the ekrarnama is supportable on the doctrine of legal necessity. On the finding that the mortgage-deed was for legal necessity the sale of 12-annas in favour of Jagarnath of Touzi Nos. 2345 and 2346 may be considered to be valid and binding. But thereafter we find that Dhanpat, the presumptive reversioner, institutes a suit against Musammatt Ramdularee and Jagarnath for a declaration that the mortgage was not for legal necessity and that, therefore, the sale was not binding. It was this suit which was purported to be compromised by the ekrarnama (Ex. 11) and by virtue of that ekrarnama each of the three parties to the suit got a third share in the whole estate. The transaction has to be looked into from different points of view. Firstly, had Dhanpat at that time any right or interest in the property in regard to which he instituted the suit? True he was entitled as presumptive reversioner, to institute a suit for a declaration, but was he under any circumstances entitled to a share in the property? The interest of a Hindu reversioner has been defined as spes successionis, that is, a mere possibility of succession. Such a possibility gives no interest to the reversionary heir in the estate of the deceased present, or future, vested or contingent. This principle is supported by various rulings among which may be mentioned the cases of Amrit Narayan Singh v. Gaya Singh (3) and Bhagwati Kuer v. Jagdam Sahay (4). On this principle it has also been laid down that an alienation by way of compromise entered into between a limited owner and persons who had no bona fide claim to the property at the time of the compromise is not binding on the reversioners. [Anup Narain Singh v. Mahabir Prasad Singh (5)]. Therefore, it is clear that the ekrarnama in question offends the principle laid down in these rulings on account of the fact that it purports to give Dhanpat Singh who had no interest in presenti at the moment a third share in the whole estate which he was clearly not entitled to.

(2) 19 Ind. Cas. 273; 40 C. 721; 17 C. W. N. 701; 17 O. L. J. 499.

*Pages of 42 M.—[Ed.]

Secondly, looking at it from the point of view of the limited owner Musammam Ramdularee Kuer, the question that has to be considered is whether she purported to efface herself completely and to operate her own death as it were by relinquishing the entire estate and consequently accelerating the interest of the consenting heir. This she clearly did not do, for she purported to take under the ekrarnama one-third of the estate. It is urged before us that this share in the estate was given to her in lieu of her maintenance. It is doubtful if she could do so, but the matter does not arise at all inasmuch as there is no evidence on the record, nor does it appear to have been contended in any stage of the proceedings that the share that she took was by way of her maintenance. On this ground it appears to me to be quite clear that the ekrarnama is illegal and invalid as against the right of the actual reversioners. The learned Subordinate Judge seems to think that it is not necessary to consider whether the ekrarnama operated as surrender or alienation on behalf of the lady in favour of Dhunpat, but that it is sufficient to consider as to whether Jagarnath got a valid title under it. Such a piecemeal consideration of the ekrarnama is wholly unwarranted. It is either valid or invalid, and if it be invalid, it must be held to be invalid in respect of all the parties. That being so, the conclusion is irresistible that Jagarnath never got a valid title under the ekrarnama and that, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief.

This decision will not in any way prejudice such rights as the plaintiff or his vendor Jagarnath might have in respect of Touzi Nos. 2345 and 2346 which Jagarnath purchased at auction in execution of his mortgage-decree.

The appeal must, therefore, be allowed with costs. The judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge must be reversed and the judgment and decree of the learned Munsif restored.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued for redemption of a mortgage of June 1863 of a certain portion of plot No. 1040. The area of plot No. 1040 which corresponds to present plot No. 1360 is 4 bighas 14 biswas and out of this redemption was sought of an area of 3 bighas 11 biswas.

Plaintiffs' case was that old plot No. 1041 of 3 bighas 11 biswas was mortgaged by his predecessor-in-interest Moazzam Ali to Kerhi Sah predecessor-in-interest of the defendant and the mortgagee on non-payment of interest took possession of the property. Subsequently there was a partition between the mortgagor and his co-sharers and plot No. 1041 was allotted to another co-sharer so the mortgagee was given 3 bighas 11 biswas out of plot No. 1040. The balance of this plot 1 bigha 3 biswas was sold by the successor-in-interest of the original mortgagor to the successor-in-interest of the original mortgagee on the 2nd January 1883.

The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the mortgagees were in adverse possession from the 2nd January 1883. By that sale-deed the descendants of the mortgagor declared in favour of the descendants of the mortgagees that they had no right left in plot No. 1010. This was construed by the lower Appellate Court as an agreement to relinquish the equity of redemption and though such an agreement would not be binding if not properly evidenced by document it will start adverse possession against the mortgagors. This principle of law is well settled both by rulings of this Court and of other High Courts. In Mahendra Bahadur Singh v. Chandrapal Singh (1), the learned Judicial Commissioner (now Mr. Justice Lindsay) had before him a case where adverse possession was claimed on the following facts. Certain property was mortgaged with possession in 1866 and subsequently it was sold in 1889 by an unregistered deed which did not pass title for want of registration. When the redemption suit was brought it was held by this Court that though under s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act the unregistered deed of 1889 could not operate to pass to the mortgagee the right of redemption it changed the character of possession of the mortgagee which became adverse to the mortgagor. This decision was followed by a Bench of this Court in Bijai Partab Singh v. Raghuraj Singh (2). In this case there was a sale-deed which could not be enforced at law. In the Madras case of Karnam Kandasami Pillay v. Chinnappa (3), there was an oral arrangement between the mortgagor and the usufructuary mortgagee under which the latter retained possession of a portion of the mortgaged property in full ownership in satisfaction of the mortgage-debt and enjoyed it as full owner for more than 12 years after the arrangement. When a suit for redemption was brought it was held by a Bench that the mortgagee had acquired by adverse possession an absolute title to the property and that the mortgagor's right to redeem the property was barred by limitation.

It is obvious that under the deed of 1883 the rights of ownership were conceded to the mortgagees by the mortgagors. There was an oral arrangement to relinquish the equity of redemption or to make the mortgagees the owners of the rest of the plot because they had purchased the other portion.

It was argued by the appellants' learned Counsel that in 1885 the defendants' ancestors were still recorded as mortgagees and, therefore, no adverse possession started in 1883. The entries in the village records are, however, very confused. In 1885 on the basis of an order of the 1st of July 1883 an entry of a mortgage is made while in Ex. A-2 of 1893 on the basis of the same order of 1st July 1883 a mention of mortgage has disappeared. The original order of 1st July 1883 is not produced and we are not in a position to say what it was and how it was obtained, whether in reality it had originated subsequent to 2nd January 1883 or prior to it.

I see no cause for interference with the reasoning of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Occupancy holding—Usufructuary mortgage of holding—Sale of holding for arrears of rent—Mortgagee, whether can maintain suit for declaration that sale was brought about by fraud.

A usufructuary mortgagee of an occupancy holding is entitled to recover possession of the holding from the landlord, unless the landlord can establish that after the execution of the usufructuary mortgage, the raiyat had abandoned the land. A usufructuary mortgagee of an occupancy holding, therefore, has locus standi to maintain a suit for a declaration that a sale of the holding at the instance of the landlord in execution of a decree for arrears of rent was brought about by fraud. JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—We think this appeal ought to succeed. The plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration that the sale of the tenure at the instance of the landlord in execution of a decree for arrears of rent was brought about by fraud. The defendant No. 6 purchased the holding at that sale. The plaintiff alleged that such a sale had affected prejudicially his right as a usufructuary mortgagee under a mortgage executed by the tenants in his favour in the year 1324, by virtue of which he had been in possession of the land in suit. The plaintiff, therefore, prayed for an order directing the sale to be set aside and also for a declaration to the effect that the sale was vitiated by fraud and, therefore, was of no effect so far as he was concerned.

The defence of the defendants, amongst others, raised the question that the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief on the ground that he had no interest in the holding as against the landlord.

The Court of first instance found that the sale was brought about by fraud and that the plaintiff although he was not entitled to have the sale set aside, was entitled to a declaration that the sale was, so far as the plaintiff was concerned, in effectual.

Against that decree the defendant No. 6 who contested the suit, preferred an appeal to the District Judge. The learned District Judge without going into all the questions which arose in the appeal, allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the plaintiff had not established that he was "entitled to any legal character or to any right as to any property". This view was based upon the authority of two cases, viz., Krishna Chandra Dutta v. Khiran Bajania (1) and Rasik Lal Dutt v. Bidhu Mukhi Dasi (2). The learned Judge was of opinion that those cases were authorities for the proposition that a usufructuary mortgagee has no right to possession of the property as a mortgagee by a raiyat against his landlord. In this view the learned Judge held that the plaintiff could not ask for a declaratory decree.

In this appeal it has been contended by the learned Advocate who has appeared for the plaintiff-appellant, that the view of the District Judge is wrong, because, the decisions in the two cases relied upon by the learned Judge were questioned and disapproved of in the case of Ambika Debi v. Swarnamoyi Dasi (3). It appears to us that this contention is correct. It was pointed out in the case to which I have just referred that the decisions in the cases reported in 10 Calcutta Weekly Notes were inconsistent with the ruling laid down in the Full Bench case of Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (4). It was held that an usufructuary mortgagee was entitled to recover possession from the landlord unless the landlord could establish that after the execution of the usufructuary mortgage, the raiyat had abandoned the land. In the case before us the possession of the usufructuary mortgagee, the plaintiff, was undisturbed at the time when he brought the suit. It was the apprehension of a disturbance by the auction-purchaser which gave rise to the present suit by the plaintiff. The question, therefore, reduces itself to this: Had the plaintiff, the usufructuary mortgagee, from the raiyat, a right to possession of the property even as against the landlord whether the sale took place or not. If he had, as the case reported as Ambika Debi v. Swarnamoyi Dasi (3) shows that he had, then it cannot be said that the plaintiff had no legal character or any right to any property. It is, no doubt, open to the defendant the auction-purchaser, or the landlord to show that the raiyat not only had executed the usufructuary mortgage but had abandoned the land and, therefore, the landlord had a right of re-entry and that the usufructuary mortgagee had no right to remain in possession of the land. But that is a matter which we cannot discuss at this stage. We are only concerned with the question—a bare proposition of law—as to whether an usufructuary mortgagee in the absence of anything else is entitled to possession of the mortgaged property as against the landlord. We, therefore, think on the authority of the case of Ambika Debi v. Swarnamoyi Dasi (3), he has such a right and, unless the defence succeeds, the plaintiff iff would be entitled to the relief claimed.

The judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are, therefore set aside and the case sent back to the learned District Judge for a decision of the other questions which arise in the case. The defendants who were the appellants in the lower Appellate Court will be entitled to raise all the questions which they did raise in their defence; and also the question of abandonment by the tenants. The learned District Judge will determine all the questions raised according to law.

Let the record be sent down to the lower Appellate Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Partition suit—Decree allotting separate properties to each party—Subsequent suit to obtain possession of properties allotted, whether barred—Defendants, position of—Court-fee, whether payable by defendant in partition suit.

Where a partition decree merely directs the separation of the shares of the plaintiffs in the suit and leaves the shares of the defendants joint amongst themselves, the defendants cannot execute the decree and there is nothing to prevent them from bringing a fresh suit for partition of the lands jointly allotted to them. Where, however, in such a suit a partition takes place between all the parties thereto and shares are allotted to each, the defendants are also in the position of plaintiffs and in regard to the properties allotted to them they are in the position of decree-holders and can obtain possession of such properties by execution of the decree. A separate suit by any of them to obtain possession of the property allotted to him would be barred by the provisions of s. 47 of the O. P. C. [p. 740, col. 2.]

In a partition suit a defendant has merely to ask for his share of the properties in suit to be separately allotted to him and it is then open to the Court to order the shares of the defendants to be separated as amongst themselves. The decree that is finally drawn up in a partition suit has to be stamped as an instrument of partition under the Stamp Act and, except the stamp duty levied on the decree, no other duty as Court-fee is payable by the defendants in such a suit. [p. 741, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—Mouza Kaluhar in Manbhum was owned by a large number of co-sharers. In 1913 a partition suit was brought by some of the co-sharers in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Purulia which was registered as Suit No. 219 of 1913. In that suit the present plaintiffs and defendants were all arrayed as defendants. A preliminary decree was passed on compromise on the 12th September 1914, wherein the shares of all the co-sharers were determined. A Commissioner was appointed to effect partition by metes and bounds. The Commissioner effected the partition and made allotments to all the co-sharers who were parties in the suit; and in accordance with the report and allotments of the Commissioner the Court made a final decree on the 19th June 1916. The case of the plaintiffs in the two suits giving rise to the present appeals was that by the said partition, lands were separately allotted to them. In Suit No. 1172 the plaintiffs claimed that 1 bigha, 19 kathas out of plot No. 83 of the Commissioner's map was separately allotted to them in Suit No. 1173, 1 bigha 2 kathas in plots Nos. 83 and 83-A was also separately allotted to them. Their case is that when they wanted to take possession of these lands they were obstructed by the present defendants who were also defendants in the partition suit and hence they brought the present suits for declaration of their title and recovery of possession. The defendants pleaded that they were not aware of the partition alleged by the plaintiffs; that there was no compromise in the said partition suit; that the Commissioner had no authority to partition the shares of the other co-sharers except those of the plaintiffs in the said partition suit; and there was an objection taken to the effect that the present suits were barred under s. 47 of the C. P. C.

The learned Munsif overruled the objections of the defendants and made decrees in favour of the plaintiffs in the two suits. On appeal by the defendants the learned Subordinate Judge confirmed the decrees of the Munsif. The defendant No. 3 thereupon came up in second appeal to this Court.

It may be noted that the plaintiffs in the two suits were different but the defendants were the same in both the suits; and the second appeals to this Court were by the defendant No. 3 alone.

Two points were raised in the second appeal which were heard by Mr. Justice Das sitting singly. The first point was that the preliminary decree in the partition suit, which was a consent decree was not binding upon the defendant No. 3 inasmuch as he was a minor at the time the said consent decree was passed but that the petition of compromise was not signed by his guardian ad litem, and that, therefore, the said decree was wholly void as against him. The second point taken was that s. 47 of the C. P. C. was a bar to the suit. The learned Judge of this Court held that the findings of the Subordinate Judge were not sufficient or satisfactory and that the points raised by the appellant could not satisfactorily be determined by him, and he accordingly set aside the decrees of the Subordinate Judge and remanded the case for re-hearing.

Against this decision of Mr. Justice Das the present appeals have been filed by the plaintiffs under the Letters Patent.

As regards the first objection, namely, that the defendant No. 3 being a minor, and the petition of compromise not being signed by any one on his behalf and, therefore, the preliminary decree being void, it appears that this objection was not taken in either of the Courts below. From the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge it appears that the objection taken before him was that the guardian of the defendant No. 3 did not obtain the permission of the Court to enter into the compromise and that the decree, therefore, was ultra vires. The learned Subordinate Judge disallowed this objection on the ground that there was nothing on the record to show that the Court had not granted permission to the guardian of the defendant No. 3 to compromise the suit. The objection taken in this Court was different from the objection taken before the Subordinate Judge, and, in my opinion, he ought not to be allowed to take this objection for the first time in second appeal. The decision of this question depends on findings of fact which the Courts below were not asked to decide. Moreover, it is admitted that in the final decree which was passed in the partition suit on the 19th June 1916, there was no defect whatsoever. The defendant No. 3 is evidently bound by this final decree and, in my opinion, there is no substance in this objection and there was no necessity of a remand to enquire into this point.

As regards the second objection, namely, the bar of s. 47 of the C. P. C. I am of opinion, that the decision of Mr. Justice Das is correct. The First Court overruled this objection on the ground that the plaintiffs in the present suit were defendants in the previous partition suit and they were not the decree-holders and so they could not have got possession in execution of the decree. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal observes that the effect of the partition decree declaring what specific lands were allotted to the plaintiffs in the present suits was to make that decree a declaratory decree so far as they were concerned, and as a declaratory decree is incapable of execution the present plaintiffs could not enforce the same by execution, and that, therefore, the present suits were not barred by the provisions of s. 47 of the C. P. C. Mr. Justice Das rightly points out that the view taken by the Courts below was incorrect. He observes that if a decree is passed in a partition suit, the parties thereto whether arrayed as defendants or as plaintiffs, are in the position of plaintiffs, and in regard to properties that may be allotted they are exactly in the position of decree-holders. No doubt, as was observed by Mr. Justice Das, if the partition decree merely directed the separation of the shares of the plaintiffs in the partition suit and left the shares of the defendants joint amongst themselves, the defendants could not execute that decree and there was nothing to prevent those defendants from bringing a fresh suit for partition of the lands jointly allotted to them. The view, therefore, taken by the lower Courts was incorrect.

Mr. Justice Das, however, remanded the case for a determination as to what was the position of the parties in the present suits under the final partition decree. In my view the materials on the record are sufficient to dispose of this question in this Court, and the remand seems to be unnecessary. The final partition decree is on the record, and it directs that a decree be passed in accordance with the report, map and allotment papers of Babu Radha Ballabh Sarkar the Commissioner appointed in the suit, and that the report, map and allotment papers do form a part of the decree and it awards costs to the plaintiffs in the suit. It is admitted by the present plaintiffs, and it also appears on reference to the allotments made by the Commissioner that the lands now claimed by the plaintiffs in the present suits were allotted to them in the previous partition case and the final decree in the partition suit directs that the allotments made by the Commissioner be confirmed. The present plaintiffs were, therefore, in a position to take delivery of possession of the lands allotted to them by executing the final partition decree. It is argued that there is no direction in the final decree for possession being delivered to the present plaintiffs over the lands allotted to them; but there is no such direction even in favour of the plaintiffs in the partition suit. It is clear that the decree intended that each of the parties should take possession in accordance with the allotments made by the Commissioner. As regards the payment of Court-fees by the present plaintiffs, who were defendants in the partition suit, in order to enable them to obtain possession of their shares, I see nothing in the law which requires a defendant in a partition suit to pay Court-fees in order to have his share separately allotted to him; he was merely to ask for it in his written statement, and it is open to the Court to order the shares of the defendants in a partition suit to be separated as amongst themselves. The decree that is finally drawn up in the partition suit has to be stamped as an instrument of partition under the Stamp Act and except the stamp duty levied on the decree, no other duty as Court-fee is payable by the defendants: see Nawab Mir Sadrudin v. Nawab Nuruddin (1). A contrary view appears to have been taken in Abdul Kadar v. Bapubhai (2) and Murarrao v. Sitaram (3). But these two cases do not appear to be pure suits for partition. At any rate no provision of the law has been referred to in these cases. In the present case we find that a final partition decree was prepared by the Court and although there is nothing on the record to show it, it must be presumed that the decree was properly passed after payment of the stamp duty. In my opinion, therefore, there is no necessity of a remand in the present case and it is clear on reference to the final partition decree that it was open to the present plaintiffs to obtain possession of the lands allotted to them on taking out execution of the decree. That being so the present suits for recovery of possession of the lands which were admittedly allotted to them in the previous partition are evidently barred by s. 47 of the C. P. C.

I would, therefore, modify the order passed by Mr. Justice Das and allow the second appeals filed in this Court by the defendant No. 3 and dismiss the plaintiffs' suits altogether. The respondent will get his costs throughout.

Mullick, Actg. C. J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment relates to Second Civil Appeals Nos. 348 and 274 of 1924. They both arise out of a single suit brought by Sitla Bakhsh Singh and Hirde Narain Lal to set aside a number of transfers effected by the father of Sitla Bakhsh Singh, and to obtain possession of the property transferred. Hirde Narain Lal is the man who is financing Sitla Bakhsh Singh. Sitla Bakhsh Singh has sold half the property in dispute to him, and now they both sue as plaintiffs to recover the property. This is the only important fact with regard to plaintiffs' appeal, which is No. 348 of 1924. There are other grounds in the memorandum of appeal but when the hearing came on plaintiffs' Counsel abandoned them all except the first three, which relate to the question of limitation. Grounds Nos. 4, 5 and 6 were abandoned.

The question of limitation is a curious one. Sitla Bakhsh Singh claimed to be within time because these transfers were effected during his minority, and he was suing within three years of attaining his majority. In the Court of Trial the age of the plaintiff was put in issue and it was decided that he was within time. In the lower Appellate Court the point was taken that though plaintiff might be in time by making use of s. 6 of the Limitation Act, his co-plaintiff, being only an assignee, was not entitled to the same privilege, and was beyond time. Accordingly, with regard to such of the transfers as were effected, the decree was modified to the extent of giving plaintiff a decree for half the property, while the half which he had transferred to the assignee was to remain in possession of the defendants.

It is this decision which is impugned by the plaintiffs' appeal. Now it is well-settled law that an assignee cannot take advantage of s. 6 of the Limitation Act. The case of this Court, which is referred to in the judgment, Imam-ud-din v. Mumtaz-un-nissa (1), no longer possesses authority. It was overruled in Muhammad Nur Khan v. Lachhmi Narayan (2). But that was on a special point. On the question whether the assignee can take advantage of s. 6 of the Limitation Act, both decisions agree that he cannot. Muhammad Nur Khan v. Lachhmi Narayan (2) is a Bench decision and I am bound to follow it. There is no authority to the contrary. All the High Courts have agreed on the point. But I am pressed with certain remarks contained in Bans Bahadur Singh v. Sukhraj Kuar (3). I say with certain remarks, for I do not think that the decision itself, if it is rightly construed, will in any way help the appellant. The case was similar to the present one. The plaintiff was a daughter's son or claimed to be so. It was dismissed by the Court of Trial on the point of limitation. There were two issues:

"Was plaintiff born on 4th January 1898?" and

"Is this suit within time?"

The Court of Trial decided that the suit was barred by limitation, and dismissed it without going into the merits. On appeal a Bench of this Court decided that the plaintiff was within time, and sent the case back for decision according to law. It was argued for the defendant-respondent that there were two plaintiffs because the daughter's son had sold a one-third share of the property in suit to one Babu Hazari Lal, and they had sued together as co-plaintiffs. The Court of Trial had held that in any event the transferee's claim in respect of his one-third was barred by limitation. Hazari Lal was not appellant in the case. He was arrayed as a respondent. It was argued, therefore, that because he had not appealed his suit ought to stand dismissed with respect to one-third of the property. It was said:

"We are not satisfied that the argument is a sound one. Plaintiff No. 2 derives his title from plaintiff No. 1. If the claim of plaintiff No. 1 is barred by limitation; his title to the whole of the property must be deemed to have been extinguished and the converse proposition that if his claim is not barred by limitation, it is not barred with respect to any portion of the property, is equally true in the circumstances of this case. What may be the equities between the two plaintiffs or what may be the rights of one plaintiff against the other, we are not called upon to decide at this stage. It is clear that the question of title of plaintiff No. 1 affects the claim not only of that plaintiff but also of the plaintiff No. 2.

(1) 27 Ind. Cas. 118; 18 O. C. 34; 1 O. L. J. 747.

(2) 63 Ind. Cas. 101; 9 O. L. J. 88; (1922) A. I. R. (O.) 31.

(3) 81 Ind. Cas. 484; 11 O. L. J. 297; 10 O. & A. L. J. 250; (1924) A. I. R. (O.) 385.

Thus it is a matter of common interest to them and one of them could appeal against the whole decree as the plaintiff No. 1 has done. It will be open to the Court below to decide hereafter as to whether the plaintiff No. 2, if he continues to appear as such in these proceedings, is entitled to any relief separately or not."

This language certainly creates some difficulty, but, if it is borne in mind that the Court was not deciding the case but merely deciding that the transferee was entitled to state his case, the difficulty disappears. The Court below had held that the daughter's son was barred by limitation, and that that bar applied equally to the transferee. I have obtained the record from the record room and I see that the Court of Trial had further held that even if the daughter's son was held to be within time, still his assignee, not being entitled to the benefit of s. 6 of the Limitation Act, would be barred by time. There was thus a double bar against the assignee. The decision of the Appellate Court removed one of these bars and left the path clear for the decision of the suit on the merits as regards the daughter's son. The question was whether the Appellate Court was to pronounce a decision on a point which had already been decided against the assignee. The Appellate Court refused to do so, as they say at that stage, the merits not having been gone into at all. As they said, the title of the daughter's son, if it was not barred by limitation with respect to two-thirds of the property, was equally not barred by limitation with respect to the other third of the property. They preferred to leave the Court of Trial to decide what the rights of the assignee might be. They said that these rights ought not to be decided "at this stage." These words are important. I am asked to construe them as if they had said that the rights had not to be decided "in this litigation", but that is not the meaning. The use of the words, "at this stage" imply on the contrary that they ought to be decided "in this litigation". I cannot believe that the Bench intended in this remand order to lay down the proposition that where there has been an assignment and the assignee is barred by limitation, while the assignor is not because he can claim the privilege of s. 6 of the Limitation Act, that this is to operate in some unexplained fashion in favour of the assignee and bring him within limitation too. It is pointed out that the Court of Trial gave the plaintiffs a joint decree, but it ought not to have given the plaintiffs a joint decree. Their interests are not joint. The plaintiff has no interest left in the property which he has transferred to his assignee, and the assignee has no interest in the property which the plaintiff has retained. It is conceded that if the plaintiff had transferred the whole of the property to a transferee, then neither the plaintiff himself nor his transferee could obtain possession of the property. I cannot see any distinction between a transfer of part of the property and a transfer of the whole.

For these reasons plaintiffs' appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against the decrees of the District Court, Salem, in A. S. No. 35 of 1922 and A. S. No. 256 of 1921, preferred against those of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Salem, in O. S. Nos. 143 of 1920 and 615 of 1919 respectively (O. S. Nos. 511 of 1919 and 1533 of 1917, on the file of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Salem).

Mr. V. C. Seshachariar, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. Krishnamachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the first of these cases, the plaintiff brought a suit on a promissory note dated the 15th June 1916 executed by one Balakrishna Chetty, deceased, to Appudayan, the deceased adoptive father of the plaintiff. The District Munsif dismissed the suit holding that the discharge alleged to be evidenced by Ex. I was proved.

The question was raised in this case as also in the connected S. A. No. 1700 of 1923 whether the plaintiff was in fact the adopted son of Appudayan, and by consent the evidence on this point taken in the other case was treated as evidence in this case before the District Munsif. It was contended by Mr. V. C. Seshachariar for the appellant that such a proceeding is wrong in law and the Vakils have no power to bind their clients by such a consent. The matter is, however, concluded by the Full Bench ruling in Jainab Bibi Saheba v. Hyderally Saheb (1) that the evidence recorded in a previous judicial proceeding between the same parties is made admissible in a subsequent proceeding by the consent of both parties. The suits were heard on the same day, and although the defendants were not the same in the other case, the question of adoption was common to the two cases and all the parties concerned presumably let in their evidence at one and the same time. As Coutts-Trotter, J., (as he then was) held in the case referred to, "Consent can cure what would otherwise be a defective method of letting in evidence in its substance and context relevant and germane to the issues." Both the Courts on the evidence of adoption given in the other case came to the conclusion that the adoption was true.

(1) 56 Ind. Cas. 957; 43 M. 609; 38 M. L. J. 532; 28 M. L. T. 23; (1920) M. W. N. 360; 12 L. W. 64 (F. B.).

The next point is that the acting District Judge having disbelieved, as against the District Munsif Ex. I and having found that it is not genuine ought to have given the defendants an opportunity of letting in further evidence with regard to this Ex. I, as it was not challenged before the District Munsif. I am unable to see how the plaintiff could have challenged it there, as it was a matter of defence and all he could do naturally was to cross-examine the defendant's witnesses on it. Further Ex. I was supported by three witnesses, D. Ws. Nos. 1 to 3. The acting District Judge disbelieved these witnesses when they said that money was paid to the plaintiff. I think this point also fails.

The most substantial point raised in this appeal is that there is nothing to show, on the face of the suit on promissory note Ex. A that it was executed in favour of a managing member and it is contended that there must be something on the face of the document, to show that it is a family debt before the plaintiff can be absolved from the obligation of obtaining a certificate under s. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act. There are cases on both sides of the line. The appellant-defendant here has referred to a case in Venkataramanna v. Venkayya (2), where it was held that a certificate in such a case was necessary unless there was something on the face of the bond to show that the debt was due to the joint family. It was held there that though Act VII of 1899 applied only to cases of succession, the preamble states that it is intended to afford protection to parties paying debts to the representatives of deceased persons. No authorities are referred to in the judgment. On the other hand, in a later case in Pallamraju v. Bapanna (3), Shephard and Boddam, J.J., held that, as the family was admittedly undivided and the plaintiff claimed by survivorship, the Succession Certificate Act did not apply, following a similar case in Subramanian Chetti v. Rekku Sarvai (4). In Pichaikuttia Pillai v. Ranganandan (5), Seshagiri Iyer, J., sitting as a Single Judge held that where the document stands in the name of an individual member and does not show on the face of it that the debt is due to the family, no certificate is necessary, in the case of a debt due to a Hindu joint family. The cases were all reviewed and in the absence of an authoritative ruling by the Full Bench I am bound by the later decisions of the Benches of this Court which Mr. Justice Seshagiri Iyer preferred. A further point is as to Ex. G. The District Munsif held that it constituted an assignment of the promissory note to the plaintiff; the District Judge held against this that it was only a record of proceedings. In this view he is, in my opinion, right.

The second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Ex parte decree, application to set aside—Order conditional on payment of costs—Facts alleged in petition not found to be true or false—Legality of order.

In determining whether an ex parte decree should be set aside or not, it is the duty of the Court to come to a finding whether the facts set forth in the petition are true or false.

It is not proper that the Court should pass a conditional order on payment of costs and to refuse to set aside the decree if costs are not paid.

Manni Lal v. Sheo Baran, 78 Ind. Cas. 157; 27 O. C. 103; 10 O. & A. L. R. 136; 11 O. L. J. 412; (1924) A. I. R. (O.) 389, referred to.

Appeal against an order of the Sub-Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 14th March 1925.

Mr. Mohammad Hafiz, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order refusing to set aside an ex parte decree. The appellant was defendant in the suit, and service was effected on him by affixation to his house on 17th January. The report of the process-server was that the defendant had gone to Fyzabad four days earlier, and it was not known when he would return. There were two objections to this service. The first is that service by affixation on a party who is temporarily absent from home is not good service unless further efforts are made to effect personal service [Sakina v. Gauri Sahai (1).] Secondly, that even supposing the defendant had returned home, he would necessarily have had a very short time, because the date fixed was the 21st of January. If he had been present he would only have had four days, and this time must have been shortened by whatever time elapsed before his return. When the case was called on the 21st of January the defendant was absent. The service was pronounced good, and an ex parte decree was passed for a large sum of money, nearly Rs. 9,000. On the 3rd of February the defendant put an application to have the ex parte decree set aside. He said that he had learned about the suit on the 31st of January, and he supported his application with an affidavit. It was taken up on the 7th of March. The record of that day is brief.

"Applicant in person with B. Anukul Hazra, Pleader. O. P. No. 1 in person. Pt. Parasnath Pleader for all the opposite parties. Opposite Parties' Pleader presses for his costs only.

ORDER—I shall restore the suit conditionally on payment of Rs. 50 Pleader's costs to the opposite parties. Case adjourned till 14th March 1925."

This was not a proper order. It was the duty of the learned Subordinate Judge to come to a finding whether the facts set forth in the petition, supported by the affidavit, were true or false. There seems every reason to suppose that they were true. There was an affidavit. As a matter of fact the original service was not good, although it had been pronounced to be good. There was no evidence to the contrary. There were no materials on which the learned Subordinate Judge could come to a conclusion that the statements were false. If the statements were true there was no reason why the defendant should pay the plaintiff's costs. The reason why he was not present was because he had not been served. But insufficient service was the fault either of the plaintiff or of the Court. It could not be the fault of the defendant. On the 14th of March the defendant had not paid the fifty rupees. He made an application that he should not be asked to pay it at present, but it should be added to the opposite parties' costs when the original suit was decided. The Court then refused to set aside the ex parte order on the ground that the terms imposed had not been carried out. The case resembles Manni Lal v. Shoe Baran (2).

I allow the appeal, set aside the order refusing to restore the suit. I think the best course is to set aside the ex parte decree, and all proceedings subsequent to it, and direct that the suit be restored to the register of pending suits and decided according to law. I make no order as to costs.

Defendants obtained a mortgage-decree against a holding and in execution of the decree themselves purchased the holding. At a sale held in execution of a rent-decree, the holding was subsequently purchased by the plaintiff. Plaintiff thereafter brought a suit to recover possession of the holding from the defendants:

Held, (1) that the mortgage in favour of the defendants was extinguished when the defendants obtained a mortgage-decree and that by purchasing the holding in execution of their decree the defendants had become the owners of the holding and could not set up their mortgage as an encumbrance within the meaning of s. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act;

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 against a decision of the District Judge of Murshidabad reversing a decision of the Munsif of Kandi. The suit out of which the appeal arises was brought by the plaintiff to recover possession of certain property on declaration of his title thereto. The plaintiff's title was based on a purchase at a rent sale on the 21st May 1918. The defence of the defendants was that they had purchased the property on the 17th September 1913 in execution of a mortgage-decree in respect of which they were decree-holders and they alleged that as their mortgage had not been annulled under s. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the plaintiff could not recover his possession of the premises. The first Court dismissed the prayer for khas possession but declared that the plaintiff was entitled to get rent from the defendants in respect of the property. The second Court decreed the plaintiff's claim for khas possession holding that there was no encumbrance on the property.

Now it is urged before us that under the circumstances the mortgage is an encumbrance on the property and that consequently the decree of the lower Appellate Court giving khas possession is incorrect; and reliance is placed by the appellants on the decision in the case of Sukhi v. Ghulam Safdar Khan (1) and on a decision of this Court in the case of Sital Chandra Majhi v. Parbati Charan Chakrabarti (2). The respondent, on the other hand, relied on the decision in the case of Bhawani Kumar v. Mathura Prasad Singh (3) (a decision of the Judicial Committee) and also on a decision of this Court in the case of Sabjan Mandal v. Haripada Saha (4). The appellants distinguished the case in Bhawani Kumar v. Mathura Prasad Singh (3) on the ground that that was decided whilst the provisions of s. 89 of the Transfer of Pro-

erty Act were still in force. The concluding words of that section are that upon the happening of the events therein set out the defendants' right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished and the appellants say that by reason of the repeal of that section and the omission of the concluding words of s. 89 in the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 5 of the C. P. C. which had re-placed s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, the decision in Bhawani Kumar v. Mathura Prasad Singh (3) cannot be relied on. It is necessary, therefore, to examine these cases in order to see if the contention of the appellants is correct. In Bhawani Kumar v. Mathura Prasad Singh (3); the mortgagee had obtained a decree on a mortgage-bond on the 31st May 1899, which decree was made absolute on the 19th December 1899. The decree was executed by the mortgagee on the 19th March 1900 and he himself purchased the property, the sale having been confirmed on the 23rd April 1900. Meantime on the 29th March 1900, there was default in payment of Government revenue and on the 6th of June 1900, the whole share was sold and purchased in the name of the second defendant in the suit by the third defendant. A sale certificate was obtained on the 3rd July 1901 and possession was delivered on the 5th July 1901. The Judicial Committee in that case held that the sale in execution of the mortgage-decree took effect from the actual date of the sale and not from its confirmation and that the mortgagee who had purchased on the 19th March 1900 became by virtue of his purchase the proprietor of the estate sold and not merely a purchaser of such right, title and interest in it as a purchaser might have had and their Lordships, therefore, decided that at the time of the revenue sale there was no encumbrance on the property because by virtue of the purchase by the mortgagee at the sale in execution of the mortgage-decree the mortgagee became the owner of the property and his mortgage was merged in his higher right as a purchaser. That decision was based on the general law and not on any special provisions occurring either in the Transfer of Property Act or in any other Act. As I have already stated that case was followed by this Court in Sabjan Mandal v. Haripada Saha (4). Mr. Justice Chatterjee in delivering the judgment of the Court refers to this case in Bhawani Kumar v. Mathura Prasad Singh (3) and says that by virtue of the purchase the mortgagee became the owner of the property and could not maintain as against himself or as against third parties not connected with the mortgage transactions, the position that his mortgage still remained an encumbrance thereon. The law that was applied in that case was the law as laid down in O. XXXIV, r. 5 of the C. P. C., which, as I have already stated, does not contain the words that appear at the end of s. 89, of the Transfer of Property Act. Now the case in Sukhi v. Ghulam Sajdar Khan (1) was a case between mortgagees. There the puisne encumbrancer had not been made a party to the mortgage suit and he accordingly claimed to redeem the property having regard to his rights as a puisne encumbrancer and it was decided in that case that having regard to the fact that the words which appear at the end of s. 89 are not contained in O. XXXIV, r. 5, it was open to the prior mortgagee to set up as against the puisne encumbrancer his mortgage despite the fact of his purchase in execution of the mortgage-decree. Mr. Justice Mukerjee in the case reported as Sital Chandra Majhi v. Parbati Charan Chakrabarti (2) refers to this decision and states that the conclusion at which he had arrived to which I shall refer presently did not militate against the decision in Bhawani Kumar v. Mathura Prasad Singh (3) which was applied in the case reported as Sabjan Mandal v. Haripada Saha (4). We do not think, therefore, that it can be suggested that he thinks that those two cases are no longer the law having regard to the change which had occurred by reason of the concluding words of s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act not having been imported into the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 5. The point which arose for decision in the case before Mr. Justice Mukerjee was whether the purchase by a landlord at a rent sale does or does not ipso facto cancel the mortgage on the property. In that case the purchase by the landlord at a rent sale was prior to the decree obtained by the mortgage, and Mr. Justice Mukerjee there decides that the mere fact that the landlord had purchased in execution of a rent-decree while the mortgage was still subsisting could not be held by itself to annul the encumbrance. It will be notified that in that case at the time the landlord purchased, the mortgage was a mortgage merely and that there had been no decree in respect thereof. Consequently in that case, when the landlord purchased, the mortgage was a subsisting encumbrance and if the landlord desired to annul it, he could only do so by proper proceedings under s. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is true that Mr. Justice Mukerjee does refer to the change in law by reason of the omission of the concluding words of s. 89 from the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 5. But as I have already stated he expressly says that the decision in Bhawani Kumar v. Mathura Prasad Singh (3) still stands and he does not dissent from Mr. Justice Chatterjee's judgment in Sabjan Mandal v. Haripada Saha (4) and he decided the case on the facts that had happened in the particular case that was before him. Now there is no doubt that the point is not an easy one for it may well be said, as has been urged before us, that if the mortgage even after the purchase by the mortgagee in execution of a mortgage-decree, can be set up as a shield as has been decided in Sukhi v. Ghulam Safdar Khan (1) it is equally open to the mortgagee to set it up as a defence against the landlord who has purchased at a sale in execution of a rent decree and we think that there is good deal to be said for this point of view. But nevertheless I think, that the decision in Sukhi v. Ghulam Safdar Khan (1) must not be taken as conflicting in any way with the decision in Bhawani Kumar v. Mathura Prasad Singh (3) which was decided on general principles but merely as laying down that as between mortgagees it is open to the prior mortgagee even after he has purchased the property in execution of his mortgage-decree to set up his mortgage as a shield against any claim by a puisne encumbrancer whose rights have not been affected by reason of his not being included as a party in the mortgage suit and, therefore, thinking that the decision in Bhawani Kumar v. Mathura Prasad Singh (3) has been unaffected by the decision in Sukhi v. Ghulam Safdar Khan (1), we think that the decision of the lower Appellate Court was right and this appeal must fail.

The appeal is, accordingly, dismissed and with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 3—Multifariousness.

A suit by a plaintiff under s. 13 of the Survey and Boundaries Act of 1897 to set aside an order of the Survey Officer that certain plots of land in the possession of the various defendants are not within the boundaries of the plaintiff's village is not bad for multifariousness.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chittoor, dated the 21st November 1923, in O. S. No. 32 of 1922.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The suit is filed against decisions of the Head Surveyor and Assistant Director of Survey under s. 13 of the Survey and Boundaries Act, 1897. The Survey Authorities decided that certain plots of lands were not as alleged by the plaintiff within the boundaries of the village of Inagaloor of which he is the proprietor. The Subordinate Judge has found the suit bad for multifariousness and put plaintiff to his election on the ground that the disputes are not connected with each other. He also speaks of encroachments but I am unable to see any reference to such in the plaint. Now under the old Code it was held in Dorasamy Pillai v. Muthusamy Mooppan (1) that a suit might be brought against a number of purchasers of different items of land distrained and sold under the Rent Recovery Act as the cause of action, viz., the wrongful sale, was the same against all the defendants. So here, in my opinion, it is the decision of the Survey Authorities and it should be remarked that all the objections seem to have been dealt with in a single order both by the Head Surveyor and by the Assistant Director, that are common cause of action. The sole question in the case is whether plots in the possession of each defendant are or are not included in the village of Inagaloor and I think a right of relief in respect of the same act or series of acts (viz., the decisions referred to above) exists against them severally under O. I, r. 3, C. P. C. If separate suits were brought the common question of fact would be whether the plots should be included in the village of Inagaloor. The respondents do not appear. The Subordinate Judge was wrong. His order must be set aside and the trial of the suit proceeded with.

Minor—Guardian ad litem—Gross negligence, test of—Negligence, meaning of—Due care, standard of.

A minor has a remedy either by application for review of judgment or by separate suit when either "gross" laches or fraud or collusion is found in the next friend or the guardian ad litem, but the negligence or laches of the guardian which entitles the minor to avoid the decree must be of a gross character. The test is whether or not there has been a culpable negligence of the interests of the minor. Has there been in the conduct of the suit any act or omission on the part of the next friend or the guardian ad litem, which in the result has wrought prejudice to the minor's interests? That is what is meant by the expression "gross" negligence or laches when used in this context. [p. 752, col. 2; p. 753, col. 2; p. 754, col. 1.]

Case-law discussed.

Negligence is the breach of a legal duty to take care and unless it is known what that duty is in a particular case it is not possible to predicate whether there has been negligence or not. [p. 753, col. 1.]

The standard of due care in all cases in which a duty to take care exists is the care which would be taken in the same circumstances by an ordinary careful man. The test is the conduct of the average man in like circumstances, with like knowledge and means of knowledge and the amount of care will be different in different cases. [ibid.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Budaun, dated the 22nd November 1923.

Sir Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, Dr. N. C. Vaish and Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This litigation has its origin in a deed of sale executed on the 30th of September 1914 by one Sita Ram and his mother Musammatt Parbati in favour of Haji Muhammad Ghafoor Bakhsh, by which the executants purported to convey certain shares in Kasba Ujhani and Mauza Mahona for a sum of Rs. 13,110 in order to satisfy certain debts and to meet personal expenses. It was represented in the document that the houses in which the vendors were living had been advertised for sale and had to be saved. It was stated moreover in the deed that Sita Ram was the only heir of Musammatt Parbati and that he and she were competent to sell the property. Sita Ram further stated that he had an only son, Deo Dat, who had given his consent to the sale. This was a false statement for it appears that he had no less than eight sons.

In the deed of sale the details of consideration are set out. It appears that there were a number of debts owing which the vendee undertook to pay, and amongst these was a decretal debt for Rs. 1,750 owing to one Kanhaiya Lal.

Ghafoor Bakhsh had some trouble in obtaining mutation on the basis of this document. It appears that the other sons of Sita Ram intervened and made trouble and all this resulted in criminal proceedings taken both by Ghafoor Bakhsh and by the sons of Sita Ram. Eventually in the early part of March 1915 (about 15th March) Ghafoor Bakhsh got possession and mutation.

On the 30th September 1915 one Shankar Prasad filed a suit to pre-empt this sale. One of the defendants to this suit was Ghafoor Bakhsh and another was his wife Musammatt Rashida Khatun. The reason why this lady was impleaded was that after the sale of the 30th of September 1914 and before the suit for pre-emption was brought she had purchased in execution of a decree a share of the Mahona property which had already been sold to her husband. We have already mentioned that there was a decree in favour of one Kanhaiya Lal for Rs. 1,750. It seems that after the execution of the sale-deed in his favour Ghafoor Bakhsh failed to pay off this debt and Kanhaiya Lal took out execution and brought the property which had been mortgaged to him to sale. It was purchased on the 21st January 1915 by Rashida Khatun for Rs. 792 and the sale was confirmed on the 13th of March 1915.

The pre-emption suit brought by Shankar Prasad was decreed on a compromise on the 3rd of January 1916. Under this decree Shankar Prasad was directed to pay Rs. 3,074-7-0 to Ghafoor Bakhsh and his wife; this sum representing all the consideration which had actually passed from these purchasers and including the Rs. 792 which Rashida Khatun had paid for the property in the execution sale.

We now come to the 31st October 1917 on which date there was filed a suit brought by five sons of Sita Ram for the purpose of recovering the property. This suit was Suit No. 185 of 1917. Shankar Prasad the pre-emptor died just after this suit was filed and his sons and grand sons were made defendants in his place. One of these sons was Bansidhar and two of Bansidhar's sons were Brij Lal and Lallu who were both minors and for purposes of the suit Bansidhar was appointed their guardian ad litem.

The sons of Sita Ram who were the plaintiffs alleged that the property sold on the 30th September 1914 was joint ancestral family property; that Sita Ram had no right to sell and that there was no legal necessity for the sale. The sons and grandsons of Shankar Prasad contested the claim on a variety of grounds. The case was fought out to a finish in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Badaun who held that legal necessity had been proved to some extent. The result was that he gave a decree by which the defendants were to be entitled to retain possession of the property if they paid Rs. 2,094 into Court for payment to the plaintiffs. If they failed to do so then the plaintiffs were to be entitled to recover possession from the defendants on payment into Court of a sum Rs. 7,845-8-0.

The plaintiffs appealed against this decree to this Court (F. A. No. 161 of 1919) and the defendants filed cross-objections. The hearing of the appeal occupied a considerable time and it was found necessary to call for a finding on an issue which had not been tried out by the Subordinate Judge, namely, whether the property in dispute or any part of it was joint ancestral family property.

After receipt of the finding this Court decided that out of the item of Ujhani property sold on the 30th September 1914 a 4-biswansi odd share was the separate property of Sita Ram having come to him by collateral inheritance and which he was, therefore, competent to sell without any interference on the part of his sons and grandsons.

The result was that this Court varied the decree of the Trial Court. It dismissed the claim of the plaintiffs with respect to the 4-biswansi share just mentioned and for the rest declared that the plaintiffs could get possession on payment into Court within four months of Rs. 3,189-8-0, that being the sum in respect of which legal necessity was held to have been established.

It appears from the High Court judgment that another plea was raised on behalf of the defendants-respondents at the stage of appeal with reference to the share in Mauza Mahona which, as we have said above, was purchased in execution of Kanhaiya Lal's decree by Rashida Khatun on the 21st January 1915. It was pointed out that Kanhaiya Lal's decree for Rs. 1,750 had been obtained against Sita Ram and his sons and grandsons. The decree was a decree for sale on a mortgage and a copy of it was on the record bearing date 1st of September 1913. It was urged therefore that as this decree bound Sita Ram and his family and as the property had been sold in execution and had passed out of the family Sita Ram's sons could not recover it. This Court held that this claim might have been a good one had it been raised at the proper time, namely, by a plea in the written statement and had the plaintiffs been given notice of the plea. As this, however, had not been done this Court refused to go into the matter at the stage of the appeal.

Taking the hint from the observation of the Court in its judgment in F. A. No. 161 of 1919 the present suit (Suit No. 40 of 1923) was launched by Brij Lal and Lallu sons of Bansidhar who were parties to the earlier litigation and by another minor son of Bansidhar who was not in existence when the earlier suit was brought.

The object of this suit is to obtain a declaration that the decree in the previous Suit No. 185 of 1917 is not binding on the plaintiffs, and in the plaint as filed that relief was sought on the following grounds:—

It was alleged in para. 5 of the plaint that in the earlier suit the defendants second party (which includes Bansidhar the father of the present plaintiffs) "did not take necessary and legal objection with regard to the property sold by auction nor did they produce any evidence in respect thereof". This plea relates to the share in Mahona which was purchased by Rashida Khatun in execution of Kanhaiya Lal's decree.

In para 6 of the plaint it was alleged that the defendants second party (including Bansidhar) acting in collusion with the defendants first party (the sons and grandsons of Sita Ram) "did not produce evidence in support of legal and family necessity although they were called upon to do so nor did they prove the necessity for the antecedent debts nor did they take any proceeding to safeguard the interests of the plaintiffs".

In para. 7 it was pleaded that owing to the negligence and dishonesty of the defendants second party Suit No. 185 of 1917 was ultimately decided against the plaintiffs who were deprived of all the property except the 4 biswansi odd share in Ujhani.

In the 8th paragraph of the plaint it was set out that by reason of the negligence of the defendants second party and their dishonesty and collusion with the defendants first party in the earlier suit the decree was not binding. The suit was contested by the defendants first party, that is to say, the representatives of Sita Ram who denied all the allegations of negligence and collusion and pleaded that the present suit was collusive. No written defence was filed on behalf of the defendants second party, that is to say, the sons and grandsons of Shankar Prasad including Bansidhar.

The written statement filed by the first set of defendants was put in on the 9th of May 1923. On the 24th July 1923 the Subordinate Judge of his own motion examined a person named Ajudhia Prasad or Ajudhia Saran who was the pairokar of the plaintiffs, and later on, that is to say on the 18th September 1923, he examined one of the defendants second party, Pandit Ajudhia Prasad, who is an uncle of the plaintiffs. Why he examined Pandit Ajudhia Prasad is not apparent for this man did not represent the plaintiffs in the earlier suit. As we have said they were represented by their own father Bansidhar who is alive and is a party to the present proceedings.

After these two persons had been examined the plaintiffs on the 2nd of October 1923 applied for amendment of the plaint. They asked that the allegations of collusion and dishonesty made against the defendants second party might be struck out of the plaint and asked for the addition of a fresh paragraph, para. 8a, in which it was alleged that there had been dishonesty on the part of a certain karinda, Narain Das, who had been employed by the defendants second party.

On the 4th October the Subordinate Judge disposed of this application. He allowed the allegations of dishonesty and collusion to be struck out from the plaint but he refused to allow the addition of a new paragraph to the plaint, viz., para. 8a, though strangely enough in spite of this order the addition to the plaint was made and initialled by the Subordinate Judge.

Without calling for any other evidence on the issue of negligence which he had already framed the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the 2nd of November 1923 on the finding that there had been no such negligence in the conduct of the earlier suit on behalf of the plaintiffs as would justify a declaration that a decree was not binding on them.

We have now this appeal before us in which the judgment of the Subordinate Judge is attacked on various grounds. We do not, in view of the order we are about to pass, propose to discuss at any length at the present moment all the pleas which are set out in the memorandum of appeal. We do not approve of the method by which the Subordinate Judge has disposed of the case. Having framed an issue regarding the question of negligence he proceeded to dispose of it on the evidence of two witnesses of his own choosing and that, in our opinion, was not a proper thing to do. It was open to him, of course, to decide upon the allegations in the plaint that the negligence which was assigned could not constitute a cause of action for the suit but that is not the course which has been followed. We find it necessary, therefore, to remit issues which will be decided after giving both sides opportunity to produce evidence, but before we proceed to do so we think it expedient to make certain observations concerning the questions which arise for disposal.

We would say in the first place, that the complaint laid in the 5th ground of the memorandum of appeal to the effect that the Subordinate Judge should have allowed amendment of the plaint as asked for by the plaintiffs is not well-founded. On the contrary we hold that the Subordinate Judge's order at pages 11 and 12 of the record passed upon the application for amendment was a perfectly proper order. The only fault we have to find with the Subordinate Judge's procedure is that in spite of this order he allowed the whole of para. 8a to be added to the plaint. This was probably the result of inadvertance. At any rate, this para. 8a has no business to be in the plaint and must be expunged from the pleadings to the extent the amendment was disallowed.

In the next place, we have to observe that the allegations of the negligence which constitutes the cause of action are directed against the defendants second party consisting of three persons, Pandit Ajudhia Prasad, Pandit Bansidhar and Kishan Swarup. We have no concern in this case with any negligence or alleged negligence on the part of Ajudhia Prasad or Kishan Swarup. They owed no duty whatever to the present plaintiffs in connection with the previous suit. The only person whose negligence can be pleaded in this suit is Bansidhar who was the guardian ad litem of two of the plaintiffs who were impleaded in Suit No. 185 of 1917 as minor defendants (we have explained that the third plaintiff in the present suit was not born at the time when the earlier suit was brought). And so it follows that what has to be investigated in this suit is the negligence, if any, of Bansidhar.

Coming now to the law which has to be applied we have no doubt that it is well-settled that in certain circumstances a minor can claim to avoid a decree passed against him in a suit in which he was represented by a guardian ad litem. The general rule on this subject derived from the authorities is thus stated in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 17, page 138, para. 136:—

"An infant plaintiff is as much bound as an adult by a judgment or order in the cause even though there may have been irregularities in the conduct of it unless there has been fraud or gross negligence on the part of his next friend".

For a statement of the law as applied in India we may refer to the case reported as Lalla Sheo Churn Lal v. Ramnandan (1). In that judgment various authorities are cited. A reference is made to Macpherson on Infants, page 386, which reads as follows:—

"An infant plaintiff though thus favoured in the course of the suit is as much bound by a decree and by all the proceedings in a cause as a person of full age and cannot, nor can his representatives, open the proceedings unless upon new matter or on the ground of gross laches or of fraud and collusion which will annul the proceedings of the Courts of Justice as much as any other transactions".

Reference is also made to Simpson on the Law of Infants, 1st Edition, p. 475 (1). In this the law is stated as follows:—

"A decree may also be impeached where there has been gross negligence by the next friend in the conduct of the infant's case or new matter discovered since the date of the decree".

The judgment also refers to the case of In re Houghton, Houghton v. Fiddey (2). That was a case in which the Court found that the next friend of the minor had "grossly and inexcusably" neglected his duty, and so it was held that the infant had a remedy and might on the ground of the neglect of duty by the next friend re-open the proceedings.

After referring to these English authorities the Court observed that the same rule of law would be applied in India, namely, that the gross negligence of his next friend would entitle a minor to the avoidance of proceedings undertaken on his behalf, and by parity of reasoning the same rule would apply in the case of a minor defendant who had been represented in litigation by a guardian ad litem.

The law was laid down in the same sense in Ram Sarup Lal v. Shah Latafat Hossein (3), where Gregory v. Molesworth (4) was cited to show that an infant has a remedy either by application for review of judgment or by separate suit when either gross laches or fraud or collusion is found in the next friend. The result appears to be that the negligence or laches of the guardian which entitles the minor to avoid the decree must be of a gross character. The word "gross" is used in all the cases to which we have referred. It has been argued before us and on very good authority that the expression "gross negligence" has no definite meaning and reference has been made to the dictum of Rolfe B. in Wilson v. Brett (5) that he could see no difference between "negligence" and "gross negligence" but that it was the same thing with the addition of a vituperative epithet.

Then there is authority of Lord Denman in Hinton v. Dibbin (6) who says:—

"It may well be doubted whether between 'gross negligence' and negligence merely any intelligible distinction exists."

The truth is that no real definition of negligence can be laid down without a conception of the measure of the duty prescribed in the circumstances of the particular case under consideration.

Negligence is the breach of a legal duty to take care and until we know what the duty is in the particular instance we are unable to predicate whether there has been negligence or not. The standard of due care in all cases in which a duty to take care exists is the care which would be taken in the same circumstances by an ordinary careful man. The test is the conduct of the average man in like circumstances and with like knowledge and means of knowledge and obviously the amount of care will be different in different cases for as observed by a learned author (Salmond in his Law of Torts):

"A reasonable man will not show the same anxious care when handling an umbrella as when handling a loaded gun."

The case we are dealing with here is that of a person appointed as guardian ad litem to look after the interests of an infant defendant and the standard of duty is in this case that which would be followed by the man of ordinary prudence if he were called upon to act in like circumstances on behalf of himself and his own property. He must do as much to protect the interests of the minor as he would do to protect his own.

No more precise definition of the duty of a guardian ad litem can be safely laid down. It is to be observed that it is not every act or omission of a guardian ad litem which may seem at first sight to constitute a falling away from this standard of duty which can be seized upon for the purpose of founding a case of negligence. As was pointed out in the case of Baboo Lckraj Roy v. Baboo Mahtab Chand (7) while it is undoubtedly the duty of guardians scrupulously to regard the interests of minors in dealing with their estates the interests of infants would seriously suffer if a notion were to prevail that guardians were bound for their own security to contest all claims against an infant's estate whether well or ill-founded.

The application of this is that there is no universal duty cast upon a guardian ad litem to defend a suit brought against a minor even if the suit be ill-founded. It may, in the particular circumstances of the case, be expedient in the interests of the minor to refrain from making any defence.

And following this authority it was held in the case of Parneswari Pershad Narayan Singh v. Sheo Dutt Rai (8) that it is not every kind of negligence nor any amount of negligence which would render proceedings otherwise regular and proper liable to be opened. It must be such negligence as leads to the loss of a right which, if the suit had been conducted or resisted with due care, must have been successfully asserted. It is not sufficient to show that the guardian ad litem absented himself; it must also be proved that there was an available good ground of defence which was not put forward owing to the default of the guardian ad litem to appear at the trial. Or, to put the matter differently the nature of the duty demanded from the guardian ad litem may vary according to the nature of the case in which he is called upon to act. An omission to defend or to raise a particular plea or to call certain evidence might, in the circumstances of a particular case, amount to negligence or to a breach of the duty which was owing by the guardian ad litem to the infant in that case. In different circumstances such an omission might not amount to negligence. The thing to be regarded in each circumstance is the interest of the minor.

In short the test which the cases seem to lay down is whether or not there has been a culpable neglect of the interests of the minor. Has there been in the conduct of the suit any act or omission on the part of the guardian ad litem which in the result has wrought prejudice to the minor's interests? That appears to be what is meant by the expression gross negligence or laches when used in this context.

In the case with which we are dealing we are concerned with what was done or not done by Bansidhar alone. He was the person responsible for the protection of the interests of his two minor sons who, like himself, were impleaded as defendants. Incidentally it may be observed that Bansidhar was not engaged merely in looking after the interests of the minors alone; his own interests in the same property were at stake and were capable of protection in the same way.

The matter then to be decided is whether with reference to the allegations contained in paras. 4 and 5 of the plaint as they stand, and to those contained in paras. 6, 7 and 8 as now amended, Bansidhar was guilty of negligence in the sense laid down above. We think this question must be enquired into and an opportunity given to the plaintiffs, which has not hitherto been given them, of showing if they can, the negligence asserted. We, therefore, remit the following issues to the Court below for findings:—

(1) With reference to the allegations contained in paras. 4 and 5 and the amended paras. 6, 7 and 8 of the plaint was Bansidhar as guardian ad litem in Suit No. 185 of 1917 guilty of negligence in the conduct of the suit on behalf of his minor sons?

(2) If so, has that negligence resulted in prejudice to the rights of the minors?

Both sides will be allowed to produce evidence on these issues and the findings will be returned to this Court within three months from this date. On receipt of the findings the usual period of ten days will be allowed for objections.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 83, 84.—

Mortgagor, deposit of money by—Son of mortgagee minor—Guardian ad litem, appointment of, whether necessary.

Under ss. 83 and 84 of the Transfer of Property Act, where the mortgagee is a minor and unable to draw the mortgage-money out of Court, without security, it is necessary that a guardian ad litem should be appointed and unless such a guardian is appointed it cannot be said that the mortgagor has done all that is necessary for him to do to enable the mortgagee to draw the money. Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, South Kanara, in A. S. No. 55 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Puttur, in O. S. No. 342 of 1920.

Mr. K. Y. Adiga, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Sundara Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the plaintiffs brought a suit to oblige the defendants to accept a mortgage amount which plaintiffs deposited in Court under s. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. There is no dispute as to the amount. The defendants are the sons of the original mortgagee and consist of two brothers, a major and a minor respectively. The petition under s. 83 was presented on the 17th March 1920 and prayed "that the under-mentioned amount may be ordered to be paid to the counter-petitioners after obtaining security for the minor if necessary etc." The first counter-petitioner filed a statement in answer to this petition on the 21st of April 1920 in which he stated that he was the ejaman of the family, that the petitioner had refused to pay the amount to him and had deposited it in Court and that the petitioner is not entitled to ask for security. He adds, "If the petitioner is willing to pay the said amount to me, I consent to receive the amount." On this, the District Munsif ordered the petition to be recorded observing that the Vakil who appeared on behalf of the 1st counter-petitioner had no authority to appear for the minor that the 1st counter-petitioner refused to receive the amount by giving security, that he was the guardian (I presume he means natural guardian) of the 2nd counter-petitioner and that the former was absent. The District Munsif held that it was not possible to order the payment. Hence the suit.

The District Munsif in the suit held that the 1st defendant by his conduct in not having entered the appearance of the 2nd defendant disabled the Court from ordering the payment apart from the question of security. So he held that the tender in Ex. A was valid. The District Judge upheld the decision of the District Munsif. The plaintiffs' explanation as detailed by the District Judge as to why they made the offer of payment conditional is that they believed the mortgage-money to have been the self-acquisition of the father so that the two defendants would take equally as heirs and not as survivors. I cannot say that the explanation is very lucid and no attempt has been made to explain it by the learned Vakils who are appearing before me. The question is entirely technical and Mr. Yegnanarayana Adiga for the appellants contends that the tender is invalid because in fact the mortgagor has omitted certain formalities which are necessary under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and the C. P. C. before this can be held to be a valid tender. The chief section we are concerned with here is s. 84 which provides that interest shall cease from the date of the tender or as soon as the mortgagor or such other person as aforesaid has done all that has to be done by him to enable the mortgagee to take the amount out of Court. The objection here is that it is for the mortgagor to carry out all the requirements of the law and not the mortgagee, so that in this case the mortgagor having joined in his petition, the minor defendant with the major ought to have seen that the minor was properly represented by the appointment of a guardian in order that the Court might be able to order the money to be paid. It must be remembered, it is not a case of a deposit to the credit of persons entitled to a definite share in the mortgage-money but that these two persons were members of an undivided Hindu family. There seems to be a dearth of authorities for the proposition that has been advanced in Madras. But in Pandurang v. Mahadaji (1), a Bench of the Bombay High Court held in a similar case that it was the duty of the mortgagor not only to apply for the appointment of a guardian ad litem but to see that one was appointed, and that for the purpose of a tender under the Transfer of Property Act, it is incumbent on the mortgagor to procure the appointment of a guardian ad litem and that, until such appointment has been made, there is no one to whom under the Act the tender on behalf of the minor could be made. The same view seems to prevail in Allahabad. Sheo Saran Chaudhri v. Ram Lagan Das (2) has been referred to on both sides. On behalf of the respondent here it is relied on as showing that, where a mortgage is in reality a mortgage taken by the head of a Hindu family, the mortgage-money being supplied from the joint family funds, it may well be held that an offer to pay the money due on such a mortgage to the managing member is a good and valid tender. It is said in this case that there was such an offer, but the wording of the petition shows that it was not so. The amount was prayed to be paid to the counter-petitioners after obtaining security for the minor if necessary. A point might have been taken that this is a conditional tender. But as I have come to my conclusion on other grounds it is unnecessary to definitely decide that this was a conditional tender. Now in Khunnu Mal v. Indarpal Singh (3) it was held on a construction of ss. 83 and 84 that, where the mortgagee is a person who is unable to draw the money out of Court, it is necessary that a guardian ad litem should be appointed and, therefore, unless such a guardian was appointed it cannot be said that the mortgagor had done all that was necessary for him to enable the mortgagee to draw the money (cf. s. 103 of the Transfer of Property Act and O. XXXIII, r. 6, of the C. P. C.). It has been held by a single Judge of this Court (Oldfield, J.), in a case reported in Krishna Aiyar v. Chakrapani (4) that the next friend of a minor plaintiff, even if he is the managing member of a joint Hindu family of which both are members, is not entitled to draw money from Court on behalf of the minor plaintiff without furnishing security.

On the other side I am referred to a case of the Privy Council reported as Walian v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (5) in which their Lordships held that in the case before them the absence of a formal order appointing the mother as guardian ad litem was only an irregularity and the irregularity could be cured. There it was uncertain whether there had been a formal order of appointment as the appointment, if made, would have been made 14 years before the question arose, and the mother had appeared throughout the proceedings as guardian. It does not appear to me that the facts of that case in any way resemble those of this case, or can constitute an authority to bind me.

I must, therefore, hold that the mortgagor has not performed what the law requires to be performed when a deposit is made under s. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act and that the lower Court was wrong in holding that he had. There was, therefore, in my opinion no valid tender under s. 83, and, therefore, there is in my view no question of interest on this mortgage.

A question is raised as regards costs. The appellants here failed in both the lower Courts and had to pay the respondents their costs. My order as to costs in the lower Courts is that each party should bear their own. With regard to costs here, the appellants must have them. The appeal is, therefore, allowed with costs in this Court.

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—In the suit out of which this appeal arises the plaintiff sued for the recovery of produce rent of a certain parcel of land. The plea of the defendants was that the land no doubt originally belonged to the plaintiff but that by a partition between the plaintiff and his co-sharers a portion of this land had fallen to a third party and that, therefore, he was not obliged to pay the whole rent claimed. The Trial Court held that this question as to portion of the land being held by a third party was res judicata between the plaintiff and the defendants and decreed the plaintiff's suit in full. The defendants appealed to the District Court and that Court held that there was not sufficient material on the record to identify the land in the present suit with the land in former suit and he remanded the case for a re-trial. The Trial Court accepted the defence and decreed the suit in part. The plaintiff once more appealed to the District Court. The District Court held that the question as to whether the portion of land for which rent was claimed belonged to a third party was res judicata between the parties to the suit and he, therefore, allowed the appeal holding that the defendants were tenants of the plaintiff in regard to the whole land in suit. The effect of the finding is to decree the whole of the plaintiff's suit. The defendants have appealed to this Court.

A preliminary point has been raised that s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is a bar to an appeal to this Court. As the appeal fails on the merits it is unnecessary to decide this point. The appellants have raised three points in appeal. First of all, it is urged that the lower Appellate Court was in error in holding that the defence was barred by the rule of res judicata. Secondly, it was urged that the first Court of Appeal having held that the plea of res judicata was not available to the plaintiff it was not open to the Court of Appeal when the case was taken up again on appeal to have entertained this plea of res judicata; and, lastly, it was urged that the lower Appellate Court erred in admitting in evidence certain additional evidence, namely, the plaint which has been marked Ex. (6) without giving its reasons for admitting it in evidence.

With regard to the first contention the appellants rely on the case of Nilmadhub Sarkar v. Brojo Nath Singha (1). The facts of that case, however, are different. It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to whether a previous decision in a rent suit does or does not operate as res judicata. In the case, we have just referred to, the learned Judges remarked that the case might have been different if the Court had in the previous suit definitely determined the area of the land in the defendants' possession and the annual rent payable for the same. It might then be said that the determination was general and not limited to the particular years for which the rent was claimed. Now in the present case the point on which it is sought to establish res judicata between the parties was whether a certain portion of the land did or did not belong to a third party. This point was decided in the former suit and it cannot be said that this is a question which is limited to the particular year for which rent is claimed and, therefore, this case is distinguishable from the case relied upon by the learned Vakil for the appellants. We think that the judgment in the former rent suit does operate as res judicata between the parties. The parties are the same, the areas of the lands are the same and the defence is the same, namely, a third party holding certain portion of the whole land.

The next point raised is that when the case came up for the first time in appeal the Appellate Court held that the previous judgment could not operate as res judicata. As a matter of fact the Appellate Court in that appeal did not decide that point at all. What it did decide was that there was not sufficient material on the record to show whether or no the question was or was not res judicata and that being so, it cannot be said that it decided that it was res judicata and it was, therefore, open to the Judge when the case came up to him for the second time to decide that this question was res judicata between the parties.

The last point raised by the learned Vakil for the appellants is that the lower Appellate Court admitted certain additional evidence without giving any reason for it and without giving the parties an opportunity to argue it. It will appear from the order-sheet that this additional evidence which is the plaint in the former rent suit was put in by the plaintiff on the 23rd November. No doubt the case had already been argued in part but the order-sheet shows that after this document was put in further argument was heard. The document was exhibited on the 1st December. But it had been put in evidence on the 28th November during the course of the argument. The list shows that it was admitted without objection. No doubt the learned Judge who admitted this document in evidence neglected to state his reasons for admitting it. That, however, would not render the evidence inadmissible. It does not appear that the parties were in any way prejudiced. They did not object at the time of the admission of the evidence that they had no opportunity to argue on it. All the points are, therefore, decided against the appellants.

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

A Hindu testator devised certain property in favour of a female stating that she would be "malik mokamil" thereof and then proceeded to state that at times of real necessity she would be at liberty to mortgage the property or otherwise deal with the same and out of the income and produce of the property to find means for her livelihood:

JUDGMENT.

Sen, J.—There is only one point in this appeal and that is whether upon a proper construction of the last Will of one Sheogopal Upadhyaya the property in dispute passed to the plaintiff's mother Kishun Kuer absolutely or only for life.

It appears that Sheogopal had two sons both of whom predeceased him. Sheogopal died leaving one Bacha Kuer the widow of his son Anmaul Upadhaya and Kishun Kuer the widow of his son Ratan Upadhaya. In his Will, Sheogopal provided that the property in question should be enjoyed by Bacha Kuer so long as she might live; and that Bacha Kuer should be able to maintain herself out of the property, but that she would have no power or right to make any sort of transfer of the same; and on her death the property would come to the possession of Musammatt Kishun Kuer.

As regards the character of the enjoyment of Musammatt Kishun Kuer provided for in the Will, there is a great deal of dispute between the parties. The appellant before us contends that there are words of disposition which would clearly amount to conferring an absolute estate upon Kishun Kuer, whereas the respondent contends that there are certain terms in the Will which would clearly show that the intention of the testator was not to confer an absolute estate but only the interest of a limited owner. A great deal of stress is laid upon the use of the words "malik mokamil". The learned Vakil for the appellant contends that the very use of the word malik shows that the estate that was purported to be granted to Kishun Kuer was an absolute estate and that once that absolute estate was conferred upon Kishun Kuer then the restrictions laid down in the later portions of the Will would be of no avail. Various rulings are cited in support of this proposition, but the matter is now beyond all doubt that the use of the word malik does not necessarily imply that the estate conferred is an absolute estate. As observed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (1) the word malik is not a term of art, it does not necessarily define the quality of estate taken; but in the context of the Will before their Lordships in that case their Lordships thought that the estate conferred was an absolute estate. Therefore, the real question before us is as to whether, reading the context, the word malik mokamil in the present case indicates that an absolute estate was intended to be given to Kishun Kuer. I think it is clear that the testator did not intend to give an absolute estate to Kishun Kuer for he observes that "it shall also be within the power of the said Kishun Kuer that at times of real necessity she will meet the same by mortgaging and giving in zurpeshgi portions of the lands; further she will do what she likes and from the income and produce of the above she will afford her livelihood, perform pilgrimages hear Khata Puran etc. etc."

Now, if the testator really intended to grant an absolute estate it would be entirely unnecessary for him to state that at times of real necessity the donee would be at liberty to mortgage the properties or otherwise deal with the same and out of the income and produce of the properties to find means for her livelihood. There is not a word in the Will to show that the testator ever contemplated that the corpus of the property would be alienated by Kishun Kuer in any way.

The learned Vakil for the appellant points out that the words "she may do what she likes" indicate that the testator intended to give her absolute powers of disposal over the property. That does not appear to me to be a correct construction of the words, for they must again be taken together with the context and judging from the manner in which those expressions have been used, it seems to me that what the testator intended to say was that she would be at liberty to do what she chose with the income and produce of the property. At any rate, it does not appear that those words would confer upon the devisee the power to deal with the corpus. In view of the fact that no absolute estate was conferred upon Kishun Kuer, the question does not rise as to whether there were in the later portions of the Will expressions repugnant to an absolute estate which would, therefore, have to be declared to be invalid and of no effect. Taking the instrument in its entirety, I am of opinion that what was really intended to be conferred upon Kishun Kuer was the estate of a Hindu woman subject to alienations only in the event of legal necessity.

In the circumstances the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920)—Rules for decision of election disputes, r. 12—Disqualified candidate elected—Objection petition—Next candidate, whether can be declared elected.

Under r. 12 of the Rules for the decision of disputes as to the validity of an election under the Madras District Municipalities Act, if the candidate obtaining the largest number of votes at an election is unseated on the ground that he is interested in a Municipal contract and is, therefore, disqualified from sitting, the candidate obtaining the next largest number of votes cannot be declared elected in the absence of an allegation and proof that the disquali-cation under which the successful candidate is ultimately found to labour was known to the voters who cast their votes for him. [p. 759, col. 2.]

If a voter throws away a vote by ignoring something which he could have known and which would have told him that he was throwing away his vote because he was giving it for a person who could never succeed in the election, then his vote is to be taken as wiped out of the election and the man who has the next highest number of votes can be declared duly elected; but, if the votes were given in ignorance of the disqualification under which the candidate of his choice was in fact labouring, then it would be inequitable to allow the votes to be thrown away for that reason and the only proper course is to order re-election. Mr. T. V. Ramanatha Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the candidate who obtained the greatest number of votes at the election was unseated on the ground that he was interested in a Municipal contract and that, therefore, he was disqualified from sitting. The petitioner claimed the seat but he did not allege that the disqualification under which the successful candidate was ultimately found to labour was known to all or any of the voters who cast their votes for him. The first argument on behalf of the 2nd respondent was that r. 12 of the Rules for the decision of disputes as to the validity of an election means that if the seat were claimed by the petitioner, the Judge must declare him duly elected and that the option of ordering a second election only applies to cases where the petitioner did not claim the seat. That seems to us a quite untenable view and we do not think that the draftsman of these Rules—and it is a matter of common knowledge that both the District Municipalities Act (V of 1920) and the rules drawn under it were very largely based on English procedure and English decisions—could have meant to overlook the fundamental principles which have governed English Electoral Courts for many years. The principles appear to be these and we cannot put them better than they were put in the argument of Mr. Corrie in Hobbs v.

Morey (1). He says, "the principle of Election Law is that when there has been an election the candidate who is declared to be elected must be shown to have the majority of votes". This prima facie requirement of the law is subject to a modification. He goes on, "If, however, a candidate is disqualified by status, as in the case of a woman or a felon, the votes given for that candidate will be held to have been thrown away, and the opposing candidate, although in fact he has received a less number of votes, will be declared to be elected". That was the argument which was accepted by the learned Judges and on which Mr. Justice Kennedy's judgment is based. There are several authorities which we need not trouble to go into. The effect of those authorities is that, if a voter throws away a vote by ignoring some thing which he could have known and which would have told him that he was throwing away his vote because he was giving it for a person who could never succeed in the election, then his vote was to be taken as wiped out of the election and the man who has the next highest number of votes can be declared duly elected; but, if the votes were given in ignorance of the disqualification under which the candidate of his choice was in fact labouring, then it would be inequitable to allow the votes to be thrown away for that reason and the only proper course is to order re-election. There is a passage in the judgment of Kennedy, J. which is relied upon to show that in this case it would be a suitable course to have a further inquiry to see whether the 2nd respondent can bring himself within the words of the learned Judge. Those words are these. He sets out the principle that the disqualification should be apparent and says "As here the disqualification was not apparent and the petition does not allege that the voters knew of the respondent's disqualification (the only notices being notices to the Mayor and to the opposing candidate) and the petitioner had only a minority of votes, I do not think that he can successfully claim the seat".

We respectfully accept the view put forward by Kennedy, J., as accurate, though we see the very inconvenient consequences that might arise if such an inquiry as is outlined were ever ordered. But, as there is here no allegation of knowledge of the disqualification on the part of the persons who voted for the unseated candidate, we agree that the proper course is the one suggested by the learned Judge and there is no cause to interfere. Both the petitions are dismissed.

ORDER.—This is a first civil appeal. A preliminary objection is raised that the appeal lies to the District Judge and not to this Court. This objection must prevail. Under s. 18 of the Oudh Civil Courts Act (XIII of 1879), the appeal lies to the District Judge where the value of the suit does not exceed Rs. 5,000. The suit was one for pre-emption, and it arose out of a sale of two villages Raghunathpur and Asni. These two villages had been sold by means of a single sale-deed, and the price as set forth in the sale-deed was Rs. 14,343, without specification of how much was paid for each village. The plaintiff had a right to pre-empt the share sold in Raghunathpur. He stated in his plaint that the true price paid was Rs. 10,000 only, and that the higher price was fraudulently entered in the sale-deed. He further made a calculation that out of Rs. 10,000, the price of the share sold, according to area, would be Rs. 3,552-12-0 and he asked for a decree for pre-emption at that figure. But he also made the calculation for the price in the sale-deed. He brought it out at Rs. 4,997-5-9, and he announced himself prepared to pay any sum which the Court might find to be right. He valued the suit for Court-fees at five times the land revenue which came to Rs. 171-14-0 and for jurisdiction he valued the suit at Rs. 3,552-12. The defendant admitted plaintiff's claim to pre-empt, but he said that the proportionate value of the property was Rs. 7,650. The Court of trial gave plaintiff a decree for pre-emption on payment of Rs. 7,410-3. Plaintiff comes here in appeal asking to have this amount reduced by Rs. 1,700. He is prepared to pay Rs. 5,700-3. The question is what is the value of the suit. The ordinary rule is that the value of the suit is whatever the plaintiff has asked for in his plaint. The rule is not absolute. The main exception is where the plaintiff has intentionally mis-stated the value of the suit in order to have his matter heard by the wrong Court. There are other possible exceptions none of which will apply to the present case. The plaintiff quite clearly valued his suit at Rs. 3,552 and 12 annas. There was no intentional error in this. He was not certain what the market-value of the property was, but he thought that that was what it might be, and he was prepared to pay that figure. That being so, that is the value of his suit, and will remain so through out all its stages. The case is strictly on all fours with Thakur Sheodat Singh v. Thakur Bishunath Singh (1) and the order to be passed will be the same.

I direct that the memorandum of appeal be returned for presentation to the proper Court. The appellant must pay respondent's costs in this Court.

Execution of decree—Application filed on last day of limitation—Particulars, want of, effect of.

An application for execution of a decree was filed on the last day of limitation and the necessary particulars were either omitted or were entered incorrectly. The omissions were pointed out to the applicant and the Court returned the application so that the omissions may be supplied. A week later the application was re-filed without the order of the Court having been fully complied with. The Court gave another opportunity to the applicant to remove the defects but he failed to do so. When most of the particulars had been supplied it was discovered that the application had originally been filed on the last day of limitation.

Held, that the original application filed was a mere scrap of paper and did not amount to an application for execution and that, consequently, no application for execution had been made within limitation. [p. 762, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Adami, J.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge of Bhagalpur, setting aside the order of the Munsif of Madhipura, rejecting an application for execution of a decree. It appears that the decree of which execution was sought was passed on the 28th October 1911, and time, therefore, would expire on the 28th October 1923. On the 13th November 1923, the application was filed. It would be in time on that date because that date was the first date after the Civil Court vacation. The application, however, was defective in very many ways; the heading was blank and so was column 8, column 6 was not correctly entered and no list of the properties sought to be sold was given; sheet No. 2 was blank and there was no copy of the decree attached to the application, column 10 did not show a clear statement of the petition, the names of the decree-holders were not given. The Munsif passed an order on the 13th November 1923: "Petition returned for compliance of the omissions pointed out." No date was given for compliance. On the 19th November, the application was put in again, but it was found that all the defects noted had not been removed, and the Munsif passed an order on that date that the decree-holder must remove all the errors by the 4th of December. On the 7th December, the order-sheet shows that, the number and date of the previous execution proceedings had not been correctly given; it was noted that the decree appeared to be time-barred, that is to say, I suppose, that the application was time-barred. The Munsif ordered that the decree-holder should shew cause by petition why the application should not be rejected, and, if he failed, the petition would stand time-barred. The application was returned for compliance by the 17th December. The next order on the order sheet is not dated, but it is to the effect that the order of the 7th December must be complied with by the 17th of January, and it seems that some objection was taken that notice of the order of the 7th January had not been given to the Pleader. No petition was put in on the 17th January 1924, but on the 18th January, the decree-holder filed a petition showing cause why the application should not be found to be time-barred and excused his failure to file the application on the 17th on the ground that he could not get any stamp on that date. The next order on the order-sheet is dated the 28th January 1924 and is "register the petition." This entry was made by a clerk without orders from the Munsif, and the Munsif paid no attention to it. He found that the application was beyond time and time-barred.

An appeal was made to the District Judge and he held that, as the Munsif had given no date on the 13th November 1923, for compliance with his order, but on the 19th November gave time till the 4th December for compliance, it must be held that he had allowed time till the 4th of December, and thus had saved the application from being time-barred. The learned District Judge admits that, even on the 4th December, the application was still defective, but he decided, on the basis of various rulings which he cited that the defects on the 4th December were not material defects and, therefore, it must be held that time had been extended and the order had been complied with by the 4th December. He, therefore, admitted the application.

In my opinion, the application should be held to be time-barred. It is clear that at the last moment the decree-holder put in a piece of paper with certain facts written on it and certain prayers, but that application was not an application for execution such as is required by law. It was very flagrantly defective; it was treated as being of no avail and it was returned to the decree-holder to be completed in proper form. At that time the question whether the application was time-barred could not be considered, because the facts stated in the application did not afford the necessary information; it was in fact treated as no application at all. On the 19th November time was given until the 4th December, and it was then first noticed that the application appeared to be time-barred, and the decree-holder was called upon to point out any reasons why it should not be condemned as time-barred.

In the case of Salimulla Bahadur v. Sainaddi Sarkar (1), a decree-holder applied for execution of his decree and, before the period of limitation had arrived, he applied to the Court under O. XXI, r. 17 to be allowed to file a list of immoveable properties. The Court simply made the order "permitted" and did not fix any time within which the list was to be filed. The list was subsequently filed after the period of limitation had already run. It was there held that the proceedings in execution were barred by limitation inasmuch as the provisions of O. XXI, r. 17, sub-r. (2) were not complied with, and the necessary formalities were not carried out within the time prescribed by law. In that case, as in this case, it was not brought to the notice of the Court at the time the application was made that there was any question of limitation. The failure to file a list of properties was a material defect and, by the time that the order was passed on the 19th November, the application was already time-barred.

The learned District Judge has cited various cases where various defects were held to be individually not material. But in the present case, the application was defective in nearly every way and many of the defects were material. The decree-holder in the later stages seems to have continued to delay and his excuse that he could not file the petition on the 17th January, because he could not get the stamp was not a good one. I can see no good reason for considering that it can be held that an application for execution was made within time, and in my opinion the application should be held to be time-barred.

The appeal should be allowed with costs, the order of the learned District Judge set aside and that of the Munsif restored.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—I agree.

 Limitation, operation of - Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 148.*

Where a usufructuary mortgage provides that the right of redemption would accrue only after possession is delivered to the mortgagee, limitation does not run against the mortgagor until possession is delivered to the mortgagee. [p. 764, col. 1.]

A usufructuary mortgage executed in 1854 provided that the mortgagee would retain possession of the mortgaged land and that he would realise rents, and that afterwards if the mortgagor re-paid the money, then the land would be released. The mortgagee did not get possession before December 1860. In September 1919 a suit was brought to redeem the property:

Held, that under the terms of the mortgage-deed, the right of redemption did not arise until after possession had been delivered to and enjoyed by the mortgagee, and that the suit brought well within sixty years from December 1860 was within time. [p. 765, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—This appeal is by the plaintiffs and arises out of a suit brought by them for redemption and after redemption for recovery of possession of the mortgaged property. The facts shortly stated are these:—

It appears that the predecessors of the plaintiffs gave a mortgage of the properties in suit in favour of the predecessors of defendants Nos. 1 to 12. The plaintiffs alleged that the mortgage was an usufructuary mortgage and that under the conditions of that mortgage the mortgagees were to enjoy possession of the properties in lieu of interest and that the mortgage would be redeemable on payment of the principal money which was a sum of Rs. 188. It is not stated that there was any date fixed for the re-payment of the money and as it would appear later on no such date was fixed at the time of the original mortgage transaction. The plaintiffs now want to redeem the mortgage of 1854 on payment of the principal amount which was paid under the mortgage. It was further alleged by the plaintiffs that in the year 1855 a suit was brought by the mortgagee and that suit was non-suited. Nothing came out of those proceedings. Then the mortgagees brought a suit for possession of the mortgaged properties in the year 1859 and that suit terminated in a decree for possession in favour of the mortgagees as mortgagees. That decree was passed in 1860.

The present suit was brought on the 12th September 1919. This suit was brought not only against the representatives of the original mortgagees defendants Nos. 1 to 12 but against a number of other defendants, who, according to the plaintiffs, were in possession of a part of the mortgaged property as purchasers from the mortgagees.

The main defence and the common defence of all the defendants was that the suit was barred by limitation. There were special defences set up by the other defendants, I mean the defendants other than the defendants Nos. 1 to 12 upon the special circumstances of the case for each set of defendants. I ought to have stated that the plaintiffs' allegation in their plaint that the mortgage was an usufructuary mortgage was not traversed or in any way controverted by the defendants in their written statement. The Trial Court came to the conclusion that the mortgage was a usufructuary mortgage. The original mortgage-deed is not forthcoming; but it appears that the deed was produced in the suit of 1850 and the terms of the mortgage have been gathered from the proceedings of that suit, and, as I have already stated the Court of first instance in trying the question as to limitation says as follows:—"In case of usufructuary mortgage embodying stipulation for redeeming the mortgage whenever money is paid, right to redeem undoubtedly arises from the date of the mortgage." Therefore, there was no question raised in the Court of first instance that the mortgage in question was anything less than an usufructuary mortgage. As no date for re-payment of the money was stated in the original mortgage the Court of first instance held that the period of limitation would run from the date of the mortgage. It appears that, that Court came to the conclusion that the suit was not barred by limitation although it was brought evidently after more than 60 years from the date of the original mortgage, namely February 1854 because there was admission of liability within 60 years of this. It was sought by the plaintiffs in the Court of first instance to establish this acknowledgment of the rights of the mortgagees in the previous suit of 1859. The Court, came to the conclusion that the bar of limitation was saved by the acknowledgment within s. 19 of the Limitation Act. The Court of first instance decreed the suit.

On appeal by the defendants the lower Appellate Court has disposed of the case on the question of limitation holding that the acknowledgment relied upon by the plaintiffs was really not established by the proceedings of the earlier suit; and in that view the suit was dismissed without any trial of the rights of the various defendants Nos. 1 to 12 the original mortgagees. As I have already stated the present appeal is by the plaintiffs and the learned Advocate who has appeared for them did not question the finding of the lower Appellate Court that there was no acknowledgment within the meaning of s. 19 to save the suit from the bar of limitation. He, however, contended that the period of limitation would run not from the date of the mortgage but from the date when the mortgagees obtained possession of the properties and on the ground that the mortgage was not a completed transaction until the mortgagees obtained possession as usufructuary mortgagees.

It was, secondly, argued that apart from the general question as to whether an usufructuary mortgage is a completed mortgage until possession is delivered, in the present case the right of redemption did not arise under the terms of the mortgage until the mortgagees had obtained possession and enjoyed such possession and then the right of the mortgagors to redeem would arise.

The learned Vakils for the defendants raised the question as to whether the mortgage in suit was really an usufructuary mortgage or not. They contended that the mortgage was really a mortgage by conditional sale. It appears to us, however, that it was not disputed by the defendants that the mortgage was an usufructuary mortgage as was alleged in the plaint by the plaintiffs. The Court of first instance clearly proceeded upon the view that the mortgage was an usufructuary mortgage. In the lower Appellate Court, it appears, that no question was raised by the defendants who were appellants before that Court that the finding of the First Court that the mortgage was an usufructuary mortgage was not correct. The points for determination as stated by the learned Subordinate Judge do not show that such a question was raised before him. We have the terms of the mortgage as set out in the judgment and decree of the year 1860 and we agree with the learned Munsif that the mortgage was an usufructuary mortgage. Then the question arises when did the time run against the plaintiffs for redemption of the mortgage. Article 148 of the Limitation Act runs as follows:— "Against a mortgagee to redeem or to recover possession of immoveable property mortgaged. When the right to redeem or to recover possession accrues." Apparently, therefore, when there is a date for re-payment fixed in the original mortgage-deed, the time would run from such date. The question then arises when does the right to redeem or to recover possession accrue when there is no specific date mentioned in the terms of the mortgage. Ordinarily in such a case the time would run from the date of the mortgage and as an authority for this proposition it is sufficient to refer to the case of Soni Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal (1) where the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council pointed out that in the absence of a date fixed in the mortgage-deed the time would run from the date of the mortgage. It was argued by the learned Advocate for the appellants that an usufructuary mortgage is not completed until the mortgagee obtains possession of the property and limitation will not run until the transaction is completed and in support of this view the learned Advocate relies upon the language of s. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act. Although the mortgage in question was executed long before the Transfer of Property Act came into operation the provisions of the Act may be relied upon in support of the contention now raised as a general principle of law. In the view that we take of the second question we think it is unnecessary for us to decide this questions for the purposes of this appeal. It appears to us from the terms of the mortgages as set out in the earlier litigations that it was stipulated in the mortgage in question that the right of redemption would accrue after the mortgagees were put in possession and after they had enjoyed the usufructs of the property. As no date for redemption was fixed it appears to us that this condition in the deed itself is very material for the purpose of showing what was in the contemplation of the parties as to when the right of redemption would be exerciseable by the mortgagors. It appears from the judgment in the suit of 1859 that the terms of the mortgage were stated as follows: "It clearly appears therefrom that Feda Gazi and Hira Bibi and Khaidja Bibi mortgaged the disputed taluka lands to the plaintiffs' father on receipt of Rs. 188 from him on condition that the plaintiffs' father would retain possession of the said land and that he would realise rents and that afterwards if the mortgagor re-paid the money, then the land would be released." It, therefore, appears from the terms of this mortgage that it was contemplated that the right of redemption of the mortgagors would accrue only after the mortgagees were put in possession of the mortgaged properties and had realised rents of those properties and, as I have already stated, in the present case, the possession of the mortgaged properties was not delivered to the mortgagees at the time of the mortgage but the mortgagees obtained possession of the properties as usufructuary mortgagees after they had obtained a decree for possession in the year 1860. We, therefore, think that the contention of the learned Advocate that the right to redeem the mortgage as provided for in Art. 148 of the Limitation Act did not arise under the terms of the mortgage until after possession had been delivered and enjoyed by the mortgagees is sound. That being so, the suit which was brought well within sixty years from 1860 would be within time. We have not got the exact date when possession was recovered under the decree of 1860, but possession could not have been obtained earlier than the 4th December 1860 which would be within 60 years from the date of the present suit which was instituted on the 12th September 1919. In this view, therefore, we think that the suit of the plaintiffs so far as the original mortgagees are concerned, is not barred by limitation. But as I have already stated there are several other defendants who are in possession of parts of the mortgaged properties under various rights which have accrued during this long lapse of time from the time of the mortgage.

In these circumstances we think the best course would be to remit this case to the lower Appellate Court for raising clear issues as to the defence of each of the numerous defendants in so far as they are concerned and to try the questions which will arise between the plaintiffs and those defendants, and we order accordingly. If there is any question of special limitation as regards any of those defendants that question will also be decided by the lower Appellate Court.

The questions which are to be tried by the lower Appellate Court, are subject to this limitation, namely, that the questions would be decided only between the plaintiffs and those defendants who have appealed against the decree passed by the Court of first instance or were impleaded as respondents in the appeal.

The appellants are entitled to their costs in this appeal against the original defendants Nos. 1 to 12. As regards the costs of the other defendants in this appeal, they shall abide the result of the trial by the lower Appellate Court.

I ought to mention here that some of the defendants who had died were not represented in this appeal. It was contended on behalf of the respondents that the whole appeal was incompetent and should be dismissed. In our opinion this contention is not sound. All the original mortgagors are properly before us and so far as some of the purchasers-defendants who are not properly represented, the result of this appeal will not affect their right. This dismissal of the suit as against them will stand good. The plaintiffs must redeem the whole mortgage.

Cuming, J.—I agree.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bisheshar Nath Srivastava, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Ram Charan sued for possession of 1/4th of a certain property under the following circumstances. He and one Deoki were sons of two brothers. Deoki's father Arjun had two sons Girdhari and Deoki of whom Girdhari predeceased him. The defendant Musammât Sartaji is widow of Girdhari. On the death of Arjun Deoki was left in possession of half the property of Arjun and Musammât Sartaji received maintenance from him. It was further agreed between them that on Deoki's death she should succeed to his property in default of male descendants.

On Deoki's death Musammât Sartaji obtained mutation of names whereupon Ram Charan applied for a review. During this litigation the parties arrived at an agreement under which Musammât Sartaji was maintained in possession and ownership of 1/4th of the property and Ram Charan in possession and ownership of the other 1/4th, in addition to his own 1/2.

Subsequently Ram Charan sued for this 1/4th of the property (in which he maintained Musammât Sartaji during mutation proceedings) on the ground of title.

The suit has been dismissed by both the Subordinate Courts.

The main point argued in the lower Courts was that the family settlement Ex. A-5 between the woman and Deoki and A-7 between the parties to the suit required registration and were not admissible in evidence, as they were unregistered documents. The Subordinate Courts held that Ex. A-7 did not require registration.

I do not think it necessary to enter into the question of registration of the document Ex. A-7. The learned Counsel for the respondent female has drawn my attention to a decision of Mr. Justice Piggott in Baldeo Singh v. Udâl Singh (1). As pointed out by the learned Judge any document, whether a family settlement or not, which purported to create title to property and was put forward in Court as the basis of title required registration. This case is, however, similar to the case in which the learned Judge delivered his judgment and it can be decided on the basis of the oral agreement between the parties. The terms of Ex. A-7 clearly indicate that there was a previous oral agreement and the application to the Mutation Court merely noted that oral agreement in order that the Mutation Court may act upon it. The words in Ex. A-7 are that for certain reasons the parties had already come to an agreement that one party will be owner of 1/2 and the other party owner of the other half. The document itself was not a document of title but merely evidence of oral agreement between the parties. At page 15* the learned Judge says:—

"Now the agreement come to by the parties in this case was undoubtedly of the nature of a family settlement of doubtful claims....When such an agreement decides a bona fide disputed claim to immoveable property, particularly when the dispute is between members of the same family. I do not think that it is correct to treat the transaction as if there had been a conveyance of immoveable property by any one party to any other....The whole question in issue in a case like the present is whether the plaintiff is to be permitted to prove his title, as he claims that it existed independently of, and antecedently to, the family arrangement. The question is whether the arrangement itself does not bind the parties to it. In this view of the matter there does not seem to be room for the contention that the arrangement arrived at on the family compromise amounted to a conveyance by one party to the other....I quite fail to see how a distribution of property amongst the parties like that which I am considering could be called either a sale, or an exchange or a gift. If so, it follows that the parties to such an arrangement are not bound to execute an instrument in writing at all."

In the present case Musammatt Sartaji was already in possession and had a title to property which both parties considered to be sound at the time and in maintaining her in a portion of that property no conveyance of immovable property was necessary. An oral agreement to maintain her in the right which she claimed was sufficient and such oral agreement has been clearly proved in this case.

It was argued that the claim of the woman rested on a document which is inadmissible in evidence. This argument has been properly met by the Trial Court by reference to Gandharp Singh v. Nirmal Singh (2), that the existence of a bona fide dispute is a good and sufficient consideration to support a contract even though the claim which caused the dispute turns out afterwards to have had no foundation. I am of opinion that the woman is in possession of the property in virtue of a contract which cannot be rescinded by the plaintiff.

It was argued that under that contract the woman had only a life-interest. The plaintiff never put forward any such plea in his plaint and this point was raised late in the lower Appellate Court. He deserves no sympathy because his plaint was based on suppression of facts. In the plaint no mention whatsoever was made of an agreement entered into by him with the woman. A man who comes seeking justice on suppression of truth does not deserve any consideration in a Court of Justice.

I dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant is the owner of one item of mortgage property and in purchasing that property he discharged a prior mortgage on that one item and also two other items of property, one of which is the subject-matter of the suit mortgage along with the property, purchased. The question is whether the appellant is entitled to subrogation in respect of that prior mortgage. Both the lower Courts have found that he is not so entitled.

Objection is taken to the finding of the lower Appellate Court on the ground that the reasons given by the learned District Judge are not relevant in coming to the conclusion as to the intention of the appellant when he discharged the prior mortgage. The District Judge has rightly kept in mind the fact that in such cases the presumption is that the person paying off a mortgage intends to keep alive the mortgage if it is for his benefit to do so, a principle which is laid down in Gokaldas v. Puranmal Premsukh Das (1). Starting with that presumption the Judge has considered the evidence and has come to the conclusion that in the circumstances of the case that presumption is rebutted.

In appeal it is contended that he has rather addressed himself to the intention of the original mortgagor than to the intention of the appellant. I do not think that this is clearly established. There are circumstances in the case which undoubtedly weaken the presumption that he intended to keep it alive. The original mortgage was in respect of three items of property and the appellant has only purchased one of these items. The mortgage bore very heavy interest and there can be no doubt that the mortgagors intended that it should be put an end to and there is the circumstance that this one property was sold to discharge a mortgage on three items. There is also an endorsement on the original mortgage-deed that the money was actually paid to the mortgagee and the document was cancelled. The contention in appeal really seems to be that according to the authorities the presumption of law as to intention is really irrebuttable. That that is not so is clear from the decision of the Privy Council in Mohesh Lal v. Mohant Bawan Das (2) and also two cases of this Court Sundaramayya v. Mummareddi Yanadamma (3) and Gorindaswami Thera v. Dorai Swami Pillai (4). Therefore the question of intention is a question of fact. It has been laid down in several cases that certain acts, or certain facts, are not sufficient to rebut the presumption but when we consider the intention of a person doing an act, that act under one set of circumstances may show a certain intention, whereas the same act under a different set of circumstances may show a different intention, so that the inference in all cases has to be drawn from the circumstances of the cases themselves. The District Judge has chosen to consider that the several circumstances in this case are sufficient to establish what was the intention of the appellant and that is all that he is required to do, and he has evidence to go on. Consequently, this being a second appeal, I do not think that I can interfere with this finding of fact. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Time for payment is extended to three months from this date.

days of that date as Commissioner's fee, etc., and the hearing of the suit was adjourned to the 21st July. On the 21st July it appears that this sum had not been paid and the plaintiff's explanation was not accepted by the Court and his application for time was rejected. Thereon the plaintiff's Pleader stated that he had no further instruction, and the suit was dismissed for plaintiff's default. The plaintiff then applied to the Trying Court under r. 9 of O. IX, C. P. C. for revival of the suit. That application was rejected. On appeal to the District Judge the appeal was dismissed on the ground that the order passed by the Subordinate Judge was not in a proceeding contemplated by O. IX of the Code and consequently no appeal lay.

We are unable to agree with the decision of the learned District Judge. It is now settled law that when after an application for adjournment is rejected the party's Pleader states that he has no further instruction that is equivalent to the absence of the party from the hearing. This follows from the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Satish Chandra Mukerjee v. Ahara Prasad Mukerjee (1). Consequently when the Subordinate Judge on the 21st July 1924 dismissed the plaintiff's suit for default this must be held to have been a dismissal under r. 8 of O. IX which would be made applicable by r. 2 of O. XVII. Consequently the petitioner was entitled to make an application under O. IX, r. 9 and an appeal lay to the District Judge against the order refusing that application.

We accordingly make this Rule absolute. We set aside the order of the District Judge of Midnapore, dated 10th January 1925 dismissing the petitioner's appeal and we direct that the appeal be heard on the merits.

The costs of this Rule will be costs in the appeal. We assess the hearing-fee at two gold mohurs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 123—Gift of mango tree, nature of—Tree, whether immoveable property—Registration, whether necessary.

A transfer of mango tree by way of gift must be made by a stamped and registered instrument where it is intended that the donee should enjoy the fruits of the tree for an indefinite period and where the immediate or approximately immediate severance of the tree from the land is not within the contemplation of the parties at the time of the making of the gift. In such a case the tree is immoveable property and its transfer is a transfer of an interest in land. [p. 771, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Arrah, dated the 2nd of August 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, Arrah, dated the 5th of December 1921.

Messrs. Lakshmi Narayan Singh and Sarjoo Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Parmeshwar Deyal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of this suit is a mango tree. The plaintiff-respondent sought a declaration of his right to, and recovery of possession of the tree which he said had been given to him by one of the proprietors of the village by an unregistered and unstamped chithi, dated the 12th of Kartick 1315. The defendants pleaded that the plaintiff had no right to the tree and that the chithi being unstamped and unregistered was not admissible in proof of his title.

The learned Munsif dismissed the suit on the ground that the chithi operated as a deed of gift relating to immoveable property, that there was no evidence that the mango tree was taken only as standing timber, but that the possession and enjoyment of the fruits of the tree by the plaintiff went to show that the plaintiff wanted to take an interest in immoveable property, and that therefore the chithi ought to have been stamped and registered. The chithi was not produced, but it was admitted that it was neither stamped nor registered. The Munsif, therefore, held that the plaintiff had failed to establish his title to the tree. The learned Subordinate Judge reversed this decision. He held that the plaintiff had been in possession of the tree from 1319 until 1327. As the chithi was not produced he was of opinion that the legal position came to this that the plaintiff got the tree under an oral gift accompanied by delivery of possession. He held that under the definitions in the Transfer of Property Act and the Indian Registration Act "standing timber" is not immoveable property, that in this part of the country planks of mango wood are often used for making leaves of doors and windows and similar other purposes, and that therefore the tree was standing timber, and consequently there was no necessity for a stamped and registered instrument. He, therefore, held that the plaintiff acquired a good title by the oral grant and decreed the suit.

The question in the appeal is whether the mangotree is moveable or immoveable property. The learned Advocate for the appellants contended that the question is a question of intention. If the intention was that the plaintiff should enjoy the fruit of the tree and not cut it down as timber, then it was immoveable property and could only be conveyed by a registered instrument. Reference was made to s. 3 of the Transfer of Property Act where it is declared that "Immoveable property does not include standing timber, growing crops or grass" and it was argued that these three terms must be treated as ejusdem generis with the common idea of immediate severance. In Shephard and Brown's Commentary on the Transfer of Property Act, the learned Commentators say: "In excepting standing timber, growing crops, and grass from the category of immoveable property, regard has probably been had to the fact that they are all things usually contemplated as severable or intended to be severed, from the soil. When such severance is not intended, but on the contrary it is contemplated that the purchaser of the trees should derive some benefit from their further growth, it is an interest in immoveable property that the purchaser takes". In s. 2 of the Indian Registration Act "Immoveable property" is defined as including certain things, "but not standing timber, growing crops nor grass". Rustomji in his Commentary on this Act says "If trees are sold with a view to the purchaser's keeping them permanently standing and enjoying them by taking their fruits or otherwise, the sale would be a sale of immoveable property".

The matter was very fully discussed in Marshall v. Green (1), where the question was whether a contract for the sale of growing timber was within the fourth section or the seventeenth section of the Statute of Frauds, that is, whether it was for a sale of an interest in land or of a chattel. In his judgment in that case Lord Coleridge, C. J., said: "I find the following statement of the law with regard to this subject, which must be taken to have received the sanction of that learned Judge, Sir Edward Vaughan Williams, in the notes in the last Edition of Williams' Saunders upon the case of Duppa v. Mayo (2). The principle of these decisions appears to be this, that wherever at the time of the contract it is contemplated that the purchaser should derive a benefit from the further growth of the thing sold from further vegetation and from the nutriment to be afforded by the land, the contract is to be considered as for an interest in land; but where the process of vegetation is over, or the parties agree that the thing sold shall be immediately withdrawn from the land, the land is to be considered as a mere warehouse of the thing sold, and the contract is for goods"..... Here the contract was that the trees should be got away as soon as possible, and they were almost immediately cut down. Apart from any decisions on the subject, and as a matter of common sense, it would seem obvious that a sale of twenty-two trees to be taken away immediately was not a sale of an interest in land, but merely of so much timber". Brett, J., said in his judgment "If the thing, not being fructus industrials is to be delivered immediately, whether the seller is to deliver it or the buyer is to enter and take it himself, then the buyer is to derive no benefit from the land, and consequently the contract is not for an interest in the land, but relates solely to thing sold itself. Here the trees were timber trees, and the purchaser was to take them immediately, therefore, applying the test last mentioned, the contract was not within the 4th section". Grove, J., said "It seems to me that in determining the question whether there was a contract for an interest in land, we must look to what the parties intended to contract for. In all the cases this has been made the test. In the case of Smith v. Surman (3), it was argued by Russel, Serjt, that 'a sale of crops, or trees, or other matters existing in a growing state in the land may or may not be an interest in land according to the nature of the agreement between the parties and the rights which such an agreement may give' and that view was adopted by the Court in giving judgment..... Here the trees were to be cut as soon as possible, but even assuming that they were not to be cut for a month, I think that the test would be whether the parties really looked to their deriving benefit from the land, or merely intended that the land should be in the nature of a warehouse for the trees during that period. Here the parties clearly never contemplated that the purchaser should have anything in the nature of an interest in the land; he was only to have so much timber, which happened to be affixed to the land at the time, but was to be removed as soon as possible, and was to derive no benefit from the soil". The same view was taken in Seeni Chettiar v. Santhanathan Chettiar (4) by the Full Bench where Collins, C. J., said "It has long been settled that an agreement for the sale and purchase of growing grass, growing timber or underwood, or growing fruit, not made with a view to their immediate severance and removal from the soil and delivery as chattels to the purchaser, is a contract for the sale of an interest in land". Subramania Ayyar, J., said "It is scarcely necessary to observe that though standing timber is, under the Registration Act III of 1877, moveable property only, still parties entering into a contract with reference to such timber may expressly or by implication agree that the transferee of the timber shall enjoy, for a long or short period, some distinct benefit to arise out of the land on which the timber grows. In a case like that, the contract would undoubtedly be not one in respect of mere moveables, but would operate as a transfer of an interest in immoveable property". It is true that a somewhat different view was taken in Krishnarao v. Babaji (5), where in a case very much like the present their Lordships observed "No doubt by the term 'timber' is meant properly such trees only as are fit to be used in building and repairing houses. A mango tree, which is primarily a fruit tree, might not always come within the term, but in this respect the custom of a locality has to be considered" and it was held with reference to the local custom that a mango tree was a timber tree and, therefore, an unregistered deed was admissible to prove its transfer.

The learned Advocate for the respondent relied on the finding of the Subordinate Judge that in this part of the country mango trees are timber and he also referred to a decision of this Court in Second Appeal No. 955 of 1922 where this was held to be common knowledge. That, however, was a case relating to trees which had been cut as timber. The present case is a case of a conveyance of a growing mango tree of which, according to the finding of the Subordinate Judge, the plaintiff continued to be in possession and to enjoy the fruits for a period of eight years. In these circumstances, it seems to me impossible to hold that the tree was conveyed as standing timber. The parties intended that the plaintiff should enjoy the fruits of the tree for an indefinite period. The immediate, or approximately immediate, severance of the tree from the land was not within the contemplation of the parties as the subsequent events proved. Therefore, in my opinion, this tree was not sold as standing timber, but the transfer was a transfer of an interest in the land. The deed of gift, therefore, required to be stamped and registered and the transfer could not be effected by an unregistered chithi, or by an oral gift. In my opinion, therefore, the plaintiff had no title to this tree and the decision of the learned Munsif was right.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decision of the Subordinate Judge and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

tions, r. 11—Validity of vote—Returning Officer, whether final authority—Election Court, jurisdiction of—Ballot paper, marks on, effect of—Electoral Roll—Two persons corresponding to description—Voting by one, validity of—Revision.

Rule 11 of the rules under the Madras District Municipalities Act of 1920 gives the Election Court jurisdiction to decide for itself whether the Returning Officer's rejection or refusal of a vote was proper, and, if it was not proper, and the result of the election has been materially affected thereby, it may set aside the election and order a fresh one, or, if the result of the scrutiny is to give a majority to another candidate, it may declare that candidate duly elected. [p. 773, col. 1.]

In the matter of a decision as to the validity of a vote, the Election Court and not the Returning Officer is the final authority. [p. 772, col. 2.]

Woodward v. Sarsons, (1875) 10 C. P. 733 at p. 748; 44 L. J. C. P. 293; 32 L. T. 867, followed.

The right point of view from which the question of the validity of a vote by ballot is to be considered by the Polling Officer is to see whether any reasonable ground has been shown for concluding that by the marks on the voting paper, the voters might be identified. [p. 773, col. 1.]

Where on a ballot paper, besides the cross mark against the name of one of the candidates, there were lines scoring out the names of the other candidates and the Election Court held that the vote was valid:

Held, on revision, that the decision on the question of the validity of the vote was within the jurisdiction of the Election Court, and that there was neither lack of jurisdiction nor irregular exercise of it, which would give the High Court authority to interfere under s. 115 of the C. P. C. [p. 773, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the description of a voter on an Electoral Roll was "Murugesan, fitter" and a person who corresponded to the description presented himself for voting and was allowed to do so but on an election petition it was sought to be shown that there was another person who corresponded to the description in the Electoral Roll and, therefore, the vote as recorded was invalid, but the Election Court held the vote to be valid:

Held, that there was no irregularity and that in the absence of proof that the person who voted was not the voter mentioned in the Electoral Roll, there was no ground for interference in revision. [p. 773, col. 2.]

A Petition, under s. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, and s. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Trichinopoly, dated the 23rd December 1924, T. P. No. 31 of 1924 on its file.

A. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. T. V. Ramanatha Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This civil revision petition is a petition praying that this Court will interfere and set aside a finding of the Election Court of the Subordinate Judge of Trichinopoly in the matter of an election petition before it. At an election for a Councillor for the first ward in Trichinopoly Municipality held on 26th September 1924, the Chairman, who was the Returning Officer, declared that the present petitioner was elected, having polled 71 votes as against 70 votes for the respondent. The latter filed an Election Petition in the Subordinate Judge's Court, and on enquiry, the Subordinate Judge decided that the correct number of valid votes was 72 for the respondent and 71 for the petitioner, and declared the respondent duly elected. The petitioner applies for revision of the finding and declaration.

Only two points are pressed before me firstly that the votes, Exs. G and G-1, are invalid votes, and were, therefore, wrongly counted in favour of the respondent and secondly, that the vote of P. W. No. 5, one Murugesan, was not a valid vote.

As to the first point Exs. G and G-1 appear to show, besides the cross marks against the name of the respondent, lines scoring out the names of the other candidates. The Returning Officer did not take these votes into consideration in respondent's favour apparently because of these lines. The Election Court held them to be valid in spite of these lines. Before me, the petitioner contends that the Election Court had no jurisdiction to go behind the decision of the Returning Officer in a matter of this kind, that the Election Court is not a Court to which any authority is given to decide, as a question of fact, whether a vote is or is not valid, and that the proper scope of the Election Court's jurisdiction is limited to an enquiry whether the Returning Officer had or had not exercised the jurisdiction vested in him of deciding whether or not a vote was valid; in other words petitioner contends for the position that in the matter of the validity of a vote, the Returning Officer is the final authority. This contention seems to me justified neither by the Rules governing the conduct of the election or enquiries by the Election Courts nor by reported decisions of Courts of Law, either in this country or in Great Britain. Rule 11 of the rules for the decision of disputes as to the validity of an election held under the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1900, clearly lays down that, in an enquiry of this kind, the Election Court has to decide whether or not "the result of the election has been materially affected by the improper reception or refusal of a vote". To restrict this to an enquiry whether the Returning Officer's reception or refusal of a vote was or was not within his jurisdiction is to make the rule almost otiose. The Rule plainly gives the Election Court jurisdiction to decide for itself whether the Returning Officer's rejection or refusal of vote was proper, and, if it was not proper, and the result of the election has been materially affected thereby, it may set aside the election and order a fresh one, or, if the result of the scrutiny is to give a majority to another candidate, it may declare that candidate duly elected. The case-law referred to by the petitioner's learned Vakil seems to me to be entirely against him. The leading case on the point in Woodward v. Sarsons (1) distinctly lays down that the decision in each case, namely, whether a ballot paper is void or not, is, "upon a point of fact, to be decided first by the Returning Officer, and afterwards by the Election Tribunal on petition" and the Election Court proceeded in that case to decide for itself, whether or not certain marks on the ballot papers did or did not invalidate the votes. The same course was followed in the Stepney case (2) and the Wigtown case (3) and numerous other cases might be quoted to the same effect. Section 2 of the Ballot Act, 1872, 35 and 36 Vict. Ch. 33 distinctly lays down that "the decision of the Returning Officer as to any question arising in respect of any ballot paper shall be final, subject to reversal on petition questioning the election or return." It has not been suggested and no authority is quoted before me for the proposition that the law is different in this country. Election Courts in this country have from time to time in deciding such questions as to the validity of votes held a scrutiny of votes, etc., and I do not re-call any instance in which their jurisdiction to do so has been questioned. It is plain that the lower Court had ample jurisdiction to decide, as a question of fact, whether Exs. G and G 1 were valid votes. It has considered the question of their validity from the right point of view, namely, whether any reasonable ground had been shown for concluding that by the marks on the votes, the voters might be identified, and decided that they could not, and it held that the votes were valid. Such a decision was within its jurisdiction, and there is in that decision neither lack of jurisdiction nor irregular exercise of jurisdiction, which would give this Court authority to interfere under s. 115 of the C. P. C. It cannot be reasonably contended here that this Court has to decide for itself on the question of fact as to whether the votes were or were not invalid. This Court, in a civil revision petition, has only to see that the lower Court exercised its jurisdiction properly. I find, therefore, that there is nothing to be said in favour of the petitioner's first point.

As to the second point, the question of fact for decision was whether P. W. No. 5 was or was not entered on the Electoral Roll as a voter. The petitioner urges that, as both P. W. No. 5 and R. W. No. 3 answer to the description, namely, "Murugasen fitter," therefore, the Roll so far as this name is concerned, is a document ambiguous or defective, within the meaning of s. 93 of the Indian Evidence Act, which prohibits evidence being taken to remove ambiguity or defect. I do not see what application s. 93 has to this case. All that the Polling Officer had to see when the voter presented himself to him was whether the name of the voter was on the Roll. It cannot reasonably be contended that the Polling Officer has to wait to the end of the day in respect of every vote in order to see if any one else of the same name appears and claims that he is the voter on the Roll. P. W. No. 5 appeared to vote. His name corresponded with the name on the Roll and he was allowed to vote. There was no irregularity in the procedure. It was open to the petitioner to prove, that P. W. No. 5 was not the person on the Roll; but that he did not do; nor does R. W. No. 3 claim that he is the person on the Roll. There was no lack of evidence on which the lower Court could conclude that P. W. No. 5's vote was valid; and there is no case here either for interference under s. 115, C. P. C.

I, therefore, dismiss the petition with costs.

Where a payment is made towards a debt but there is nothing to show whether it was made in respect of principal or interest, the Court is entitled to find out on the evidence for what purpose the payment was made. [p. 774, col. 2.]

Hem Chandra Biswas v. Purna Chandra Mookerjee, 35 Ind. Cas. 638; 44 C. 567; 22 C. W. N. 190 and Charu Chandra Bhattacharjee v. Karam Buxa Sikdar, 43 Ind. Cas. 812; 27 C. L. J. 141, referred to.

The expression ‘as such’ in s. 20 of the Limitation Act means that the payment must be made on account of interest which may be proved from the circumstances of the case from which payment as interest may be distinctly inferred and may be established by evidence. [ibid.]

The expression ‘person liable to pay’ in s. 20 of the Limitation Act does not mean the entire body of persons liable to pay the debt but each individual debtor who would be liable for the whole debt. Under the law each co-mortgagor is liable for the entire debt secured by the mortgage, and a payment by any one of them towards interest would operate to extend limitation. [p. 775, col. 1.]

It cannot be said as a matter of law that a scribe cannot be an attesting witness of a mortgage-deed. It is a question of fact which must be determined by a Court of fact. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This is an appeal by defendant No. 3 arising out of a mortgage suit brought by the plaintiff on a mortgage dated the 2nd Jaistha 1306 (1899) executed by defendant No. 1 and one Lakhan Chandra Dey since dead. The defendant No. 3 is a transferee of Lakhan’s interest in the mortgaged properties. The plaintiff purchased the mortgage in 1919 and brought a suit on it for recovery of amount then due thereon by a sale of the mortgaged properties. The defendant No. 1 admitted the mortgage and his liability under it. The defendant No. 3 among other pleas raised the plea that the suit was barred by limitation. The plaintiff’s case was that several payments were made by the debtors, the last being a payment of Rs. 30 in 1908. The First Court did not believe this payment and dismissed the plaintiff’s suit as against all the defendants except defendant No. 1. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge has found that the payment of Rs. 30 was proved and that the amount was paid an account of interest. On this finding he decreed the plaintiff’s suit in full against all the defendants.

Several points have been taken before us in support of the appeal. It is first argued that as the endorsement of this payment of Rs. 30 on the back of the bond does not show that the payment was made on account of interest, the Court below was wrong in law in allowing the plaintiff to prove by oral evidence that the payment was made on account of interest. This point seems to be concluded by authority and cannot be raised now. In the case of Hem Chandra Biswas v. Purna Chandra Mookerjee (1), it has been held that where payments are made for the debt, but there is nothing to show whether they have been made in respect of the principal or interest, the Court is entitled to find out on the evidence for what purpose the payments were made. The same view was taken in the case of Charu Chandra Battacharjee v. Karam Buxa Sikdar (2). There are other decisions on this point and it must now be taken to be firmly settled that the words “as such” in s. 20 of the Limitation Act mean that the payment must be made on account of interest which fact may be proved from the circumstances of the case from which payment as interest may be distinctly inferred and may be established by evidence. In the present case the endorsement shows the payment of Rs. 30 over the signature of Lakhan Chandra Dey. The learned Judge has found that at the time when this payment was made there was about Rs. 230 due on account of interest and principal. Deducting the amount of principal the balance was due on account of interest. This fact was taken into con-consideration in believing other evidence that the amount was paid on account of interest. He further remarked that no body on the side of the defendant said that the payment was made on account of principal. On a consideration of the evidence and the circumstances of the case he says as follows: "I, therefore, see no reason to disbelieve the plaintiff's evidence that Rs. 30 was paid on account of interest. This finding based on the evidence decides this point."

The next question raised is that according to s. 20 of the Limitation Act, the payment must be made by the person liable to pay the debt; and as there were two mortgagors in order to bring the case under s. 20, the payment must be made by both the mortgagors together and that payment by one only was not such as was contemplated by that section. No authority has been cited for this proposition of law which to my mind is a novel one. There can be no question that Lakhan, one of the mortgagors, was a person liable to pay and that he could not only pay his share of the debt but could have paid the entire debt under the mortgage-deed; and under the law every mortgagor is liable for the entire debt secured by the mortgage. I do not think that the expression 'person liable to pay' means the entire body of persons liable to pay the debt.

The third point argued is that the bond was not properly and legally proved. This point was raised in the defendants' written statement and an issue was joined in the First Court which was in these terms: "Was the bond in suit executed and attested according to law?" The learned Trial Court went into the evidence and found that it was duly executed and attested. He mainly relied upon the evidence of the scribe who proved execution of the document. The plaintiff appealed against that portion of the decree of the First Court which dismissed the suit as against defendants Nos. 2 to 4 but these defendants did not prefer any cross-appeal or in any way object to the finding of the First Court on this issue. It cannot be said as a matter of law that a scribe cannot be an attesting witness. It is a question of fact which must be determined by a Court of fact. We have not the advantage of the view of the Court of Appeal on this question and we do not think that we should be justified in allowing the appellant to raise this question in appeal for the first time in this Court. But a prayer was made that the case might be sent to the lower Appellate Court for trial of this issue. We do not think that we should be justified in granting this prayer. The defendants did not choose to take exception to the finding of the Trial Court and it must be taken that they had acquiesced in it. This question cannot, therefore, be re-opened at this stage.

It is lastly contended that there should have been no personal decree against the appellant. It seems to us that this ground is taken on a misreading of the decree passed in the Court below. There can be no personal decree as is evident from the length of time between the execution of the mortgage and the institution of the suit. The decree directs the defendants to pay the amount of the claim with costs of the suit and interest within three months from the date of the decree, failing which the decree shall be made absolute and the decretal amount should be realised from the sale of the mortgaged properties. This decree cannot be considered as a personal decree against the mortgagors.

All the points taken on behalf of the appellant fail and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Where a Judge states in his judgment that one of the parties through his Vakil made an admission in respect of an important fact, if the party affected desires to raise the contention that no such admission was made, it is his duty to apply to the Judge immediately for a review of the judgment when the matter is fresh in the minds both of the Judge and the Vakil and not to wait for a long time to get affidavits from gentlemen at the Bar as to what took place in Court. [p. 777, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Guntur, in A. S. Nos. 68 and 69 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge, Guntur, in O. S. No. 60 of 1919 (O. S. No. 64 of 1919, Temporary Sub-Court, Guntur).

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ch. Raghava Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the District Court of Guntur, in O. S. No. 60 of 1919, on the file of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge of Guntur.

The suit was brought by a minor (the plaintiff) for the recovery of certain jewels, specified in the A Schedule and for the recovery of promissory notes, eight in number, specified in the B Schedule.

I have, in appeal nothing to do with the jewels, but only with five of the eight promissory notes. Three of the promissory notes have been found to belong to the 4th defendant, Durgamma; and in fact stand in her name. The other five do not stand in the name of the 4th defendant; and the plaint asserts that the promissory notes were endorsed in favour of the 4th defendant, by one Lakshmiddevamma, who died in 1919, having survived her husband, who died in 1903. The plaintiff, a son adopted by Ramakrishnamma and Lakshmiddevamma, was their heir, after the death of the latter.

The written statement of the first defendant, who is the father and guardian of the 4th defendant, states:—

"The case and jewels, etc., given to the 4th defendant by her father and her husband had been given away for interest, by the said Lakshmiddevamma and she was improving or increasing the same and getting promissory notes at first executed in favour of the 4th defendant. When later on, they were to be executed again she got the pro-notes Nos. 6, 7 and 8 executed in favour of the 4th defendant."

Now with regard to the other five, it is pleaded that consideration for them was either the jewels of the 4th defendant, or the personal stridhanam of Lakshmidevamma and that they were duly endorsed, in favour of the 1st defendant, as guardian of the 4th defendant on 5th January 1919.

On appeal to the District Judge, on this point he held, although he did not believe, that consideration for the five promissory notes in question was provided from Durgamma's money, on the ground, that the practice of Lakshmiddevamma seems to have been to keep her monies and that of Durgamma separate, still, the reason, why Lakshmiddevamma might have endorsed over the promissory notes to the 1st defendant, was to enable him to find funds, for getting a re-transfer of the properties sold by the 4th defendant's husband, who seems to have been a man of reckless character, for very much less than what they were worth.

Now, Mr. Somayya, for the plaintiff-appellant, complains that there were no materials, in the case set up by the plaintiff, on which the District Judge could find as he did. But, I think, that a perusal of that portion of the written statement, para. 3, is sufficient to displace this argument, as also reference to issue No. 3: "Whether the promissory notes in Schedule B, other than items Nos. 6, 7 and 8, were assigned to the 4th defendant? Is the assignment valid and binding on the plaintiff?" Both the alternatives, set out in the written statement, are discussed by Subordinate Judge, in paras. 29 and 30 of his judgment, and, therefore, they must have been presented and argued before the Trial Court.

Secondly, there is a very important statement by the learned District Judge in para. 17 of his judgment:—

"It is conceded before me that if these assignments are found to be genuine, the plaintiff does not contest the validity of the assignments, on the ground that the consideration for the promissory notes formed part of Ramakrishnamma's estate."

Now, this is a very important admission and in fact, practically conclusive as regards the appellant's case. The hearing before the learned Judge was on 8th October 1921, judgment was pronounced on 9th November, the grounds of appeal were prepared on 17th April 1922, and the second appeal was presented on the following day.

Now, three affidavits have been filed, by one side or the other, as to the facts of this admission having been made. As I have said more than once, I very much deprecate, having to decide on the trustworthiness of statements made on one side or the other, by gentlemen of the Bar. My training and my own feeling is to accept without reserve anything, that is said by a gentleman in the position of a Vakil. I say this, in order to show my unwillingness to go into the matter, which has been raised in these affidavits. The gentleman, who appeared for the plaintiff, in the hearing of the appeal, was Mr. M. Kalidas, a High Court Vakil; while Mr. Seethapathi Rao appeared for the 3rd respondent and Mr. Nagabhushanam, Pleader for the 1st respondent in A. S. No. 69 of 1921. Mr. Kalidas was not present, on all the days, when the appeals were heard and, therefore, his statement that neither he, nor the appellant's guardian made the admission in question may be safely accepted. Mr. Seethapathi Rao states that the admission was made by Mr. Nagabhushanam, in reply to a pointed question by the Court, during the hearing of the appeal, when Mr. Kalidas was absent at Bapatla. Mr. Nagabhushanam states that he does not remember any such admission being made and he is perfectly certain that such admission could not have been made by him. In the face of this evidence, I cannot say, that the learned Judge's statement has been in any way shaken.

There is authority, to which I have been referred, viz., Madhu Sudan Chowdhri v. Chandrabati Chowdarain (1) and other cases [Sarat Chandra Maiti v. Bibhabati Debi (2) and Mirza Shamsher Bahadur v. Kunj Behari Lal (3)] to show that what the appellant should have done, as soon as he found such a damaging statement, in the judgment of the learned Judge, is this:- He should have asked the learned Judge for a review of his judgment, when the matter was fresh in the mind both of the learned Judge and the learned Vakils and not have waited, as he did, for one year and nine months, to get affidavits from gentlemen one of whom did not remember anything about it. I think, therefore, that the admission must stand.

It seems to me that the other points, raised by Mr. Somayya, need not be dealt with by me. It is a little anomalous that the complaint should be now, that the finger-print expert was not called, for, when the defendant wanted to call him the application was opposed by the plaintiff. The same remark applies to Ex. S.

The whole question discussed in para. 16 apparently goes to the credit of D. W. No. 3, who was cross-examined, regarding the date of Ex. S. However, these two last points are questions of evidence and questions of fact and I am not disposed or entitled to go into them in second appeal.

I, therefore, think that the second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Arrah affirming a decision of the Munsif granting a decree to the plaintiffs in a suit (so far as is now material) for a declaration that they have a right of way from their garden, plot No. 254 of Khata No. 45 to the Local Board road in village Rajokher over plot No. 245 belonging to defendants Nos 1 and 2 which intervenes between the garden and the road.

Defendant No. 7 is the landlord and he did not contest the suit. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who did contest the suit had taken settlement of plot No. 245 from defendant No. 7 in 1918. The suit was brought in 1920.

The main contention on behalf of the appellants-defendants Nos. 1 and 2 is that the Courts below have erred in holding that the plaintiffs have acquired this right of way by prescription, because they are tenants of defendant No. 7 and could neither prescribe against their landlord nor against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who are tenants under the landlord. It is contended that for two years before the suit plot No. 245 was in settlement from the landlord and before that it was parti and that consequently the plaintiff must have prescribed against their landlord and his tenants and that this is impossible in law. This argument rests on the fact that in the Record of Rights the plaintiffs are recorded in the khatian, and it is argued that, therefore, they must be tenants of the landlord. The Record of Rights shows that the plaintiffs' ancestor purchased the land in 1849 and that the land is kharij jama. The Munsif took the view that this meant that the land was excluded and not settled with the zemindar at the time of Permanent Settlement and that the title of the plaintiffs was, therefore, independent of that of the zemindar of the village. The learned Advocate for the appellants referred to s. 3, cl. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act where "Tenant" is defined as "a person who holds land under another person, and is or but for a special contract would be, liable to pay rent for that land to that person." Reference was also made to Gokkul Sahu v. Jodu Nundun Roy (1), where it was held that a rent free brahmotar sanad operated as a special contract but for which the brahmotardars would be liable to pay rent and that the brahmotardars were tenants within the meaning of the Act. Now while it is quite clear that the mere fact that no rent is paid does not necessarily mean that the plaintiffs are not tenants of the landlord and while the fact that they are entered in the khatian to some extent supports the argument of the appellants, yet the case really turns on the effect of the entry "kharij jama." In Wilson's Glossary "kharij jama" is translated as meaning "separated or detached from the rental of the State as lands exempt from rent or of which the revenue has been assigned to individuals or institutions." In N. James' Settlement Report of Patna kharij jama is defined as "land allowed free to zemindars as reward for some special service, by a Provincial Governor, and so to be distinguished from altamga grants." Prima facie, in my opinion, the word imports that the owner of the kharij jama land is an independent proprietor. The land has been included within the zemindari of defendant No. 7, but it has evidently never been resumed and could not now be resumed and consequently the relation of landlord and tenant does not exist between the parties. In his judgment the learned Subordinate Judge has merely referred to the finding of the Munsif on this point and has not discussed the matter further evidently, as appears from a later passage in the judgment, because it was not argued before him. I see no convincing ground for holding that the Munsif was wrong in deciding that the plaintiffs had a title independent of the zemindar with regard to this land. This view also finds some support from the consideration that the landlord did not contest the case.

It was also argued that the plaintiffs had not proved that they used this path as of right and that there is no evidence of this. The learned Munsif went into this part of the case fully and came to the conclusion from the nature of the user that the enjoyment had been as of right. The learned Subordinate Judge disbelieved the evidence that was given by the defendants that the user had been with the permission of the landlord and found that the evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses proved that the user of the passage by the plaintiffs was as of right. This was an inference which it was open to the Courts below to draw and I see no reason to doubt the correctness of their finding.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

AMEER MIRZA BEG—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—APPELLANT

versus

M. UDIT PERSHAD—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Oudh Civil Digest, s. 279—Title claimed by inheritance—Compromise—Antecedent title recognized—"Ancestral land".

If a dispute in which a person claims to succeed to certain landed property by right of inheritance, based on an alleged custom, results in a compromise which recognises the claimant's antecedent title to the property, his interest in such property is "directly or indirectly inherited", and, therefore, "ancestral land" within the meaning of s. 279 (a) of the Oudh Civil Digest. (p. 781, cols. 1 & 2.)

First appeal against an order of the First Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 17th April 1925, in Execution Case No. 106 of 1924.

Mr. R. K. Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hargobind Dayal Srivastava, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent, Babu Adit Prasad, holds a decree for a sum of Rs. 61,814 odd against the appellant, Amir Mirza Beg. In execution of that decree he desires to sell through the Civil Court, which passed the decree, one-third share in the following properties as belonging to his judgment-debtor, the appellant:—

- (1) Lands in Malihabad.
- (2) Shops and houses in Mirzaganj in the town of Sandila.
- (3) A certain number of villages comprised within the taluka of Aurangabad in the District of Sitapur.
- (4) A bungalow in Sitapur.
- (5) Shops in Thomsonganj in the City of Sitapur.
- (6) A house and certain shops in Griganj, in Sitapur.

Against the proceedings in execution of the decree the only objection taken by the judgment-debtor was that the execution of the decree should be transferred to the Collector under the notification of the Local Government No. 1887-1-238, dated the 7th October 1911. This notification is incorporated in paras. 178 and 179 of the Oudh Civil Digest. The notification is that "the execution of decree in case in which a Civil Court has ordered any ancestral land situated in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh or any interest in such land to be sold shall be transferred to the Collector." The contention of the judgment-debtor is that the immoveable property which the decree-holder desires to sell is ancestral land within the meaning of the notification. This contention has been rejected by the Court below. In appeal before us it is reiterated on behalf of the judgment-debtor.

At the hearing of the appeal the appellant's learned Pleader abandoned his contention in respect of all properties except the villages comprised within the Aurangabad estate. Our decision, therefore, must govern the question as to the judgment-debtor's interest in those villages only.

According to para. 179 of the Oudh Civil Digest the term "ancestral land" in the notification mentioned above means.—

"(a) land, forming a mahal or share in or portion of a mahal which has been owned continuously, in Agra from the first of January 1860, or in Oudh from the Summary Settlement of 1858-1859 or from the conclusion of the first Regular Settlement, by the proprietor, which term shall include an "under-proprietor" in Oudh as defined in s. 15 of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1901, or by the person or persons from whom such proprietor has directly or indirectly inherited such land;

(b) land forming an estate or part of an estate as defined in the Oudh Estates Act, 1869".

In the present case we are not concerned with the cls. (c) and (d). Those clauses have consequently not been reproduced in this judgment. The argument advanced on behalf of the judgment-debtor is that his one-third interest sought to be sold is ancestral land within the meaning given to it in each of the cls. (a) and (b). We propose first to dispose of the argument founded on cl. (b).

We are of opinion that the learned Additional Subordinate Judge, from whose order this appeal has been preferred, is right in his conclusion that the property in question does not fall within cl. (b). The estate of Aurangabad within which the villages in question lie was held as an estate within the definition of that term as given in the Oudh Estates Act I of 1869 by Mirza Agha Jan whose name was entered at No. 77 of the First List and at No. 26 of the Second List of the lists prepared under s. 8 of the Act. He died on the 18th June 1875 and was succeeded by his eldest surviving son, Muhammad Ali Beg, under a bequest made by him. Agha Jan's eldest son, Nawab Ali beg, had predeceased him. Nawab Ali Beg's son Hamid Mirza Beg had come into existence at the death of Agha Jan and is still alive. Amongst the sons of Agha Jan next to Muhammad Ali Beg in the order of seniority was his son, Ali Mirza Beg. The appellant, Amir Mirza Beg, is the son of Ali Mirza Beg. The youngest son of Agha Jan is Ahmad Mirza Beg. A suit brought by Hamid Mirza Beg against Muhammad Ali Beg claiming title to the Aurangabad estate by virtue of the rule of succession laid down in Act I of 1869 failed. A Bench of this Court held that Muhammad Ali Beg acquired title to the estate under the Will of his father and that in his hands the taluqa of Aurangabad by reason of the provision of s. 15 of Act I of 1869 ceased to be an estate within the meaning of the Act. The same conclusion was reached in a decision of this Court in another litigation relating to the estate of Aurangabad. A certified copy of that decision has been produced in this case and is marked as Ex. A-3. We are of opinion that the judgment-debtor's interest in the villages in question is not "ancestral land" without the meaning of cl. (b) mentioned above. This opinion is directly supported by a decision of a Bench of this Court given so far back as the year 1913 in the case of Asghari Khanan v. Raj Bibi (1).

We now proceed to consider the appellant's argument in relation to cl. (a), which also we have already quoted. The decision turns on the interpretation of the words "directly or indirectly inherited." The case put forward on behalf of the appellant is that Amir Mirza Beg should be held to have so inherited his one-third share in the villages in question from Muhammad Ali Beg, the last proprietor of the estate. The facts necessary in relation to this part of the case are as follows:—

On the death of Muhammad Ali Beg disputes arose as to the possession of and succession to the Aurangabad estate. Amongst the claimants for the entry of names in the Revenue Records by mutation were Hamid Mirza Beg, Amir Mirza Beg, the present appellant, and Ahmad Mirza Beg. In consequence of that dispute proceedings were taken under section 145 of the Cr. P. C., also. This controversy was eventually settled by a compromise which was incorporated in a document dated the 12th July 1909. This document was also registered. The proceedings relating to the mutation of names and also those which arose under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C., were concluded in terms of this compromise. Those terms are stated in the decision of this Court in the case of Bisheshwar Nath v. Hamid Mirza Beg (2) and both sides have relied on the report of that decision in proof of the compromise and its terms. In the proceedings which ended with the compromise mentioned above Hamid Mirza Beg claimed title to the entire estate by virtue of the provisions of Act I of 1869 relating to succession. Ahmad Mirza Beg claimed the entire estate under the same Will of Agha Jan on which Muhammad Ali Beg had claimed and established his title to the whole estate of Aurangabad. As against each of these claimants Amir Mirza Beg based his title to the succession of the estate as an heir to Muhammad Ali Beg under a custom which authorized Muhammad Ali Beg to nominate his successor and claimed that he was so nominated by Muhammad Ali Beg. The compromise, which in other words was a family settlement, precluded an enquiry into one and all of these three claims. The argument on the side of the respondent is that the interest which Amir Mirza Beg got by virtue of the Settlement of the 12th July 1909 must be taken to have been obtained by him under a transfer from the other two parties to the compromise and, therefore, Amir Mirza Beg has not 'directly or indirectly inherited' that interest. The learned Subordinate Judge has accepted this argument of the respondent.

It is obvious that if the compromise can reasonably be construed to be a transfer to one from the other two of the three parties to the compromise the respondent must succeed. In our judgment the Settlement of the 12th July 1909 cannot be so construed. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge observes in his judgment under appeal that the title on which Amir Mirza Beg claimed succession to the Aurangabad estate "not having been established it is clear that the judgment-debtor could never inherit the property." But the whole object of the settlement was to altogether close the doors of inquiry into the validity or otherwise of the claims put forward by these three persons and it would be stultifying the settlement if we were now to permit such an inquiry. The conclusion that the compromise amounts to a transfer from one of the parties to another is clearly based on an unfounded assumption that the transferor had a title to convey. The settlement in question creates no such title in favour of any one of the three parties to it. Our interpretation of the settlement is that the interest which these persons obtained under the terms of the settlement was in virtue of the recognition of the antecedent claim of each by the other or others. This claim, as we have already stated, was founded by Amir Mirza Beg on his right to succeed by inheritance under an alleged rule of custom. That a settlement of controversy between two persons may amount to a transfer from one to the other may be conceded but the Settlement of the 12th July 1909 is clearly not of that nature. We think that the view taken by the learned Judges of the High Court of the N.-W. P., who decided the case of Lalla Oudh Beharee Lall v. Rane Mewa Koonwer (3) is peculiarly applicable to the settlement with which we are concerned. It is as follows:

"The true character of the transaction appears to us to have been a settlement between the several members of the family of their disputes, each one relinquishing all claim in respect of all property in dispute other than that falling to his share, and recognizing the right of the others as they had previously asserted it to the portion allotted to them respectively. It was in this light, rather than as conferring a new distinct title on each other; that the parties themselves seem to have regarded the arrangement and we think that it is the duty of the Courts to uphold and give full effect to such an arrangement." In delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Rani Mewa Kunwar v. Rani

Hulas Kuwar (4), the Right Honourable Sir Montague E. Smith said:—"The compromise is based on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in the parties, and the agreement acknowledges and defines what that title is." The view of the learned Judges of the High Court in the case mentioned above was adopted and the observation of the Right Honourable Sir Montague E. Smith was quoted with approval by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (5). We hold, therefore, that the judgment-debtor's one-third interest in the villages in question is "ancestral land" within the meaning of cl. (a) of para. 279 of the Oudh Civil Digest.

We accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the order of the lower Court and accept the objection of the judgment-debtor-appellant so far as the villages in question are concerned with costs in both the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Muhammadan Law—Wakf—Mutwalli, if can grant permanent lease—Lessee if can acquire adverse possession—'Istimrari mokarrari,' meaning of—Landlord and tenant—Permanent tenure—Burden of proof.

A mutwalli of a wakf estate cannot create a leasehold interest to endure beyond his life unless authorised by the kazi. [p. 783, col. 2.]

The lessee of a mutwalli acquires no title by adverse possession against the succeeding mutwalli, and if the latter recognizes the interest of the lessee, a new enancy is thereby created. [p. 783, col. 2; p. 784, col. 1.]

Vidya Varuthi Thirtha Swamigal v. Balusami Ayyar, 65 Ind. Cas. 161; 48 I. A. 302; (1921) M. W. N. 449; 41 M. L. J. 346; 44 M. 831; 3 U. P. L. R. (P. C.) 62; 15 L. W. 78; 30 M. L. T. 66; 3 P. L. Where a tenancy created by a mutwalli is not challenged for over 70 years and the rent remains unchanged, applications for enhancement having failed, the Court can presume the grant to be of lawful origin and of a permanent and heritable nature. [p. 784, col. 2.]

The words 'istimrari mokarrari' do not necessarily mean permanent and heritable. The nature of an istimrari mokarrari grant is to be determined from the circumstances of the case. [ibid.]

When the relation of landlord and tenant is admitted, the onus of proving a permanent tenure at a fixed rent is on the tenant. [p. 784, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This is an appeal by defendants Nos. 1-4 against a decision of the Officiating Subordinate Judge of Dinajpur.

The suit out of which this appeal arises was originally instituted by the Receiver of a wakf estate for a declaration that the father of the defendants had no right to enjoy the property in suit which consisted of 1440 bighas of nishkar land, at a permanent and invariable rent, for a declaration that neither Syed Sadaruddin-Al-Musari or any other mutwalli of the wakf estate had any right to permanently settle the land in suit and that if Syed Sadaruddin had so settled it, the plaintiff is not bound by the settlement and asked that it should be set aside, that the defendants might be ejected and the plaintiff given khas possession and a decree for mesne profits. There was an alternative prayer for enhancement of rent if a decree for ejectment was not passed.

The plaintiff became mutwalli of the wakf subsequent to the institution of the suit in the year 1325 and he was substituted as plaintiff in place of the Receiver.

The plaintiff states in his plaint that according to his information long after the Permanent Settlement during the time of Syed Sadaruddin-Al-Musari, the father of Syed Abdulla-Al-Musari, the last mutwalli, a non-permanent, non-heritable tenure was created without consideration and for a fixed term of the land in suit and that one Gafuruddin mukhtear, father of the defendants, purchased at a rent execution sale in the year 1902 a jote (being the lands in suit) at a jama of Rs. 387-11 annas 14½ gandas which was described in the sale-certificate as istimrari.

The defendant in his written statement claims that the jote is a transferable and heritable permanent tenure with the rent fixed in perpetuity and that the jama has never been altered and that this had been admitted unconditionally by the mutwallis who had treated the jote as a transferable and heritable istimrari jote with the rent fixed in perpetuity. They further claimed to have been in possession for more than 12 years as bona fide transferees for value and that the suit was barred by Arts. 134, 142 and 144 of the Limitation Act and by estoppel arising from the conduct of the plaintiff and his predecessors. They further claim that Gafuruddin Ahmed made a wakf of the property by executing a tauliatnama of which defendant No. 2 is mutwalli and that the suit is not maintainable against him as he is not sued as mutwalli of the wakf.

By a sanad of the Emperor Shah Alam dated the 9th April 1772 the tauliat of the shrine of Onsub-ul-Aquetali together with wakf mehals appertaining thereto, which included the lands in suit, was granted to Syed Suduruddin and it was thereby provided that the mutwalli was not competent to grant istimrari or mokarrari or to lease at a low jama anything appertaining to the Pargana. Similar sanad, which, however, did not include this last provision, were granted to Syed Suduruddin by the Nawab Nazim of Murshidabad on the 1st September 1772 and by the East India Company on the 14th September 1773. The learned Judge in the Court below declared the plaintiff's title to the land in dispute and passed a decree for khas possession and for mesne profits for the three years 1325 to 1327. He states in his judgment that it was admitted that the tenure formed part of the endowment of the wakf and he finds that the endowment was founded in the 14th or 15th century. He further finds that the tenure was held at an unvaried rent for more than 100 years and that it was allowed to descend from father to son and that it was treated by most of the mutwallis as istimrari mokarrari. He finds that there was nothing to show that the tenure was created with the leave of the Court of the kazi and he holds that a mutwalli cannot permanently transfer a property by way of lease. The following points were urged before us on behalf of the appellants.

(1) That they or their predecessors have acquired a title by adverse possession having been in possession of the tenure at any rate since 1860 or thereabouts and it is urged that the claims of any mutwalli were barred under the Limitation Act of 1859, which is said to govern the case, s. 10 and Art. 134 of the present Limitation Act having no application.

(2) That the present plaintiff is estopped by the representations of his predecessors made in sale proclamations when the tenure was sold for arrears of rent that the tenure was istimrari mokarrari.

(3) That the onus is on the plaintiff to show that the tenure was created after the sanad of the 9th April 1772 and that as the plaintiff has not discharged this onus, there is nothing to show that it was not created prior to 1772.

(4) That from the recognition by previous mutwallis of the tenure as istimrari mokarrari during a long period of years the Court should assume a legal origin and that it was created with the leave of the kazi.

(5) That as a wakf has been made of the tenure the mutwalli of this wakf should have been sued and that in his absence no valid decree could be passed.

(6) That under the provisions of s. 10 of the Bengal Tenancy Act a tenure-holder can only be ejected on breach of a condition.

Before dealing with these contentions it will be convenient to state what evidence there is on the record as to the existence of the tenure and who were the mutwallis of the wakf from the date of the sanad. As already stated the first mutwalli was Syaruddin to whom the sanad was given in 1772. There is no evidence one way or other as to whether the tenure was in existence prior to the grant of the sanad and there is no evidence either as to the dealing of Syaruddin with the wakf estate. Syaruddin was succeeded by Syed Gafuruddin but there is no evidence as to the date of his succession or as to his dealings with the wakf estate.

He was succeeded by Karimuddin but the date of his succession does not appear. It is clear, however, that the tenure was in existence during, at any rate, a portion of the time that he was mutwalli but whether he created it is not established by the evidence, it is clear, however, that it must have existed in the year 1843 for in the year 1850 (see Ex. L) Karimuddin sued as mutwalli for the rent of an istimrari jote which is the land in dispute for the years 1843 to Bhadra 1257 (1850) at the rate, of Rs. 387-11 odd per annum (the equivalent of Rs. 363-8 sicca rupees). In those proceedings the defendants relied amongst other documents on two acquittances of the years 1806 and 1807 which are referred to in the decree Ex. D, these documents are not before us but the appellants rely on them as showing that the istimrari jote existed at any rate from the year 1806. In another decree passed in the year 1859 (Ex. G) in favour of the same mutwalli the land is described as the ancestral istimrari jotes of the defendants the annual rental being Rs. 363-8 sicca rupees and in the sale certificate (Ex. 8) in execution of Ex. G, the land is described as istimrari.

The successors of Syed Karimuddin were Sadaruddin, Serajuddin and Safiruddin who continued as mutwallis to 1904 or 1905. Their successors were Syed Abdul Waris and Syed Abdulla who were succeeded by the present mutwalli.

This much, therefore, is clear that the tenure has existed since 1843, that so far as can be ascertained the rent has remained unchanged during three mutwalliships and for a period of nearly 70 years. It will now be convenient to deal with the points raised by the appellants.

With regard to the first point I do not think that any question of limitation or adverse possession can arise. These contentions are I think clearly untenable in view of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Vidya Varuthi Thirtha Swamigal v. Balusami Ayyar (1). That case deals with a Hindu math but the Board state that the principles there laid down apply equally to Muhammadan endowments and it is clear from that case that unless authorised by the kazi no mutwalli could create a leasehold interest to endure beyond his life, that the lessees acquired no title by adverse possession against the succeeding mutwalli and that if the succeeding mutwalli recognized the interest, the consent is only referable to a new tenancy created by him and that there is no adverse possession until his death or until a new mutwalli takes his place.

With regard to the second point the appellants contend that there is estoppel, as at the Court sales the mutwalli represented the deity, but I do not think that it was in the scope of the mutwalli's agency to make a representation of this nature if the lease was in the fact granted without the authority of kazi and consequently I think no question of estoppel arises.

The third point raises questions of some difficulty. The respondents contend that when as here the position of landlord and tenant exists, the onus of proving the existence of a tenure is on those who set it up and that this is always so, the only exceptions being in the case of raiyats or lakhraj-dars.

What the respondents in effect say is this, by admitting you are a tenant, you admit that these lands are part of the permanently settled estate and as such liable to rent, which you acknowledge you are liable to pay, and that it is, therefore, for you, the tenant, to show that you hold a lease of these lands which entitles you to hold them in perpetuity at a fixed rent.

The appellants, on the other hand, rely on the cases of Hurryhur Mookhopadhyaya v. Madub Chunder (2) and Bipradas Pal Chowdhury v. Kamini Kumar Lahiri (3), the principles laid down in which, they say, are not to be confined to cases of lakheraj land and they cited authority to show that a lakheraj-dar was a lease-holder, Gokhul Sahu v. Jodu Nundun Roy (4), and reliance was also placed on s. 3 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It was further contended that the existence of a tenancy was admitted in the plaint and that it was for the respondents who sought to eject the appellants to show that it had determined. I am inclined to agree with the respondent's contention as to the onus, but I do not think that this disposes of the suit or that it is possible to ignore the fact that the tenure has existence since at any rate 1843 at a uniform rate of rent and that it has not been questioned by three generations of mutwalli.

I now come to the fourth contention raised by the appellants. In this connection we were pressed with the decision in Chockalingam Pillai v. Rayandi Chettiar (5). In that case the manager of a Hindu temple had granted a permanent lease in 1813 which was continued by a fresh grant in 1832, the lessees being described as persons with an hereditary right to cultivate. There was no evidence to prove the purpose of the lease but it had existed unchallenged from 1832 down to 1893 when the suit was brought.

The Court in that case presumed a lawful origin having regard to the long period during which the lease existed.

The respondents contend that assuming this can be done in the case of a Hindu temple, having regard to the rights of the managers to grant permanent leases in cases of necessity, no such assumption can be made in favour of grantees from a mutwalli who can only make such a grant with the leave of the kazi. I do not think, however, that such a presumption is impossible in the case of a Muhammadan endowment and I think that the Court under the circumstances of the present case should make the assumption that the grant was in its origin lawful having regard to the fact that the lease has existed unchallenged since at any rate 1843, that the rent has remained unchanged, that applications for enhancement have been made and failed and that no mutwalli has challenged it for a period of over 70 years. The respondent contends that istimrari mokarrari does not necessarily mean permanent and heritable but that it means permanent during the life of the grantee and that in the years 1859 and 1860, it was used in the sense of a grant for life and we were referred to the case of Narsingh Dayal Sahu v. Ram Narain Singh (6) and Ram Narain Singh v. Chota Nagpur Banking Association (7). These cases lay down that the meaning of the term is not necessarily permanent and heritable but that the nature of the grant is to be determined from the circumstances and I think we should from the circumstances here infer that the grant was permanent and heritable.

(6) 30 C. 883.

(7) 36 Ind. Cas. 321; 43 C. 332.

I do not think that the fifth contention raises any difficulty and if necessary the title and plaint could have been amended. As to the sixth point, in my opinion, s. 10 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application as the argument based on it assumes that the tenure is permanent, if it was not validly created, in my opinion, it is not permanent. It follows from what has been stated before that the rent is not enhanceable.

In the result, the appeal succeeds and the suit will stand dismissed except as to the prayer for declaration of title and the claim for rent for the years 1324 to 1327.

The defendants contend that the rent for the year 1324 has in fact been paid. There is no decision on this point and, accordingly the matter will go back to the lower Court in order that this question may be decided.

As to the rents for the years 1325 to 1327 they have admittedly not been paid and there will accordingly be a decree in favour of the plaintiff for rent for these years. But a question arises as to whether the rents for these years were tendered or not and whether, therefore, the interest is payable. This question again has not been decided and this matter must also go back for the decision of the lower Court. The Judge in the Court below will finally dispose of these questions as to rent.

The appellants will be entitled to their costs both of this Court and of the Court below.

The costs of the remand will be decided by the Court below.

Mukerji, J.—I agree.

—RESPONDENT.

Construction of document—Ijara deed, whether mortgage—Suit to recover haq ajiri—Interest, whether can be claimed—Ijaradar, rights of—Set-off—Time-barred debt, whether can be set off.

Under the terms of an ijara deed it was agreed that the ijaradar should remain in possession of the ijara property and that out of the fixed annual rent he should pay Government revenue and road-cess into the Government Treasury every year, should deduct and appropriate to himself a certain sum in lieu of interest on the zarpeshgi money and should pay the balance as haq ajiri to the owner. In a suit to recover the haq ajiri in respect of several years:

Held, (1) that the ijara deed was a deed of usufructuary mortgage and that the ijaradar held possession not as tenant but as mortgagee and that the haq ajiri was not a payment in the nature of rent and that, therefore, in the absence of a stipulation in the deed for payment of interest thereon, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover any interest on the arrears of haq ajiri; [p. 786, col. 2; p. 787, col. 1.]

(2) that the defendant as ijaradar was not entitled to remove any portion of the soil of the land held in ijara and that, therefore, damages recovered by the plaintiff from a third person in respect of an injury done by the latter to the soil could not be claimed by the ijaradar and could not be set off against the plaintiff's demand. [p. 787, col. 1.]

A time-barred debt can be claimed by way of equitable set-off. [ibid.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Santhal Parganas, dated the 14th July 1922, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Rajmahal, dated the 5th May 1922.

Messrs. D. C. Verma and Ram Prasad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Rai G. S. Prasad and N. C. Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In 1907 the plaintiff who is proprietor of village kasba Syedpur in the Santhal Parganas, executed and registered an ijara deed granting certain proprietary rights in the village in favour of the defendant for a term of seven years in consideration of an advance of Rs. 26,000. Under the terms of the deed it was agreed that the ijaradar "should remain in possession of the ijara property, and out of Rs. 1,630-8 the fixed annual rent, he should pay Rs. 411-5-6 as Government revenue and road-cess into the Government Treasury every year, should deduct and appropriate to himself every year Rs. 975 in lieu of interest on the zarpeshgi money and should pay the remaining sum of Rs. 294-3-0 every year as haq ajiri" to the plaintiff.

The defendant failed to pay the haq ajiri for several years in succession and, therefore, the plaintiff instituted the suit out of which this second appeal arises, claiming the haq ajiri for the years 1320 to 1325 Faslis both inclusive together with interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. After the defendant had filed his written statement the plaintiff amended the plaint, withdrawing the claim in respect to the year 1320 Fasli.

The defendant did not deny that the haq ajiri was due for the years 1321 to 1325 Faslis but he contested the claim for interest and also sought to set-off against the demand in respect of haq ajiri certain payments alleged to have been made by him to the plaintiff. Of these it is only necessary to mention two, namely, (1), a payment of Rs. 150 realized from one Rai Bahadur Baikuntha Nath Sen, who had excavated a tank in the village without permission and (2) a sum of Rs. 240-5-6 due as rent for the six years in respect of lands in the village held by the plaintiff as *raiya*t under the ijaradar and Rs. 120 due as interest on the said arrear rents. The other items sought to be set-off have been disallowed by the lower Courts and no appeal is pressed before us in regard to them. This defendant also set up the bar of limitation against the claim for haq ajiri for 1320 to 1323, and urged that Musammata Sita Sahuan should have been joined as plaintiff.

The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff was entitled to the haq ajiri claimed for the years 1321 to 1325 inclusive and that, though the ijara deed contained no stipulation for the payment of interest thereon, the haq ajiri being rent, the usual rate of 12 per cent. ought to be paid. With regard to set-off, the Subordinate Judge disallowed all the items except that relating to the rent of the plaintiff's *raiya*t holding, but even that claim was found excessive, since the rent for 1320, 1321 and 1322 was not recoverable, the claim being barred by limitation. A sum of Rs. 117 was allowed to be set-off as rent, cess and interest.

On appeal the learned District Judge held that the haq ajiri was rent and as such, according to the custom in the Santhal Parganas, interest was payable on arrears at the rate of 12 per cent. He upheld the decision of the Subordinate Judge that the proprietor and not the ijaradar was entitled to the Rs. 150 paid by Rai Bahadur Baikuntha Nath Sen, and rejected the claims to set-off other than that allowed by the Trial Court. He thus dismissed the appeal.

The only points pressed in appeal before us are (1) that haq ajiri is not rent and, there being no stipulation for interest on it, the Courts below were wrong in allowing interest; (2) that, though the defendant would not be able to seek his remedy by suit in respect of the arrears of rent for 1320 to 1323 that remedy being barred by limitation, the debt still subsisted and he was entitled to have the arrears of all six years set-off against the plaintiff's claim and (3) that the defendant, as ijaradar with full proprietary rights granted by the ijara lease, was entitled to the Rs. 150 paid as compensation for the wrongful excavation of a tank.

At first sight, since the ijara speaks of the haq ajiri as being one of the component parts of the Rs. 1,630-8 which is described as the fixed annual rent, there would be an inclination to decide that the lower Courts were correct in finding that interest was payable on it as rent. It is argued that zerpeshgi lease is not a mere contract for cultivation but it also provides security for money advanced, and in the present case it was arranged that the appropriation of Rs. 975 every year by the ijaradar furnished the security for the advance, while the Rs. 294-3 took the form of rent for the right to cultivate or to collect rent from the *raiya*ts. The question, however, whether in such a case as this, haq ajiri is rent has been decided by this Court in the case of Barhamdeo Narain Singh v. Ramanand Prasad Singh (1). That case was similar to the present one; there, in consideration of Rs. 12,000 certain zemindari rights were made over to a person who made the advance at what was described as a fixed annual rental of Rs. 803-4. Out of this Rs. 803-4 the person who made the advance was to deduct Rs. 620 on account of interest on the zerpeshgi and was to pay Rs. 83-4 annually to the person who received the advance, Chapman and Atkinson, J.J., held that this haq ajiri payment of Rs. 83-4 was not rent, that the deed was a usufructuary mortgage and that the person in possession held as mortgagee and not as tenant; the haq ajiri was due from him as mortgagee under an arrangement with the mortgagor and was not due from him as tenant. We see no good reason to differ from the above decision and, following it, must decide that, the haq ajiri not being rent, no interest was payable on it, as there was no stipulation in the deed for payment of interest thereon.

(1) 40 Ind. Cas. 594; (1918) Pat. 24; 1 P. L. W. 795,
(2) 32 C. 576; 2 C. L. J. 73.

As regards the set-off of the arrears of rent payable by the plaintiff to the defendant, the learned Subordinate Judge was clearly mistaken in holding that the set-off of the rent of the years 1920 to 1922, inclusive, was barred by limitation. The case of Sheo Saran Singh v. Mahabir Parshad Shah (2) is an authority for holding that in a suit like the present one the rent of lands held by the mortgagor and forming part of the mortgaged property can be set-off and that such rents may be set-off, even though they may be barred by limitation. Gajadhar Mahto v. Raghubar Gope (3) and Ramdhari Singh v. Parmanund Singh (4) also decide that a time-barred debt may be claimed by way of equitable set-off. The defendant-appellant must be allowed to set-off the rent of the six years 1320 to 1325 Faslis at the rate of Rs. 29-8 a year, that is to say Rs. 177 and road, cess and interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum.

The last point pressed before us is with regard to the sum of Rs. 150. It appears that Rai Bahadur Baikuntha Nath Sen without permission excavated a tank in the village; both the plaintiff and the defendant took proceedings in Court against him, but the matter was settled by the payment of Rs. 150 which the plaintiff received. It is contended that, as the deed of ijara gave to the defendant all the rights of the proprietor during the term of the ijara, the defendant was entitled to get the money as temporary proprietor, and, because the excavation of the tank deprived him of part of the usufruct, he is entitled to compensation. If he was entitled to compensation on this ground he would have to seek it from the plaintiff who mortgaged the property to him and not from the stranger who trespassed. The contention cannot be supported, the damage was damage to the corpus of the property, and the ijaradar would not be allowed to take away any portion of the soil.

On the findings I have come to the appeal must be allowed in part and the decree of the lower Court must be modified to this extent, that the plaintiff-respondent will be declared to be not entitled to interest and the sum of Rs. 705 will be deducted from the amount decreed; also the appellant will be declared to be entitled to set off Rs. 177 as rent of the plaintiff's holding for the six years 1320 to 1325, both included, with road-cess and interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum; this sum of Rs. 177 and the road-cess and interest will be further deducted from the sum decreed as payable to the plaintiff by the lower Courts.

The parties will get costs proportionate to their success in all the Courts.

A mortgage-deed provided that the mortgagee would be entitled to appropriate the profits arising out of the mortgaged property in lieu of interest on a portion of the mortgage-money and that the payment of the balance along with interest at a certain rate shall be compulsory at the time of redemption:

Held, (1) that the agreement with regard to the payment of interest on the balance of the mortgage-money did not operate as a clog on the equity of redemption;

(2) that the intention of the parties was that no redemption should take place without payment of the entire mortgage-money plus interest at the rate provided for in the deed on that portion of the mortgage-money which carried interest.

Obiter.—Where money is borrowed on the security of property which is already mortgaged to the same creditor and there is a stipulation in the subsequent deed that without payment of the two sums the property is not to be redeemed the effect of the clause is to create a further mortgage and to make the property security for the additional debt.

Messrs. A. P. Pandey and Ram Nama Prasad, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal arising out of a suit for redemption. On the 5th August 1899, the plaintiffs' predecessors borrowed a sum of Rs. 592-8-0 from the predecessors of the defendants and executed a single document for it. As found by the lower Appellate Court, the probability is that the profits of the property sought to be mortgaged were not sufficient to cover the interest on the whole amount, and accordingly there was a provision in the document that the mortgagees were entitled to appropriate the profits of the property in lieu of interest on a sum of Rs. 392-8-0. As to the balance, it was provided that the payment of this sum along with interest at 2 per cent. per annum shall be compulsory at the time of redemption.

The plaintiffs offered to redeem the property on payment of Rs. 392-8-0, whereas the defendants claimed that they must pay Rs. 200 plus interest. The Court below has accepted the contention of the defendants and has passed a conditional decree for payment of the entire amount before redemption. In appeal the learned Vakil for the appellants has argued that the payment of Rs. 200 was not made a charge on this property and that, therefore, the defendants are not entitled to insist on its payment before redemption. It is further urged that even if it were to create a charge on the property, the covenant was a clog on redemption and was not enforceable.

Reliance has been placed strongly on the remark of the lower Appellate Court that it does not appear that there is any charge on the property so far as the sum of Rs. 200 with interest was concerned. The learned Judge was forced to make these remarks in view of the ruling cited before him, which is reported as Sheo Shankar v. Parma Mahton (1). The facts of that case are, however, different, inasmuch as there were two different documents. It must also be borne in mind that the question whether a particular document does or does not create a charge depends on its particular terms, and, therefore, cases as regards other documents are not always a good guide. But, if by that case it was intended to lay down that when there is a subsequent contract that there should be no redemption of a prior mortgage before payment of the amount due on the second document, entered into at a subsequent period and for an additional consideration, it is either a clog on the redemption of the first mortgage, and, therefore, unenforceable, or does not create any charge at all, then the view is not quite in consonance with the opinions expressed in several other cases of this Court, viz., Ranjit Khan v. Ramdhan Singh (2), Brij Lal Singh v. Bhawani Singh (3) and Bhikam Singh v. Shankar Dayal Singh (4) and it must be deemed to have by implication been overruled by the Full Bench case of Har Pershad v. Ram Chunder (5). In that case in the judgment of Banerji, J., with which Wallach, J., fully agreed it was clearly laid down that where in a subsequent document there was a stipulation that without payment of the two sums the property was not to be redeemed, the effect of the clause was to create a further mortgage or the property was made security for the additional debt.

In the present case, the whole amount was advanced as one transaction. The profits not being equal to the interest of the entire amount, some provision had to be made for payment of the interest on the balance, but there can be no doubt that the intention of the parties was that the property was not to be allowed to be redeemed unless the whole amount borrowed, together with interest that would have accrued, were paid. The learned Vakil for the appellants contends that the covenant was that 'the payment of Rs. 200 with interest shall be compulsory at the time of redemption' does not mean the same thing as the clause 'that there shall be no redemption without payment of such sum' and this is a supposed distinction by which he wishes to distinguish the present case from the one which was before the Full Bench. We fail to discover any difference in the intentions as disclosed by the language employed in the two documents. It is manifest that the mortgagees would never have advanced the whole amount unless they had at least the security of the property covered by the deed. When the payment of Rs. 200 was made compulsory at the time of redemption, the only intention there could have been was that there would be no redemption without payment of this sum.

It cannot be contended that this was a clog on the equity of redemption. It was open to the mortgagor to pay the whole amount the very next day if he chose to do so and if the money was ready in hand. There was no obstacle in his way either. The fact that now the interest has accumulated to a very large extent is due to his own delay in making a payment; but at the time when the transaction was entered into, there was no covenant which could necessarily postpone his right of redemption to a very indefinite period or which would create an insuperable difficulty in his way.

We, therefore, absolutely fail to find any reason why the mortgagor's representatives should not be held bound by the covenant which they entered into with their eyes open and for a valid consideration. This covenant is a part of the transaction of the mortgage. When it was provided that the sum of Rs. 200 would be paid at the time of redemption, it cannot even be contended that the claim is barred by time. We accordingly uphold the decree of the Court below and direct that the plaintiffs should pay the whole amount before redemption. The appeal is dismissed under O. XLI, r. 11.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, r. 12—Mesne profits subsequent to suit—Decree for fixed amount, whether proper—Decree, whether final or only preliminary.

Order XX, r. 12 (1) (c), C. P. C., contemplates only an inquiry as to the amount of subsequent mesne profits, and not a decree for a particular and definite amount. Where, however, in a case the Court after ascertaining such mesne profits passes a decree for the sum without directing an inquiry, the decree is not preliminary but final and further proceedings under the decree are in execution and not in suit. [p. 789, col. 2; p. 790, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Negapatam, in M. A. No. 562 of 1923, in E. P. No. 131 of 1923 (in O. S. No. 4 of 1913, on the file of the Temporary Sub-Court, Tanjore).

Mr. Watrap Subrahmanya Iyer, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. Bashyam Iyengar and K. S. Desikan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Subordinate Judge has set aside various orders on the ground that they were passed without jurisdiction. We understand that the question has since again been raised in this very suit before the same Judge and that he has come to a different conclusion in view of certain recent decisions of this Court. We are, however, not concerned with this. There is an obvious point in this case to which unfortunately his attention was not drawn. If the decree in question was a preliminary decree, the subsequent proceedings now impeached would be merely proceedings in the suit. If, on the other hand, the decree was final, they would be proceedings in execution. It is not seriously disputed that the Court which heard the applications and made the orders which are said to be invalid, was a Court which had jurisdiction to execute the decree. The question, therefore, that has to be decided is, was the decree dated 12th January 1916 in O. S. No. 4 of 1913 preliminary or final? It contains a direction that the defendants shall deliver to the plaintiff possession of the property. Mesne profits up to the date of suit are fixed at Rs. 13,912-9-10 and thus there is no inquiry directed in regard to the present mesne profits. Under O. XX, r. 12, C. P. C., it is open to the Court either to pass a decree for the past mesne profits or to direct an inquiry as to such profits. In this case, the first course was adopted. The decree then awards subsequent mesne profits in respect of wet lands at 100 *kalam*s of paddy per veli per year, in respect of dry lands 6 annas per mah per year. Here must point out that there is a deviation from the terms of the section. Order XX, r. 12, (1) (c), C. P. C. contemplates only an inquiry as to the amount of subsequent mesne profits. But the decree does not direct such an inquiry but decides the measure of the defendant's liability. We fail to see how this can be called a preliminary decree. It is final in every sense of the word. Section 2, C. P. C., says that a decree is final when the adjudication completely disposes of the suit. Herein every point regarding mesne profits (past and future) was decided and there remained nothing for further decision in the suit.

If we turn to the decree of the High Court, passed in appeal, what do we find? It modified the decree of the Subordinate Court substantially only in one particular. For the joint liability for mesne profits of the defendants, it substituted separate liability of the various defendants in proportion to the extent of the land in their occupation. There is no further interference with the decree of the first Court. Order XX, r. 12, cl. (2) runs thus:—

"Where an inquiry is directed under cl. (b) or cl. (c), a final decree in respect of the rent or mesne profits shall be passed in accordance with the result of such inquiry". It follows from this, that if the Court after ascertaining mesne profits passes a decree for the sum without directing an inquiry, the decree is not preliminary but final. See the observations of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in Subbe Goundan v. Krishnamachari (1).

In this view, no question of defect of jurisdiction arises. The orders were rightly passed and are valid. The appeal, is, therefore, allowed with costs throughout.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 393 OF 1923.

July 22, 1925.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY Co.—

DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

GOBARDHAN DAS—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT.

Railway Company—Carriage of goods—Risk Note

Form "B"—Suit to recover damages for loss of goods—Loss, proof of—Wilful neglect, meaning of.

In a suit to recover damages from a Railway Company in respect of the loss of goods consigned to the Company for carriage under Risk Note Form "B", in order to make the Risk Note applicable, it is sufficient that the plaintiff pleads loss to himself, it is not necessary for the Company to give evidence that the goods have been lost to it also. If the plaintiff admits the loss then all that the Company has to do in its written statement is to plead the contract. It is not required to bring any evidence to support its plea. [p. 791, col. 1.]

"Neglect" means the omission to perform a duty and implies that a person does something which ought either to be done in a different manner or not at all or that he omits to do something which ought to be done. But wilful neglect goes further than this and implies that the person charged with such neglect knew that he should do a particular act or that he should refrain from doing a particular act and that he deliberately abstained from doing it or deliberately did it. In order to prove wilful neglect it must be shown that the neglect was not accidental and that the person charged with such neglect knew that mischief would result from his conduct or that there was an indifference to his duty to ascertain whether such conduct was mischievous or not. [p. 792, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Ranchi, dated the 20th January 1923, confirming that of the Munsif, Giridih, dated the 12th April 1922.

Messrs. N. C. Sinha and N. C. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Dayal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, Actg. C. J.—On the 24th February 1921 the plaintiff consigned to the defendant Company 25 bags of coriander seed at Howrah and on the 20th September 1921 he consigned 125 bags of sugar at the Kidderpore docks for delivery at Giridih to himself. It is admitted by the plaintiff that 16 bags of sugar and one bag of coriander seed were lost and the present claim is for Rs. 782 as damages.

The defendant set up a Risk Note in Form "B" and declined to give any account of what had become of the goods.

The Munsif decreed the suit and on appeal the Subordinate Judge affirmed that decree.

The present second appeal is preferred by the defendant.

The sole question is whether the Risk Note absolves the defendant from liability. The Subordinate Judge thought that the Risk Note did not apply because this was a case not of loss but of non-delivery and in his opinion a loss to the plaintiff is not sufficient and the defendant must give proof of loss to himself. He relied on the case of Ghela Bhai Punsu v. East Indian Railway Company (1). But it has been held in Great Indian Peninsular Railway Company v. Jitan Ram-Nirmal Ram (2), that in order to make the Risk Note applicable it is sufficient that the plaintiff pleads loss to himself and that it is not necessary for the defendant to give evidence that the goods have been lost to him also. Reference was made in that case to the judgment of the House of Lords in Smith Ltd. v. Great Western Railway Company (3) and Ghela Bhai's case (1) was dissented from. The same view has been taken in other cases in this Court and I think we must follow the cursus curiæ.

Our attention has been drawn to East Indian Railway Company v. Firm Sukhdeo Das-Gobardhan Das (4), where a learned Judge of this Court sitting alone held that the Risk Note did not apply because the defendant had not pleaded loss within the meaning of the special contract. It would seem that the decision in that case turned upon the special language used in the written statement. But the Great Indian Peninsular Railway Co. v. Jitan Ram-Nirmal Ram (2) is quite clear and lays down the following rules, (1) Where a contract contains an exception and a proviso the party who desires to take the benefit of the exception must (if the contract requires it) not only plead the exception but prove it, and when that has been done the other party who desires to take the benefit of the proviso, which is in reality an extrinsic covenant by way of defeasance, must prove that the subject-matter is not within the exception, (2) Upon the special contract in Risk Note "B" the burden of proof lies in the first instance upon the defendant to show that there was such loss as is contemplated by the Risk Note and the onus is then shifted upon the plaintiff to show that the loss was due to the wilful neglect of the defendant.

Therefore, if the plaintiff admits the loss then all that the defendant has to do in his written statement is to plead the contract. He is not required to bring any evidence to support his plea. If, as is frequently the case, the plaintiff is astute to plead not loss but only non-delivery, even in the case the defendant need only plead the contract and he will be relieved from the duty of calling evidence.

The question, really turns upon the construction of the Risk Note. Does it intend that loss to the plaintiff only will be sufficient to bring it into operation or does it intend otherwise. In my opinion the answer is that the decision in Great Indian Peninsular Railway Co. v. Jitan Ram-Nirmal Ram (2) was correct and the contract requires that loss to the plaintiff is sufficient to bring it into operation. If the goods are being wrongfully withheld by the Railway Company and have not been lost to them, I see no hardship to the plaintiff in construing the Risk Note to cover such a case. The plaintiff would then be entitled to an immediate decree on the ground that the goods have been lost to him by reason of the wilful neglect of the defendant to deliver. If the defendant has good ground for detaining the goods he must prove them. Therefore, in my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge's finding that the failure of the defendant to give any account of the disappearance of the goods proves that the goods have not been lost within the meaning of the Risk Note cannot be supported, and the Risk Note also applies where the plaintiff only pleads non-delivery. In truth in most cases the real object of asking the defendant to call evidence of loss to himself is not to test the correctness of the defendant's allegation but to get by cross-examination some evidence of wilful neglect so as to found a claim under the proviso.

A contrary view has recently been taken in the Calcutta High Court in the East Indian Railway Company v. Jagpat Singh (5). In arriving at the conclusion that loss to the plaintiff is not sufficient the learned Judges in that case have relied upon the language of the English Carriers Act of 1830 and the decision of Baron Parke in Hearn v. London & South Western Railway Company (6). But my respectful opinion is that the English Carriers Act is not in pari materia with the Indian Railways Act; and having regard to the fact that a carrier under the English Act is an insurer which a Railway Company in India is not I do not think we are compelled to give the word 'loss' the same meaning here as in the Carriers Act.

If then the Risk Note applies is the plaintiff entitled to succeed on the ground of wilful neglect on the part of the Railway? The learned Subordinate Judge's judgment on this point is as follows:—"The position of the plaintiffs was such that it was not possible for them to make anything more than a general statement of the fact of negligence as inferred from all the circumstances. And they are not to blame if they have not been able to make out by means of cross-examination the specific acts of negligence because the available evidence on the question of loss has not been placed before the Court." If that is the position, I cannot see upon what evidence the learned Subordinate Judge comes to the finding that there has been wilful neglect. "Neglect" means the omission to perform a duty and implies that a man does something which ought either to be done in a different manner or not at all or that he omits to do something which ought to be done. Here the defendant's duty was that of a bailee, namely, to take such care of the goods as a prudent man would have taken of his own goods. The degree of care required depends on the circumstances of each case. The plaintiff must show that the defendant did something which a prudent man in his circumstances and having regard to the previous course of dealing would not have done. There is such evidence.

The defendant in cross-examining one of the plaintiff's witnesses suggested that the plaintiff had, as a matter of fact, locked the wagons with his own locks but that was denied. The learned Subordinate Judge does not find that it was the defendant's duty to supply locks to the wagons and there is no evidence that the defendant did not take that care which he would ordinarily take of his own goods or of the goods of his other consignors in transit.

Then the learned Subordinate Judge says that if the goods were stolen before they were loaded there must have been neglect. That does not follow. He also says that if they were delivered to a wrong party there must have been neglect. There is no proof that they were delivered to a wrong party.

There is, therefore, no legal evidence of neglect at all.

But wilful neglect goes far beyond this and implies that the defendant knew that he should do a particular act and that he deliberately abstained from doing it. There may be cases where neglect may be deliberate and yet not wilful as for instance when the act is not that of a free agent. Apart from such cases it may be said that every omission is wilful because everyone must be presumed to have intended the ordinary consequences of his act. But the mere presumption of law for the purpose of fixing responsibility is not sufficient. The plaintiff must show that the neglect was not accidental and that the person knew that mischief would result from his conduct or that there was an indifference to his duty to ascertain whether such conduct was mischievous or not. In Lewis v. Great Western Railway Company (7), the question was whether there had been wilful conduct in packing certain cheeses in London and Lord Justice Bramwell expressed himself on the subject as follows:—"I cannot, however, say that there was evidence here to show that the packers who were in London, which is not a great place for the exportation of Cheshire cheeses, knew that they were doing wrong, or at all events that they were aware that there might be mischief resulting from it, and that they improperly did not inform themselves as to whether there would be, or would not be, mischief resulting."

In my opinion there was no legal evidence of wilful neglect here and, therefore, the plaintiff is not competent to succeed.

The result is that the appeal will be decreed with costs throughout.

Registration — Mortgage — Invalid registration—Simple money-decree, whether can be passed.

When the registration of a mortgage-deed is invalid with respect to the property mortgaged it is invalid for all purposes and even a simple money-decree cannot be passed on it on the ground that there was an acknowledgment of the debt evidenced by the deed.

Kalka v. Mathura Das, 50 Ind. Cas. 220; 21 O. C. 341, referred to.

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the Sub-Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 18th October 1924, upholding that of the Munsif, Sultanpur, dated the 30th November 1923.

Mr. Bishambhar Nath, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. K. Ghose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The two Subordinate Courts held the deed of mortgage in suit to be invalid on the ground that it was not properly registered. The father of the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 mortgaged the property in suit to one Debi Bakhsh who is a transferor of his interest to the plaintiff. The defence was that one property situated within the ambit of the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar of Sultanpur was fictitiously included in the deed with a view to commit fraud on the Registration Department and get the document executed in Sultanpur instead of at Amethi where the property really mortgaged was situated.

This is a second appeal and I am bound by the finding of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. It was argued that the lower Appellate Court has only found that the mortgagor committed fraud in including the Sultanpur property and that there was no finding that the mortgagee was also aware of the fact. Such is not the case. The lower Appellate Court has distinctly stated that the property being banjar and far away from the house of the mortgagee, he could not have entered into a transaction of mortgage as a genuine transaction. The lower Court also pointed out that this property did not belong to the mortgagor and was ostensibly purchased by him under a deed which was registered at the same time that the deed in suit was. As is to be expected the Trial Court went further into the matter and held as a finding of fact that the mortgagor did not possess or intend to mortgage this particular piece of banjar property and that the mortgagee did not intend that this property should form part of his security. These are clear findings of fact and I cannot go behind them.

The next argument was that a simple money-decree may be passed on the ground that there was an acknowledgment of the debt within six years of the institution of the suit. This contention is met by a Single Judge ruling of this Court that when registration is invalid with respect to the property mortgaged it is invalid for all purposes. Kalka v. Mathura Das, (1). I am not prepared to refer this matter to a Bench of two Judges.

I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Sch. III, Art. 3, operation of—Dispossession by landlord—Constructive dispossession.

In order that Art. 3 of Sch. III to the Bengal Tenancy Act may apply to a suit for recovery of tenancy land, there must be actual dispossession of the tenant by the landlord. The operation of the Article cannot be extended to the case of so-called constructive dispossession, where the landlord has never allowed the tenant to take possession of the land. [p. 794, cols. 1 & 2.]

Babu Ramgati Sarkar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Nadia reversing a decision of the Munsif, Second Court of Kushtia. The plaintiffs sued to recover possession of mourasi mokarrari lands alleging that they belonged to one Mohan Pramanik and that on his death it devolved on his widow Bama Sundari and that upon her death in 1913 the plaintiffs as reversionary heirs of Mohun were entitled to the properties.

Defendants, on the other hand, contended that they had purchased the lands from Bama Sundari for legal necessity and they further asserted that they were co-sharer landlords and that two years' period of limitation provided by Art. 3 of Sch. III to the Bengal Tenancy Act applied, and that the suit was, therefore, barred by limitation.

The Munsif decided the suit in favour of the plaintiffs. He held that there was no necessity for the sale by Bama Sundari and that no question of limitation arose as there was no dispossession by the landlords. The learned Judge in the Court below has, as I already stated, reversed the decision of the Munsif and he has done so on the ground that the suit is barred by the special Law of Limitation provided by Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He has not gone into the merits of the appeal and has simply decreed the appeal on this ground.

The plaintiffs were never in possession of the lands in suit and were never dispossessed by the landlords. No relation of landlord and tenant ever existed between the plaintiffs and the defendants. But it is urged on behalf of the respondents in this appeal that there has been dispossession by reason of the fact that the landlords refused to allow the plaintiffs to take possession of the lands in suit and it is said that there has, therefore, been what I may describe as constructive dispossession by the landlords on this ground. Reliance is placed on the case of Nabin Chandra Shaha v. Wajid (1) to which we have been referred. Now, as I have already stated the defendants went into possession by virtue of their purchase from Bama Sundari and before her death and they were in possession by virtue of that purchase. The plaintiffs were never in possession and accordingly were never dispossessed. The respondents contend that there has been constructive dispossession. But it has been pointed out more than once in the decisions of this Court that this doctrine should not be extended so as to make Art. 3 of Sch. III applicable thereto. Therefore, for the Article to operate there must be actual dispossession by the landlord of the tenant. This being so, in my opinion, Art. 3, Sch. III, has no application. So far as the case of Nabin Chandra Shaha v. Wajid (1) is concerned one has only got to look into the facts to see that it is quite different from the present case. In that case the heirs had gone into possession of the land on the death of their predecessor-in title and had been dispossessed from the land. Consequently in that case there was dispossession of the tenants within the meaning of Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act. For the reasons which I have stated I think the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in saying that the suit was barred by the provisions of Art. 3 of Sch. III. If any limitation applies it would be the ordinary rule of 12 years' limitation.

I accordingly set aside the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge. As he has never gone into the merits of the appeal the matter must go back to him in order that he may deal with it on the merits.

Costs of this appeal will abide the result.

There is an application in connection with this appeal, it has not been pressed. The respondents Nos. 4, 5 and 6 are not properly represented in the appeal, it is, therefore, dismissed so far as they are concerned.

Mukerji, J.—I agree.

Vendor and purchaser—Agreement of sale—Date fixed for completion of sale—Time, whether of essence of contract—Purchaser, when entitled to possession—Earnest money—Forfeiture—Defect of title discovered subsequently, whether entitles purchaser to recover money forfeited.

In the absence of an express stipulation to that effect and of circumstances implying such an intention, the date fixed for the completion of a sale of immoveable property in the agreement for sale cannot be regarded as of the essence of the contract. It may, however, be made so by either party giving proper notice to the other to complete within a reasonable time, provided that at the time of the notice there has been some default or unreasonable delay by that other.

There is an implied repudiation if the purchaser fails to complete the sale on the day he is bound to complete under the contract, otherwise, if the purchaser is in default the vendor can make time of the essence of the contract by giving the purchaser notice to complete at a reasonable date and threatening forfeiture of the deposit on non-completion on that date. [p. 798, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the stipulation in the agreement is that possession would be given by evicting tenants, on completion of the conveyance, the purchaser's right to possession is coincident with the right to the execution of the conveyance by vendor. [p. 798, col. 2.]

A deposit paid under a contract of sale serves two purposes; if the sale is carried out it goes against the purchase-money but primarily it is a security for the performance of the contract. Even if there is no express provision in the agreement for sale to that effect the vendor would be entitled to retain the deposit as forfeited when the contract goes off by the default of the purchaser. [p. 799, col. 1.]

If the purchaser has, by his default in completion after he has accepted the title, given the vendor the right to rescind the contract and retain the deposit as forfeited and such right has been exercised the forfeiture is final. A subsequent discovery of any defect in the vendor's title does not confer on the purchaser the right to recover the deposit. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Third Court, 24-Pargannas, dated the 30th of June 1922.

Mr. M. N. Roy, Babus Sitaram Banerji and Surjya Kumar Aitch, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—The plaintiff instituted this suit for recovery of Rs. 6,250 made up of Rs. 5,501 as earnest-money in connexion with the contract for sale of a plot of land, 22 bighas in area, and Rs. 749 being the amount of damages and interest. The suit has been dismissed by the Subordinate Judge, and hence this appeal.

The plaintiff's case as laid in the plaint was that the defendants Nos. 1, 2, 7 and 8 proposed to sell the land to him for Rs. 13,200 and a bainapatra was executed by them in his favour on the 28th September, 1919, on receipt of Rs. 501 as earnest-money that later on he came to know that there were other owners who were unwilling to part with the property, and that at last he had to agree to increase the consideration to Rs. 20,100, upon which all the defendants executed in his favour another bainapatra on the 16th July 1920 on receipt of a further amount of Rs. 5,000 as earnest-money. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants had stipulated to convey a good title to the properties and to obtain the requisite permission of the District Judge and make over vacant possession of the property at the time of the transfer; but that the title of the defendants was defective and the defendants had failed to produce their title-deeds in spite of requisition and were negligent in completing the transaction.

The case put forward on behalf of the defendants was that the first contract was made with one Sricharan Prosad Shaha, who was not the plaintiff's benamdar as alleged on behalf of the plaintiff, that there was no representation made by them, that there were no other owners, but, on the other hand, Sricharan knew full well that there were other owners, that the plaintiff was very eager to purchase the property and came to a settlement with Sricharan, paid him up and got his consent to negotiate the sale for himself; that the plaintiff was satisfied with the title which the defendants were able to show, approved of the same and thus the second bainapatra was executed; that the defendants obtained the necessary permission from the District Judge and ejected the tenants who were on the land at considerable cost; that by this time the plaintiff had changed his mind or was unable to complete the transaction as had failed to secure a buyer and so put the matter off repeatedly and on false and frivolous pretexts; and that accordingly the plaintiff was not entitled to a refund of the earnest money, nor any damages or interest.

The plaintiff has come to Court with a story, a large portion of which cannot possibly be accepted. Whether Sricharan was a benamdar for the plaintiff or not in the matter of the bainapatra that was first executed need not be considered for the purposes of the appeal. It appears that the transaction was entered into at a time when there was a land boom in Calcutta and its suburbs. The plaintiff's conduct in offering to complete the purchase within seven days, provided all the co-sharers joined in the conveyance (Ex. A-4) and the fact that he got this offer accepted by the defendant's Pleader on the very day that he made it (Ex. A-5) amply indicates that he was extremely eager to make the purchase. There is evidence to show that on that very day the rent receipts produced by the defendants were examined, and a statement as to the names of the owners of the property and their respective shares therein was also inspected and the transaction was about to be completed it being understood that there were to be two conveyances, one to be executed by the adults and the other by the guardian of the minors. Draft conveyances were made over to the defendants' Pleader for approval and were returned to the plaintiff after approval, subject to some additions and alterations. The plaintiff then insisted on having the permission of the District Judge with regard to the share of the minors and wanted to have vacant possession, and that is why the completion of the transaction was deferred and the second bainapatra was executed. The plaintiff's conduct in paying as earnest-money such an unusually large sum of Rs. 5,000 also points to his great eagerness to purchase the property at the time, and unmistakeably shows his story as to his not having approved of the defendants' title to be untrue. There is in the second bainapatra a clear statement that the purchaser's Pleader had approved of the defendants' title. The plaintiff's case that this statement was put in without his knowledge cannot be accepted; and the positive evidence on the record is to the contrary. The plaintiff is neither illiterate nor of immature understanding, but holds the responsible post of an Auditor in a Government Office. It is clear upon the evidence that he set about negotiating for the purchase of the property with the full knowledge that, at least, one previous contract, namely, that with Mr. Cohen for its sale had fallen through on account of defect of title, or imperfect title. Apart from the other evidence, that of his own Pleader Jogesh Babu and of the defendants' Pleader Ashu Babu clearly shows that the plaintiff was not at all anxious to look into the defendants' title beyond what the latter were able to make out upon the scanty materials which they had at their disposal. There is a very important statement in the deposition of Mr. Mahabul-ul-Huq, who acted as plaintiff's Pleader at one stage of the proceedings, namely, before the second bainapatra was executed and before Jogesh Babu came upon the scene. He states that on one occasion he came to Ashu Babu's shertsta at the request of the plaintiff to examine what documents the defendants had produced for examination, and that for some days there was talk going on between the plaintiff and the defendants about the examination of title-deeds. He says that he was not satisfied about the defendants' title and asked for the patta, but Ashu

Babu gave him to understand that he was to produce the rent-receipts only for plaintiff's examination. We find upon the evidence of Ashu Babu also that when he showed the rent-receipts to the plaintiff's Pleaders he told them distinctly that he would not be able to produce any other documents in respect of the property. The conclusion that one must come to upon the entire evidence in the case is that when the second bainapatra was executed, the title had already been approved by the plaintiff and the defendants were to convey the property after having obtained the permission of the District Judge in respect of the shares of the minors and after taking such steps as were necessary for getting rid of the tenants in order that the plaintiff might have vacant or khas possession of the land.

The District Judge granted the permission by an order dated the 17th December 1920 and the fact was communicated to the plaintiff by the defendants' Pleader by a letter Ex. 3 (c) dated the 23rd December 1920. On the 28th December 1920 the plaintiff's Pleader replied to the defendants' Pleader (Ex. A) asking information about the date of the Judge's order, and impressing upon the latter that the deed of sale should be executed and registered within 15 days of the date of the permission so that he might get khas possession when he would take possession at the time of registration, and enquiring if tenants had been actually evicted and stating that if that had not been done, it should be done within the period mentioned in the second bainapatra. It will be seen that the period mentioned therein was 15 days from the date of the Judge's order. The concluding paragraph of the letter is important as it was stated that time was of the essence of the contract and that the plaintiff was not prepared to grant an extension on any account. It is noteworthy that no objection was taken in this letter on the ground of defect of title or the imperfect nature of the title-deeds that had been produced. This letter is somewhat curious in that it suddenly thought of treating time as of the essence of the contract when, as a matter of fact, such a long time had elapsed since the execution of the bainapatra. The defendants' Pleader on the 27th January 1921, Ex. 3 (a) replied to the above letter, giving the date of the Judge's order and stating that the defendants had obtained vacant possession by securing istafa from all the tenants and undertaking to make over vacant possession immediately after execution and registration of the conveyance. The defendants appear to have felt somewhat surprised at the statement that time was of the essence of the contract and characterised it as a mere plea to avoid completion of the contract. By this letter the defendants definitely gave the plaintiff notice that if he did not get the conveyance completed, that is to say executed and registered, they would regard the contract cancelled and the earnest-money would be forfeited. The plaintiff's Pleader then, on the 2nd February 1921, gave a reply (Ex. 3b) condemning the defendants' long silence over the letter of the 28th December, 1921, insisting that time was of the essence of the contract, and saying that the plaintiff was willing to forego his right to refund of earnest-money and damages if the defendants would send the draft conveyance for approval within 24 hours and execute the conveyance by the 5th February 1921. It further stated that the plaintiff wanted to be taken to the land in order to be satisfied about the istafa executed by the tenants. It was also stated that a certain reversioner had written to the plaintiff warning him of his rights. Lastly, and this is most important, it was stated that the defendants were to produce the original title-deeds which they had undertaken to produce at the time of the agreement, and if they were not produced the plaintiff would not make the purchase. To this letter there was a stern reply (Ex. I) given by the defendants' Pleader on the 7th February 1921 complaining that the plaintiff was setting up, one excuse or another to avoid completion of the transaction as he was unable to find a purchaser though he was hunting for one, explaining that the objection as to defect of title was unreasonable, frivolous and without foundation, and insisting that the draft kabala should have been sent by that time and expressing willingness to take the plaintiff to the land at such time as he would appoint for the purpose. The letter concluded with a threat of forfeiture and a sale to somebody else for the consequences of which the plaintiff would be held liable. There was no further correspondence between the parties after this letter and the suit was instituted on the 22nd February 1921.

the plaintiff was setting up frivolous pretexts and resorting to new devices at every step in order to get rid of the contract. He neglected intentionally to fulfil his part of the contract and was trying his best to wriggle out of it. A claim for damages or interest under such circumstances is entirely out of the question.

The question then remains as to whether the plaintiff is entitled to a refund of the earnest-money. In the second bainapatra there is a stipulation which runs in these words: "We shall execute and register in your favour or in favour of your nominee within 15 days of the receipt of permission of selling the share of the said minor on receiving Rs. 14,599 the balance of the consideration from you and shall give you khas possession of the land by evicting the tenants from it. If inspite of receipt of permission from the District Judge we fail to execute a kabala within the said date, on taking the balance of the consideration, then you shall take khas possession of the said property by depositing the balance of the consideration in Court. If, on the other hand, you fail to get a kabala executed by us on paying the balance of the consideration within the same time, then we shall forfeit your earnest-money." The permission of the Judge was obtained on the 17th December 1920 and by the letter of the 23rd December 1920, Ex. 3 (c), the defendants called upon the plaintiff to complete the sale-deed within a fortnight. In his reply of the 29th December 1920 (Ex. A) the plaintiff stated that time was of the essence of the contract. The defendants' letter of the 27th January 1921 (Ex. 3 (a)) clearly gave notice to the plaintiff that if he did not get the deed of sale completed (i.e., executed and registered) within 10 days from the date thereof, the defendants would regard the contract as cancelled and the earnest-money would be forfeited. The plaintiff replied (Ex. A-1) on the 2nd February 1921 noting that time was of the essence of the contract and raising certain objections and asked for a draft conveyance to be sent for approval which, in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, it is the duty of the purchaser to tender. The defendants' letter (Ex. I) of the 7th February gave the plaintiff a further chance which he did not avail of. The position then is this: A date was fixed in the bainapatra for the completion of the purchase, but in the absence of an express stipulation to that effect and in the absence of circumstances implying such an intention, the date cannot be regarded as of the essence of the contract. Although, however, time is not originally the essence of a contract in this respect, it may be made so by either party giving proper notice to the other to complete within a reasonable time provided that at the time of the notice there has been some default or unreasonable delay by that other. There is an implied repudiation if the purchaser fails to complete on the day on which he is bound to complete. This is the day, if any, fixed by the contract for completion, if time, in this respect, is of the essence of the contract; otherwise if the purchaser is in default the vendor can make time of the essence of the contract by giving the purchaser notice to complete at a reasonable date and threatening forfeiture of the deposit on non-completion on that date. These conditions were fulfilled on the date on which the 10 days mentioned in the letter Ex. 3 (a) of the 27th January 1921 expired and on such expiry the right of forfeiture of the deposit arose.

It has been urged that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the plaintiff had no money with which he could buy. That is perhaps so. It is also true that the conduct of the defendants was not altogether free from blame. It would appear that the two istafas Ex. H and Ex. H-1 were executed on the 18th January 1921, and the three tenants Krishna Chandra Mandal, Kartik Chandra Ghose and Pashupati Ghose gave evidence to the effect that they did not vacate the land till March or April that is to say about a month and a half after the institution of the suit. The eviction of the tenants, however, was not a condition precedent to the completion of the transaction; it was only stipulated in the bainapatra that the kabala will be executed and registered and khas possession would be given by evicting the tenants. The purchaser's right to take possession, in a case like this, arises coincidentally with the right to the execution of a conveyance by the vendor. In this case, there was no attempt made by the plaintiff to get the conveyance—no tender of consideration money, no tender of draft conveyance, and in fact all the circumstances indicate that he was trying to back out of the contract. There is nothing to show that if the conveyance had been completed the defendants would have been unable to make over vacant possession.

The conduct of the defendants also in connexion with this transaction does not appear to be altogether fair: they too seem to be speculators though perhaps in a lesser degree; they entered into a contract with Mr. Cohen while the contract with Sri-charan was yet in force; their title to this property was found defective and not accepted as satisfactory. It, therefore, seems rather unreasonable that they should be allowed to stick to the whole amount obtained by them as earnest-money. They have, no doubt, spent some money in getting the permission of the Judge and in getting the tenants to vacate, but the figure at which they put down their expenses seems exorbitant. For these reasons, I feel no sympathy for them; but at the same time I am unable to hold that any considerations of equity can arise in this case. A deposit paid under a contract of sale serves two purposes; if the sale is carried out it goes against the purchase-money, but primarily it is a security for the performance of the contract. Even if there was no express provision the vendors would be entitled by virtue of the purpose of the deposit, to retain it as forfeited, when the contract went off as I hold it did, by the default of the purchaser. The question of defect of the vendor's title is not material; for if the purchaser has, by his default in completion after he has accepted the title, given the vendor the right to rescind the contract and retain the deposit as forfeited and such right has been exercised the forfeiture is final. A subsequent discovery of any defect in the vendor's title does not confer on the purchaser the right to recover the deposit.

The appeal accordingly must be dismissed, but under the circumstances, without costs.

tion—Sale set aside—Fresh application for execution, nature of—Limitation.*

Respondent, a co-sharer landlord, obtained a decree for rent against the appellant on 24th July 1920. On 21st May 1923 respondent presented a petition for execution of the decree and for certain reasons the Executing Court held that the decree could not be executed as a rent-decree and execution was allowed to proceed as for a money-decree. On 19th November 1923 some property belonging to the appellant-judgment-debtor was sold. The sale was confirmed on 20th December and the case was dismissed on full satisfaction. On the same day the appellant put in a petition to set aside the sale under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 90 of the C. P. C., and the sale was eventually set aside on the 8th March 1924. On 24th March 1924 respondent applied once more to execute his decree as a rent-decree:

Held, (1) that the second application for execution was one in continuation of the first application inasmuch as the prayer in both the applications made by the respondent was that the decree should be executed as a rent-decree; [p. 800, col. 2.]

(2) that in any case the sale in execution of the first decree having been set aside, the respondent's right to execute the decree revived and the second application having been made within three years of the date on which the sale had been set aside was not barred by limitation. JUDGMENT.

Bucknill, J.—This was a second appeal. The appellant was a judgment-debtor in a suit brought by the respondents who were decree-holders. The present appeal arises out of certain execution proceedings. Apparently as long ago as 24th July 1920 the respondents obtained a decree against the appellant. On the 21st May 1923 the decree-holders presented a petition for execution and on the 19th November 1923 it would appear that a sale took place of the property. I may say that it would seem that this decree was obtained by the respondents as co-sharer landlords and notice had been issued by them against other co-sharer landlords under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. For some reason or other this notice was stated not to have been properly served and the Munsif, before whom the matter in execution then was, insisted that the execution should proceed as a money-decree and not as a rent-decree. It appears to have proceeded in that way. The sale was actually confirmed on the 20th December 1923 and we are told that the case was dismissed on full satisfaction. However, according to the information before us, on the same day, (that is on the 20th December 1922), the judgment-debtor put in a petition to set aside the sale under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 90. Now, we are told that the ground upon which it was asked that the sale should be set aside was that the price in the sale proclamation at which the property was valued was not adequate. Eventually on the 8th March 1924 the sale was set aside and on the 24th of the same month the decree-holders then applied once more to execute their decree. They still asked to execute the decree in precisely the same manner as they had asked to execute it in the first instance namely, as a rent-decree. Now to this, the judgment-debtor objected on the principal ground that the application was more than three years from the date of the original decree. As I have said the original decree was dated the 24th July 1920, the first application for execution was dated the 21st May 1923 and this last application for execution was dated the 24th March of last year. Now, the decree-holders have maintained that limitation does not apply. They contend that the present application should be treated as essentially a continuation of the preceding application. The Munsif of Gaya after hearing the parties came to the conclusion that this present application was rightly to be regarded as a continuation of the preceding one and accordingly by his order dated the 26th July 1924 disallowed the objection which had been made to the present application for execution. The judgment-debtor appealed from this decision to the District Judge of Gaya who on the 18th December confirmed the Munsif's decision. Now, before the District Judge, it would seem that not only was this point as to the present application being not in continuation of the previous application urged but also that the present application was not of the same character as the first application. I think it is simplest to deal with the latter of these two questions first.

It is quite clear that the first application for execution was an application to execute the decree as a rent-decree. It seems true that owing to the decision of the Munsif at that time and owing to the fact that he found that there had been some failure of service on the co-sharers the actual decree which was executed was a money-decree, but, as has been pointed out by the learned District Judge, the present application for execution is to renew the application for execution as a rent-decree and not as a money-decree and I presume that the service will be properly effected upon this occasion. I am, therefore, unable to see how it can be seriously contended that the first and the second applications are not the same.

With regard to first point I think that it is important to observe that during all material periods under consideration the decree-holders had de facto and de jure obtained the realisation of their decree. It was not until the 8th March 1924 that it was possible for them to have taken any further step. According to the position as it then stood their claim had been satisfied by a sale of the property. It was not until that satisfaction was negatived, as I have just mentioned, that he was then in a different position. He could have taken no step in the interim to apply for further execution or for a renewal of execution, for, had he done so, he would obviously have been met with the re-joinder that as matters stood his decree had already been realised in full satisfaction that he should be prevented when the sale was set aside from applying to obtain what was justly due to him by execution would obviously to my mind be a gross inequity.

However, the learned Advocate, who has appeared for the appellant here, has suggested that the present application is not in law a continuation of the preceding application. I should like, however, to point to a case which has been decided in this Court, Kaniz Zohra v. Syam Kisen (1) in which the position which obtains here (except in one point to which I propose presently to refer) was there substantially the same. In that case decided by the then Chief Justice (Sir Edward Chamier) and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad it would appear that a decree had been obtained by the plaintiff in a suit on the 20th June 1905. In August 1906 the first application for execution was made. It would seem that this application for some reason was dismissed; probably, (although it is not clear from the report) because it was not proceeded with. A second application was made in July 1909 and the judgment-debtor's immovable property was sold in satisfaction of the debt on the 14th December 1909. But on the 12th February 1910 the sale was set aside at the instance of the judgment-debtor; on what ground I do not find it stated. On the 10th December 1912 the decree holders made their third and last application asking the Court to sell the identical property in satisfaction of their decree (which, of course, still subsisted) which had been sold on the 14th December 1909. It was contended in that case by the judgment-debtor who objected to the proposed third application for execution that the application could not be regarded as a continuation of the preceding application and that it was out of time. The learned Chief Justice in referring to this argument has dealt with the position as it appears to him to exist in cases where this same difficulty arises as it often must. He remarks:—

"It may often happen that proceedings taken upon an application for execution remain pending in an original Court or Court of Appeal for several years and may result in an order setting aside a sale of immovable property many years after the application for execution was presented and many years after any of the dates indicated in the third column of Art. 182 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act. This has often been pointed out by the Courts and in order to get over the difficulty some Courts have held that a subsequent application should be treated as an application made in continuation of the application made before the sale and other Courts have held that such an application is governed by Art. 181 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act and that the decree-holder is entitled to three years from the date on which the sale is set aside within which to make a further application. It seems certain that the Legislature could not have intended that further execution of a decree should be prevented by the fact that execution proceedings remained pending in the Courts for many years."

I think (if I may be permitted to say so) that those words express the equitable views of the position which should obtain in a case such as that which is now before us. The learned Advocate for the appellant has suggested that although the remarks, to which I have referred, of the then Chief Justice of this Court may be applicable to what he calls execution under the general law, they are not applicable to cases where the execution relates to suits which fall within the ambit of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He points to s. 29 of the Limitation Act and shows how it indicates in sub-cl. (b) of cl. (1) that "nothing in the Limitation Act shall affect or alter any period of limitation specially prescribed for any suit, appeal or application by any special or local law now or hereafter in force in British India." He points to the Bengal Tenancy Act and in particular to item No. 6 of Part III, Sch. III. He observes that there is a period of limitation given. I may point out that clearly the period which is there given is one of three years. This period refers to an application made under the Act in a suit between landlord and tenants and not being decreed for a sum of money exceeding Rs. 500. Now he points out that in this case the sum did not exceed Rs. 500. He then refers to the times from which the period of limitation begins to run. They are (1) the date of the decree or order or (2) where there has been an appeal the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court; or (3) where there has been a review of judgment, the date of the decision passed on the review. He suggests that in the case of setting aside of an execution proceeding, (that is to say, in this case the setting aside of the sale which has taken place in an execution proceeding) none of these three categories (except perhaps the first) apply. Whether this is so or not (that is to say, whether it may come under sub-s. (3) or not) does not to my mind matter. If there was no provision in this Part III, Sch. III for a case such as that which is before us, then it seems clear that s. 29 of the Limitation Act has no application and the matter falls within the provisions of the ordinary law as has been laid down by the late Chief Justice of this Court in the case to which I have referred. Obviously it would be a matter of the greatest hardship if, in circumstances such as those which have been disclosed in the present case, a decree holder, not clearly through his own fault and certainly not by fraud but for one reason or another, should have his sale, which has been carried out in execution of his decree under which he was entitled to recover from the judgment-debtor what was due to him, set aside, and should on that account be prevented from eventually recovering by further execution proceedings the sums to which he was entitled. In my view, therefore, the District Judge and the Munsif were quite right in the orders which they made.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 33 (3), 50

Under s. 33 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act the name of a creditor should not be entered in the Schedule until the Court has considered any cause that might be shown against so doing. [p. 803, col. 1.]

The Court is bound to come to a judicial finding before it enters the name of any creditor under s. 33 or before it refuses to remove a name under s. 50 of the Provincial Insolvency Act after considering the report of the Receiver and any other evidence adduced as to whether the debts are really due or not. [ibid.]

Appeal against the orders of the Additional District Judge at Howrah, dated the 30th of May, 13th of June, the 4th of July and the 10th of July 1923.

Babus Pyari Mohan Chatterji, Rupendra Kumar Mitter and Tarakeswar Pal Choudhury, for the Appellant.

Babu Dharma Das Sett, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of certain orders passed in an insolvency proceeding. One Jogesh Chandra Chatterji presented a petition to be adjudicated an insolvent on the 7th January 1922 and to his petition attached a schedule giving a list of 12 creditors. He was adjudicated an insolvent on the 5th April 1922 and a Receiver was appointed who appears to have sold up the assets and thereby collected funds for part payment to the creditors. Thereafter in February and March 1923 six persons Anukul Chandra Bhandari, Bhola Nath Mitra, Amarendra Nath Mallik, Naran Chandra Ghose, Kunja Behari Manna and Fazley Huq Sheikh, who were not among the creditors mentioned in the schedule, applied to be entered therein and the learned Additional District Judge ordered ex parte that their names be so entered. On the 27th April 1923, the present appellant who is a creditor mentioned in the schedule put in a petition stating that those debts were bogus debts, and the Judge then ordered the Receiver to report in the matter. The Receiver went to the spot and after taking certain evidence prepared a report which was put up to the learned Additional District Judge who, on the 30th May 1923, recorded his order as follows: "Read Receiver's report which I accept in toto as regards the persons reported on. The name of Amarendra Nath Mallik to whom the obligation of insolvent was incurred after adjudication will be expunged from the schedule. The names of the rest will be incorporated in the schedule with the debts due to each according to "Receiver's report." There is nothing to show that this order was passed in the presence of any of the parties. In fact on the 1st June 1923 Amarendra Nath Mallik made an application praying for having a chance of being heard and for the order of the 30th May 1923 being reversed. On the 13th June the learned Additional District Judge heard his application ex parte and then admitted Amarendra Nath Mallik as a person whose name should be entered in the schedule. Amir Chand (the present appellant) applied to have these orders set aside or re-considered as they were passed in his absence. This application was refused and the present appeal is against this order.

In appeal it is urged on behalf of Amir Chand that the procedure under s. 33 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act has not been observed. That section provides that any creditor of the insolvent whose name is not in the original schedule may apply to have his name entered therein; and then the Court after causing notice to be served on the insolvent and the other creditors who have proved their debts after hearing their objection, if any, shall comply with or reject the application. As to this, it is clear that no notice was issued at all before the names were so entered; (on the date no one of the scheduled creditors had proved his debt) but subsequently Amir Chand appeared and prayed for expunging the names of certain creditors under the provisions of sub-s. (1) of s. 50, Provincial Insolvency Act. Now it is perfectly clear that the names of those creditors should not have been entered in the schedule until the Court has considered any cause that might have been shown against so doing and this was not done.

It is next urged that the Additional District Judge had no jurisdiction to give over the whole matter to the Receiver and simply accept his report. He was bound to come to a judicial finding either before he entered the names of some of the creditors under s. 33 or before he refused to remove the names under s. 50 after considering the report of the Receiver, as to whether or not each or any of those debts were really due. We agree with this contention. Various other points were raised, such as whether some part of the debts was barred by limitation, whether the debt of Anukul Chandra Bhandari under the handnote—the handnote being dated three months after the application for adjudication and three days before the adjudication—is a valid debt in view of s. 34 (2) read with s. 28 (7); and further whether Jogesh Chandra Chatterji was ever liable for the alleged debt of his father Umesh Chandra Chatterji on an old hat-chitta and whether the hat-chitta that he executed two months after the adjudication in July 1922 in favour of Anukul Chandra Bhandari can be put in the schedule in view of the provisions of s. 34 (2). On these matters we come to no adjudication in this proceeding. In our opinion the Judge did not come to any judicial determination as to whether all or any of these debts are debts which should be entered in the schedule but had practically only acted on the Receiver's report, without having issued necessary notices before passing his orders. We hold that he must proceed according to the Statute and determine judicially in the presence of the appellant and after notices to other scheduled creditors on the validity of each claim to be entered in the schedule. We do not say that he cannot consider the Receiver's report and the evidence recorded by him but he must come to a judicial decision on each debt set out.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the Court below set aside and the case sent back to that Court to be dealt with in accordance with the direction indicated above. The appeal is allowed with costs, one gold mohur against each set of the appearing respondents.

PRESIDENT, TALUK BOARD OF RAMNAD—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Land outside water-spread of tank—Rain water, use of, for raising nanja crops—Sarasari, ryots' liability to pay.

In the case of lands outside the water-spread of a tank and which are cultivated purely by rain water, the landlord is not entitled to charge the tenant with sarasari for raising wet crops. The tenant is liable to pay only the usual punja rates.

A tenant is entitled to catch and use rain water as it falls on his land and the landlord has no right to it till it leaves the tenant's land and flows in to his tank or into a channel which leads water into his tank.

Arunachalam Chettiar v. Mangalam, 35 Ind. Cas. 329; 40 M. 640; 20 M. L. T. 70; 4 L. W. 37; 31 M. L. J. 168, distinguished.

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court of Ramnad at Madura, in A. S. Nos. 41 and 42 of 1921, preferred against those of the Court of the Special Deputy Collector of Ramnad at Manamadura, in S. S. No. 766 of 1919 respectively.

Messrs. Watrap S. Subrahmaniam Iyer and A. S. Srinivasa Iyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Soundararaja Iyengar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only point argued in these second appeals is whether the plaintiff was entitled to levy sarasari in respect of the lands, in the possession of the defendants. It has been held that in the case of kulamkawai lands, that is, lands situated within the water-spread of the tank, if the tenant raises a nanja crop by putting up ridges all round, thereby preventing the flow of water into the tank, or by retaining water, which would flow into the tank, when the level of the tank goes down, he is bound to pay sarasari. But in this case, the finding is that the lands in question are not kulamkawai lands. These lands are outside the water-spread of the tank. The question is whether what applies to kulamkawai lands should also be held applicable to lands outside the water-spread of the tank. Mr. Soundararaja Iyengar, who appears for the respondent, contends that water, which would have flowed into the tank, has been obstructed by the defendant putting up ridges round the lands. He relied upon the decision of the High Court in Second Appeal No. 1034 of 1919 as supporting his contention. In that case, the District Judge found that the tenants not only put up ridges and obstructed flow of surplus water, but also diverted water of certain odais into their lands, for the purpose of raising wet crops. In this case, there is no finding that any such odai or water flowing in a defined channel has been diverted into the defendant's lands. What the defendants have done is to catch rain water as it fell on their lands. The landlord has no right to the rain water, till it flows in a defined channel. He is not entitled to the rain water, which falls on a tenant's lands, till that water leaves the tenant's land and flows into a tank or into an odai or channel, which leads water into his tank. The decision in Arunachalam Chettiar v. Mangalam (1) has, therefore, no application to the present case and the facts in this case are different from the facts in Second Appeal No. 1034 of 1919. The question, therefore, is whether in the case of lands, which are cultivated purely by rain water, which falls on them, they should be charged sarasari. There is no warrant for saying that such lands should be charged sarasari, if wet crop is raised. No doubt, by putting up ridges all round the lands, the defendants have to some extent obstructed the flow of water into the plaintiff's tank; but that by itself would not give the plaintiff right to charge sarasari rate, in the case of lands outside the water-spread.

In the result, the appeals are allowed and the decrees, of the lower Courts are reversed and the suits dismissed. The appellants will have their costs throughout.

The defendants' liability to pay punja rate is not denied; the plaintiff, therefore, is entitled to get it in a proper proceeding.

Ejectment of trespasser—Suit by one co-sharer on behalf of all—Maintainability of suit.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 6th August 1923.

Mr. Bisheshar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Daya Kishan Seth and Zahur Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Usman Khan sued for the ejectment of the defendants on the ground that he was the sole taluqdar to whom belonged the jungle in suit. During the course of an inquiry by the lower Court it was found that Usman Khan was owner only of 10 annas 8 pies share while a brother and a sister of his owned the rest of the taluqdari. The lower Court passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for possession of the jungle in suit and for damages for trees feloniously cut by the defendants and ordered that the decree was in favour of the plaintiff and his co-sharers as well.

(1) 35 Ind. Cas. 329; 40 M. L. T. 70; 4 L. W. 37; 31 M. L. J. 168.

In this Court it was argued (1) that the plaintiff alone was not entitled to sue for possession of the entire area of land in suit and at best could obtain a decree for 10 annas 8 pies share; (2) that the defendants were owners of the produce of the jungle and (3) that the plaintiff had not proved his possession of the jungle within the period of limitation while the defendants had proved adverse possession.

It is well-settled law on the basis of rulings of High Courts that one co sharer can sue a trespasser in ejectment on behalf of himself and his other co-sharers. This principle was laid down as far back as 1901 by the Allahabad High Court. A reference to this ruling is given in a Bench case of the Allahabad High Court Thakurji v. Hira Lal (1). There is a Bench ruling of the Madras High Court Syed Ahmad Sahib Shutari v. The Magnesite Syndicate Ltd. (2) in which reference is given to a long series of rulings of the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts in support of this proposition of law dating as far back as 1881.

The learned Counsel for the defendants appellants sought to distinguish this principle on the ground that the plaintiff had come to Court asserting his title to the entire property. That may be a question in dispute between him and his co-sharers. The decree is granted by the lower Court in favour of both the plaintiff and his co-sharers and I see no point of distinction so far as the defendants are concerned between this case and the principle enunciated above. This plea in the grounds of appeal must fail.

[The rest of the judgment proceeds only on facts and is, therefore, omitted. —Ed.]

Section 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply to a land let out to an occupancy ryot for the purpose of a shop in a Bazar. [p. 806, col. 1.]

Such leases are governed by the Transfer of Property Act. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rangpur, dated the 22nd May 1922, reversing that of the Additional Munsif, Kurigram, dated the 30th of July 1921.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Asita Ranjan Ghose, for the Appellants.

Mr. Atul Chandra Gupta and Babu Radhika Ranjan Guha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—In the suit out of which this appeal has arisen the plaintiffs sued to eject the defendants under s. 111 of the Transfer of Property Act, on the ground that their lease had expired. The facts of the case are these: the defendants first of all took a lease of some 5 kanis of land in 1310 in Lal Manirhat Bander for a term of five years for the purpose of establishing a shop on it. The defendants then took one additional kani of land at a total rental of Rs. 69 per annum for 6 kanis of land and there was a fresh lease for five years. At the expiry of the term the plaintiffs demanded an enhancement of rent and a fresh lease was given for another five years from 1322 to 1326 at a rental of Rs. 78 per annum. The defendants executed a kabuliyat in the plaintiffs' favour on the 1st Jaistha 1322. This lease expired in 1326 and the defendants were asked by the plaintiffs to evacuate the land. This they refused to do and hence this suit. The case of the defendants was that they were settled on the land in 1307 as *raiya*s and that the kabuliyat was merely a confirmatory lease which did not set forth the real purpose for which the lands were taken, that the defendants were governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act being occupancy *raiya*s and were not liable to be ejected.

The first Court held that the lands had been taken for the purpose of a shop and that s. 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had no application. In appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that the defendants had failed to prove their case that they took the land for agricultural purpose in the year 1307. He found that they took the land for the purpose of establishing a shop. He further found that they subsequent to the taking of the land for the shop had acquired certain other occupancy jotes in the vicinity and hence he held that under the provisions of s. 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act they must be considered to be holding the lands that had been taken for the purpose of a shop as occupancy *raiya*t and hence they could not be evicted. The learned Subordinate Judge in coming to this conclusion relied upon the case of Bhikariram Bhagat v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (1).

Dr. Basak, who has appeared for the appellants, contends that s. 182 has no application to the present case and that the ruling relied upon by the learned Subordinate Judge of the lower Appellate Court is clearly distinguishable for in that case the tenant had already been a *raiya*t before he took the land for the purpose of a shop and the finding was that the land was taken for a shop and also for cultivating as a *raiya*t other lands using the land in suit a homestead. This case is clearly distinguishable from the present case. I do not think that the provisions of s. 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act can be held to apply to the present case. The land in this case was admittedly taken not for the purpose of a homestead from which the defendants were to cultivate their jotes but was taken for the purpose of a shop and is still used for that purpose. It is situated in a part of Lal Manirhat Bander which is a large Bazar. The defendants admittedly had another homestead and it would be straining the law if I were to hold that they were holding this land as their homestead. Their lease shows that it was for the purpose of a shop that the land was taken and had been used for that purpose only. Therefore, it cannot be said that the defendants have been holding this land as homestead. In my opinion, s. 182 has no application to the present case and this land is governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and not by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In that view the appeal must succeed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the First Court restored. The appellants will get their costs of this Court as also of the lower Appellate Court.

Chakravarti, J.—I agree with my learned brother in the order which he has proposed to make. I wish only to add a few words. The learned Advocate for the respondents relied upon the case of Bhikari- ram Bhagat v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (1) upon which the lower Appellate Court also relied. That case is distinguishable from the facts of the present case. The learned Judges in the course of their judgment in the case cited laid down the law in these words "But supposing that during the first two or three years during which the defendants merely held their shop and resided on the disputed land, and held jotes at Malhati, they could not invoke the aid of s. 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, there can be no manner of objection under a long course of rulings of this Court to their claiming the protection of that section after they became agriculturists at Sanko and carried on agriculture from their residence at Sanko which was also used as a shop." Now in the present case, the learned Subordinate Judge has found that the land was taken for the purpose of establishing a shop and not for the purpose of carrying on agricultural operation as was claimed by the defendants. The learned Judges in the case cited pointed out that the land in that suit was taken primarily for the purpose of carrying on cultivation and the use of it as a shop was only incidental use. In the present case, the lease when it was taken was clearly one governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. The main purpose or the only purpose for which it was let out by the landlords was for the defendants to establish a shop in a Bazar. In these circumstances I agree with my learned brother in the judgment just delivered that s. 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application to this case.

(1) 34 Ind. Cas. 152; 43 C. 195; 25 C. L. J. 357.

Where, however, several persons who join as plaintiffs in a suit for pre-emption have an equal right of pre-emption, but some of them have qualified themselves under the Muhammadan Law to enforce such right and the others have not, the suit is maintainable at the instance of the former and is not liable to dismissal merely because some of the plaintiffs have not so qualified themselves. Unless the purchase price is known to the person entitled to pre-emption, he has not all the facts before him to enable him to decide whether he will exercise his right of pre-emption. JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Monghyr dated the 8th September 1922. The appellant Mahant Tokh Narayan Puri is the defendant first party in a pre-emption suit instituted by some of the respondents as plaintiffs against the appellant as purchaser and the defendants second party, also respondents, as vendors of an estate in Mouza Beiman bearing Tauzi No. 7094 on the rolls of the Collector of Monghyr. Some years ago by a Collectorate batwara Mouza Beiman was partitioned amongst the co-sharers and divided into several separate revenue paying estates bearing separate tauzi numbers. Tauzi No. 7094 which constitutes the property in dispute in this case fell to the patti of certain co-sharers now represented by Jagdip Narain Singh and others, the second party defendants in the suit. Tauzi No. 3814 and Tauzi No. 7093 fell to the patti of those who are now represented by the plaintiffs. These two estates are contiguous with the estate in suit lying immediately to the south and east thereof respectively. The appellant (defendant first party) is the proprietor of Mauza Bindaban which lies immediately to the west of the estate in suit. On the 13th December 1918 the defendants second party, who may be conveniently referred to as the vendors, sold their interest in Tauzi No. 7094 to the appellant, who may be referred to as the purchaser, for Rs. 3,775 and a further sum of Rs. 125 to cover the arrears of rent then due. The plaintiffs as proprietors of Tauzi Nos. 3814 and 7093 claim the right of pre-emption on payment of the price agreed between the vendors and purchaser and instituted the present suit to enforce their claim.

The Muhammadan Law relating to pre-emption applies also to Hindus in Bihar. The right of pre-emption applies in the case of three classes of persons. The first class are the co-sharers in the vended property known as shafi-i-sharik. The second class are sharers in the appendages or appurtenances of the vended property, shafi-i-khalit. The third class derive their right from vicinage and the right applies in favour of neighbouring proprietors holding contiguous property. They are known as shafi-i-jar. The plaintiffs claimed originally as the owners of the adjoining property but by an amendment of their plaint they alleged that the pattis of the plaintiffs and the vendors had all along been irrigated from water of the same ahar and pynes and they also claim as sharers in the appurtenances common to both properties (shafi-i-khalit).

The purchaser resisted the suit on various grounds. He contended that the plaintiffs were not entitled to pre-emption on the ground of vicinage as he also was a neighbouring proprietor; that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the right of shafi-i-khalit as they were not in fact sharers in appurtenances common to the two estates, and, further, that such a right had not been properly claimed in the plaint, that the ceremonies necessary to be performed in order to found a right of pre-emption had not been properly performed, and that such ceremonies, if performed, had been performed by the plaintiff No. 4 alone, and by adding other plaintiffs in the suit who were strangers having no claim to pre-emption he had forfeited his right.

The learned Subordinate Judge before whom the case came for trial appears to have found all the facts in favour of the plaintiffs but considered that although the plaintiffs were entitled to pre-emption as shafi-i-jar and shafi-i-khalit they could not enforce their right as they were not actual co-sharers in the vended property.

On appeal the learned District Judge of Monghyr without considering the questions of fact which had been determined by the Trial Court upheld the decision of Subordinate Judge.

An appeal was preferred to the High Court, but as the facts had not been found by the lower Appellate Court the case was remanded to that Court for re-hearing and for decision after coming to a finding as to what the facts were.

The learned District Judge on remand has found that the ceremonies were properly performed by the plaintiff No. 4, that the plaintiffs other than the plaintiff No. 4 were not strangers and were entitled to be added; that they could not succeed merely as shafi-i-jar because the purchaser was also a neighbouring proprietor but that they had established their right as shafi-i-khalit, sharers in appendages, a right the purchaser did not enjoy, and he passed a decree for pre-emption in favour of the plaintiffs.

The purchaser has appealed from that decision which he challenges upon three grounds, (1) that the plaintiff No. 4 who performed the ceremonies has lost his right to claim pre-emption by joining as plaintiffs other persons who had not joined in the ceremonies and who were strangers as that expression is understood in Muhammadan Law, (2) that the plaintiffs having claimed on the ground of vicinage only should not have been given a decree as sharers in the appendages and (3) that delay in performing the talab-i-ishtish-had was fatal to the validity of that ceremony without which the right could not be asserted.

As to the first point it is well-settled that if a person entitled to claim pre-emption joins with himself as co-plaintiff a person who has no such right, he forfeits his own pre-emptive right and the suit must be dismissed as against both: (see Wilson's Anglo Muhammadan Law, 5th Edition 388). The basis of this rule appears to be that as the right of pre-emption only exists in favour of those who are co-sharers either in the vended property or in the appurtenances, or who are proprietors of adjoining property, as against persons who are not so qualified, it would be manifestly unjust as against the vendee to allow persons who do not possess the necessary qualifications to assert a right of pre-emption. In the present case the plaintiffs are all members of the same family and are all proprietors in Tauzi Nos. 3814 and 7903. They do not, therefore, come under the category of strangers as understood for this purpose in Muhammadans Law. It was contended, however, on behalf of the appellant that nobody could be joined as a plaintiff who, although otherwise qualified, had not himself performed the preliminary ceremonies of talab-i-mowasibat and talab-i-ishtish-had but no authority was produced in support of this proposition. As pointed out by Banerji, J., in Wajid Ali v. Shahban (1) in almost all the cases in which it has been held that a person possessing the right of pre-emption forfeits it by joining a stranger, the person joined was a stranger to the co-parcenership body and a total outsider and reference is made to the case of Chhotu v. Husain Baksh (2) in which it was held that the mere joining by a person having a right of pre-emption of persons who have an equal right of pre-emption, but have not qualified themselves according to the Muhammadan Law to enforce it, and who are not strangers, will not disentitle the person entitled to maintain a suit for pre-emption, if he had sued alone, from maintaining a suit brought by him so far as he himself was concerned. In that case pre-emption was claimed by several persons one of whom Chhotu only had performed the preliminary demands and it was held that Chhotu had not forfeited his right of pre-emption by joining with him the other plaintiffs in bringing the suit. The point appears to have been settled by that decision. Moreover, the learned Judge whose judgment is under appeal states that this point was not pressed before him by the purchaser and I do not think we should in the circumstances allow the appellant to raise the point afresh. In any case were it necessary to do so I should hold that the suit is not bad for misjoinder of parties.

With regard to the second point it is true that in the relief portion of the claim the plaintiffs ask for a declaration that they have the right of pre-emption as they are proprietors of the adjoining pattis. But by the amendment of para. 15 in the body of their plaint they do allege that the pattis of themselves and the vendors have all along been irrigated from water of the same ahar and pynes and at the trial as well as in the lower Appellate Court, the question whether the plaintiffs were entitled to come in under the second class of pre-emptors was raised and decided.

The facts with regard to this part of the case are found by the learned District Judge on remand. There is an ahar of considerable extent in the plaintiff's patti, Tauzi No. 3814, and the vendors as proprietors of Tauzi No. 7094 have rights of taking water for the irrigation of their own land from this ahar. The learned Judge finds that the proprietors of the two pattis have joint rights over this ahar and that in fact the owners of the vended patti have a right of easement over the ahars and water-courses situated in the plaintiffs' patti. The result is that the plaintiffs' patti is a servient tenement. Such a case has always, so far as I am aware, been treated as bringing the owner of the servient tenement within the right of shafi-khalit. It was contended, however, that the ahar in question had been left ijmal at the time of the batwara and that it was not an appendage or appurtenance to either of the two pattis over which the parties had common rights and the case of Keshao Singh v. Bansi Singh (3) was referred to. In that case an estate had been partitioned into several mahals but certain roads and a well and a tank and other properties had been left undivided and remained the joint property of the proprietors of the different estates. It was found that the fact that this joint property remained enjoyable by the proprietors of each of the separate mahals was not sufficient to give any of them a right of pre-emption in the second degree or khalit as the joint property was not an appurtenance of any of the estates but a separate property owned by the proprietors jointly. In the present case the facts appear to be different. The ahar in question is within the plaintiffs' patti and the title to it belongs to the plaintiffs alone. It is not shown to be joint property and it is found by the learned District Judge that the right which the proprietors of the vended property have was merely a right of easement in the ahar. This being so I think the plaintiffs come within the second class of pre-emptors, namely, shafi-khalit.

With regard to the third point it may be stated that Muhammadan Law requires that the pre-emptor immediately on hearing of the sale should make known his intention of exercising his option of purchase. He should rise and declare his intention there and then whether witnesses are present or not. The ceremony is known as talab-i-mowasibat. Having done this he must also with the least practicable delay make a formal declaration claiming his right of pre-emption before witnesses in the presence of either the vendor or the vendee or on the premises sold. The ceremony is known as talab-i-ishtish-had. It is not disputed that the first demand was properly made by the plaintiff No. 4. It is contended, however, that there was a delay of four days in performing the second demand and that this delay is fatal to the plaintiffs' right. The facts found are that the property was sold on the 13th December 1918. The plaintiff No. 4 came to hear of it on the 16th December and immediately declared his intention of exercising his right of pre-emption in the presence of several witnesses. He was not aware, however, of the amount of the purchase price paid for the property and in order to ascertain this he sent his servant Munshi Gajadhar Lal by train on the evening of the same day to Shaikhpura to obtain a copy of the sale-deed. There was some delay in obtaining the copy of the sale-deed owing to the Registration Office being closed. Eventually Gajadhar Lal obtained a copy of the sale-deed on the 19th December and took it to his master at Mauza Barhi who, as soon as he received it on the 20th proceeded to the house of the vendors who lived in the same village and there performed the second ceremony of talab-i-ishtish-had in the presence of some of the vendors and other witnesses. The same ceremony was performed by him on the vended property

On the following day and in the presence of the purchaser on the 22nd, but these last two ceremonies were not necessary in order to complete his right. The question is whether by waiting until he had ascertained the amount of the purchase-money the plaintiff No. 4 forfeited his right. The learned District Judge considered that the delay was satisfactorily explained and that the plaintiff was justified in waiting until he ascertained the purchase price before performing the second ceremony.

It seems to me on general principles that unless the purchase price is known to the person entitled to pre-emption he has not all the facts before him to enable him to decide whether he will exercise his right. The price when ascertained may be higher than that which he is inclined to pay. There can be no doubt, however, that he would be bound to take immediate steps to ascertain the price and any unreasonable delay in doing so would, in my opinion, operate as a forfeiture of his claim. In the case of Abadi Begam v. Inam Begam (4), the opinion was expressed that a claim relinquished upon mis-information of the amount of the sale consideration, or of the property sold, may be resumed when the real facts became apparent. This opinion, however, upon the facts of that case, would appear to be merely obiter. It is referred to apparently with approval by Sir Roland Wilson who states "but a person who refrains from pre-empting when he first hears of the sale, owing to being mis-informed of the price, is not estopped from reviving his right on becoming subsequently aware of the true price:" (see Anglo Muhammadan Law, 5th Edition, 401). The rule laid down by Sir William Macnaghten and referred to with approval in the case of Jumeelun v. Luteef Hossein (5) is that the talab-i-ishtish-had should be made with the least practicable delay and it was further laid down in that case by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court that the due and sufficient observance of that formality, as to time is a question to be decided in each case by the Court which has to deal with the facts and I do not think that in second appeal we should interfere with the finding of fact on a question of this sort unless the ascertained facts clearly shew that there was no evidence to support the finding. In the case of Baijnath Goenka v.

Ramdhari Chowdhary (6), there was a considerable delay between the date (the 20th December 1897) when the pre-emptor first heard of the sale and the 7th January following when he performed the second ceremony of talab-i-ishtish-had. The delay between the 20th December and the 4th January was due to the fact that the pre-emptor was during that time endeavouring to procure from the Registration Office a copy of the sale-deed, the office being closed for the Christmas vacation. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee appear to have assumed that the circumstances were adequate to excuse that delay. The Trial Court had held that the delay was not fatal to the claim. The High Court on appeal had reversed that decision. Their Lordships observed: "There is no question of law in the case. It is clear that the right of pre-emption must be exercised, and the claims necessary to give effect to it must be made, with the utmost promptitude, and that any unreasonable or unnecessary delay is to be construed as an election not to pre-empt. And whether there has been such a delay is a question to be determined upon the facts of each particular case. It is enough for their Lordships to say that, in their opinion, the grounds stated by the learned Judges of the High Court for overruling the decision of the First Court, on a pure question of fact, were insufficient". In my opinion the delay in the present case has been amply explained and I do not think that any sufficient reason has been made out why we should differ from the learned District Judge on a pure question of fact. Indeed had the case come before us in the first instance I should have taken the same view. In my opinion the third objection also fails and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 304 of 1923.

March 30, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Suhrawardy

NIRODE BARAN ROY AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, r. 12, O. XXII, rr. 4, 9—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Mesne profits, determination of—Application for ascertainment of mesne profits, nature of—Abatement, application to set aside—Questions to be considered.

An application for the determination of mesne profits is an application in the suit. [p. 811, col. 2]

In an application to set aside an abatement the Court should investigate whether the plaintiff was lawfully prevented from making the application for substitution within the statutory period and should direct its attention to the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of s. 5 of the Limitation Act. [ibid]

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Burdwan, dated the 30th of May 1923.

Mr. Mohendra Nath Roy and Babu Sitaran Banerji, for the Appellant.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitra, Babus Satindra Nath Mukherjee and Byomkesh Basu, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff who is the appellant brought a suit for recovery of possession of a certain property and for mesne profits. He obtained a preliminary decree which directed that "the plaintiffs do recover from the defendants wasilat from the date of dispossession to the date of recovery of possession, that the amount of wasilat may be ascertained later on upon the plaintiff's application". This decree was passed on the 26th September 1918. The plaintiff applied for the determination of the mesne profits and at the same time he filed an application for substitution of the heirs of defendant No. 1 Bepin Krishna Roy in his place who had died before that. This application of the plaintiff was treated as made in execution proceedings. It appears that no definite order was passed upon the plaintiff's application for substitution. But processes were issued against the heirs sought to be substituted and they entered appearance and took part in the proceedings before the Commissioner. In June 1922 the defendants applied for an order that the decree for wasilat as against defendant No. 1 had abated on which the Court held that it had so abated,

On the 22nd July 1922 the plaintiff applied to the Court for setting aside the abatement. On the 30th May 1923 the Court dismissed that application. Hence this appeal.

The fight in the lower Court apparently was mainly confined to the question whether the application for the ascertainment of the mesne profits was an application in execution or in the suit. That point the learned Subordinate Judge has correctly decided against the plaintiff. Under the Code of 1908 an application for the determination of the mesne profits is an application in the suit: see O. XX, r. 12, C. P. C.

As regards the question whether the plaintiff had made out a case for setting aside the abatement the learned Subordinate Judge refused his application on the ground that the plaintiff might have applied for the ascertainment of mesne profits earlier, that he should not have waited for two years to make the application and that if he had not waited so long in making his application the present question would not have arisen. But these were not the points which the learned Subordinate Judge was required to enquire into in an application for setting aside the abatement. He should have in the first place investigated whether the plaintiff was lawfully prevented from making the application for substitution within the statutory period and in the second place the learned Subordinate Judge should have directed his attention to the question whether in the circumstances of the present case the plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of s. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act in applying for setting aside the abatement. The learned Subordinate Judge has not considered these questions from the true standpoint.

We, therefore, set aside the order of the Court below refusing the plaintiff's application to set aside the abatement and send the case back to that Court for re-trial. The Court below will enquire (1) whether the plaintiff was prevented by a lawful cause from making the application for substitution in the place of defendant No. 1 Bepin Krishna Roy within the statutory period, and (2) whether the plaintiff was prevented by any sufficient cause within the meaning of s. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act from making an application for setting aside the abatement within the time allowed by law.

The parties will be entitled to adduce fresh evidence on these points.

Costs will abide the result. We assess the hearing-fee of this appeal at three gold mohurs.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 126 OF 1923.

July 10, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Adami and Justice Sir John Bucknill, Kt.
GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY, THROUGH AGENT—

versus

DATTI RAM AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Railway Company—Carriage of goods—Risk Note Form "B"—Suit to recover damages for loss of goods—Negligence—Burden of proof.

In a suit to recover damages for the loss of goods consigned to a Railway Company for carriage under Risk Note Form "B" the onus of proving negligence of the Company lies on the plaintiff; the Company is not bound in law to assist the plaintiff in fastening liability on itself. The mere assertion by the plaintiff that the Company's servants must have been negligent because the Company had failed to deliver the goods is by itself of no value as proof of negligence. In such a case it is quite unnecessary for the Company to do anything more than to prove or admit the loss of the goods; having done that the onus of proving that the loss was occasioned under one of the exceptions contained in the Risk Note lies upon the plaintiff. [p. 812, col. 2; 813, col. 1; 815, col. 1]

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Saran, dated the 24th November 1922, modifying that of the Munsif, Chapra, dated the 15th March 1922.

Mr. Muhammad Hasan Jan, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. N. Mitter, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Bucknill, J.—This was a second appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Saran, dated November 24th 1922 by which he modified a decision of the Munsif of Chapra, dated March 16th of the same year. The appellant was the Great Indian Peninsula Railway through its agent in India; this Company was the defendant in a suit brought by the plaintiffs (the respondents here) who are merchants of Chapra Town. The plaintiffs' suit was of a familiar type; their firm ordered a bale of cloth from a Bombay merchant; it is admitted it was duly sent under Risk Note "B" and was duly placed in the appellant Company's custody; it is also common ground that it was never delivered.

The plaintiffs sued the appellant Company for the value of the goods lost (Rs. 869-14-9,) the freight (Rs. 5-15) and loss of profit (Rs. 75) or Rs. 948-13 0 in all. They averred that they believed that the bale had been lost through the negligence of the appellant Company's servants.

The appellant Company pleaded various defences; they admitted the loss but alleged that it was due to a "running train theft" and that, therefore, they were absolved by Risk Note "B" from liability. The appellant Company, however, called no evidence whatever in support of their allegation of "running train theft." Whether the plaintiffs' evidence proved any negligence on the part of the appellant Company or not was a matter of difference of opinion between the Munsif and the District Judge.

The case, however, proceeded on the usual lines: the plaintiffs tried to prove negligence on the part of the defendant Company but all that their sole witness could aver was that he supposed that the Company's servants must have been negligent because the plaintiffs had never received their bale of cloth. I need hardly say that such an assertion by itself is of no value as proof of negligence. The Munsif, therefore, holding that the plaintiffs had failed to prove any negligence, dismissed their suit with costs.

The District Judge, when the appeal came before him thought that negligence should be inferred "from all the circumstances": he, therefore, reversed the Munsif's decision and gave judgment for the plaintiffs for the price of the cloth with costs but not for the alleged loss of profit which he did not consider had been proved.

It is important to ascertain on what grounds the District Judge arrived at this conclusion. In the first place he points out how impossible it was for the plaintiffs to prove what happened to the cloth when in the Railway's custody; but this, though I may say at once that it is a constant difficulty in almost every case of this type, does not relieve a plaintiff from proving negligence on the part of the Railway's servants. The District Judge next remarks that the Company alone can know what happened to the bale whilst in its custody and that, therefore, under s. 106 of the Evidence Act the onus is on the Company of proving what happened to the goods: but this kindly view is contrary to all the Indian and English case-law authority (vide e.g., Smith, Ltd. v. Great Western Railway Company (1), the onus of proving negligence in these cases lies on the plaintiff; the Railway Company is not bound in law to assist the plaintiff to fasten liability on itself. The District Judge further observes that the whole consignment was lost and that, although the Railway pleaded theft on a running train, it had made no attempt to prove any such theft; and that, therefore, the onus of avoidance of liability lay, by this plea in defence, upon the Company: it is possible that, more closely examined, there may be some force in this reasoning but I propose to deal with this point at a later stage.

The District Judge then states that the plaintiffs could get no information from the Company as to what had happened to the cloth; but this does not, according to the authorities, relieve the plaintiffs from proving negligence. The District Judge next remarks that, from the plaintiffs' evidence and the admitted facts in the case, the only reasonable conclusion was that the loss was due to the negligence of the Company's servants: but I have already pointed out that the plaintiffs' testimony was of no evidential value; whilst the only material admissions in the case were that the bale was duly given to the Company's custody and was lost in a running train theft; neither of which circumstances threw any liability on the Company.

Lastly, the District Judge seems to think that a plaintiff can in some manner go behind his special contract (i.e., Risk Note "B") with the Company and sue the Company for damages for non-delivery under such normal statutory liabilities as are imposed upon parties to a contract under the Indian Contract Act and upon Railways as carriers under the Indian Railways Act: but this view again is, I fear, contrary to the best authority. There have been so many decisions on cases of this type reported in Indian Law Reports that I think it is as well to try and express very simply a few of the more important features which emerge from them.

What is known as Risk Note "B" is, we are informed, the ordinary and most usual contract for the carriage of goods entered into between merchants and the Railway Companies in India. It is very simple in its language: it forms a complete special written contract between the consignor and Railway Company. The Railway takes the goods at a rate of freight lower than the ordinary rate; in consideration for so doing the consignor undertakes to absolve the Company from all responsibility for any loss, destruction, deterioration of or damage to the goods whilst in transit from any cause whatever subject to the following exceptions. These exceptions provide that if a whole consignment (or one or more complete packages forming part of a whole consignment) is lost, then the Company will be responsible if the loss is due

(1) (1922) 1 A. O. 178; 91 L. J. K. B. 423; 27 Com. Cas. 247; 38 T. L. R. 559.

(a) to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or

(b) to theft by its servants or agents or

(c) to wilful neglect of its servants or agents.

Then there is a proviso that wilful neglect cannot be held under the contract to include

(a) fire,

(b) robbery from a running train,

(c) any other unforeseen event or accident.

A, then, a merchant consigns goods by B, a Railway Company, to C, another merchant, under a contract contained in the Risk Note "B" the goods are never delivered to C. A (or C acting really on A's behalf or as A's principal; for there is no direct contract between B and C) sues B for damages for the loss of his (A's) goods or, if one so likes to phrase it, for damages for breach of contract in that B has not delivered the goods to C as B undertook so to do. What is A's cause of action? it is solely on account of a breach by B of the contract between A and B. What is that contract? it is an agreement between A and B reduced into writing in the form of Risk Note "B". What contract must A sue on? on the only contract existing between A and B, i.e., the Risk Note "B." Can A ignore the Risk Note and sue B for damages for non-delivery basing his claim on statutory liabilities imposed generally upon those who make contracts or particularly upon a Railway Company under the provisions of the Indian Contract Act and the Indian Railways Act respectively? the answer is in the negative; A cannot do so; he has to base his claim on his existing and actual contract with B, i.e., the Risk Note "B." A then sues B upon and for damages for breach of the contract, i. e., the Risk Note "B" made between them. B to take the simplest case, admits the loss in the Company's Statement of Defence. By the express terms of the contract B is not liable for loss save under certain specified circumstances. Who has to prove those circumstances under which B is liable?; clearly not B for it can hardly be contemplated seriously that B is bound to assist A in fastening responsibility upon B. So it is A upon whom the onus falls of showing that B is responsible for the loss.

There have it is true been cases—even of quite recent date—in which it has been held that it is not sufficient for B to admit the loss in his Statement of Defence but that B must adduce evidence to prove such loss, e. g., Ghelabhai Punsil v. East Indian Railway Company (2), Jamnadar Baldevdas Firm v. Burma Railways Company Ltd. (3) but these were decisions given prior to the case of Smith v. Great Western Railway Company (1); and it is difficult to understand why B should be called upon to prove what he expressly admits: the point also has been fully discussed and dealt with in this Court in the decision of Mullick, J., and myself in the G. I. P. Railway Company v. Jitan Ram-Nirmal Ram (4) in which we held that the contention was incapable of support. A, who may know nothing, and indeed is not likely in most instances to know anything, as to how or where his goods vanished, or why they were not delivered, can aver in his statement of claim what he pleases; he can state if he wishes that the loss was due to any or all of the exceptions under which alone B is liable; but, assuming that B admits the loss, A, if he is to be successful in his claim, must prove that the loss was in fact due to one of the exceptions under which B is responsible. It is often asked how he can do so; it is obviously not an easy task as it may well frequently be that B, at the mercy of any unscrupulous member of its staff or the victim of clandestine theft by outsiders, knows no more as to the disappearance of the goods than A himself: A's only chance would appear to lie in the administration of searching interrogatories and the calling of servants of B as his (A's) witnesses. If he proves nothing his claim must fail: B need not say or do anything beyond admitting the loss.

All the above points have been dealt with at length in the recent decision of Mullick, J., and myself to which I have referred above. But it is frequently observed that if the law is as above stated it seems very hard as the position of A is almost hopeless. The answer to this comment is very simple; it is that the contract is itself a hard one but that A has complete remedy in his own hand, namely, not to seek to have his goods carried at a reduced rate and under the terms of such a hard contract as Risk Note "B" but pay a higher freight and have his goods carried under another form of contract under the terms of which B has to assume a far fuller responsibility.

I mentioned at an early stage of my judgment that one of the reasons why the District Judge thought that the appellant should be held responsible was that the Railway Company had pleaded in its defence that the loss was due to a running train theft but that it made no attempt to prove that allegation. There seemed at one stage to be some force in the argument which was thus put forward in support of this part of the District Judge's decision. It was contended for the respondent that this admission by the appellant Company was an admission that there had been a theft and that as the Company failed to prove that it was a theft on a running train (satisfactory evidence of which would clearly have permitted the Company to escape any liability) it might be inferred that the theft was committed by the appellant's agents or servants; or, at any rate, that, as they had admitted a theft it was incumbent upon the appellant Company to show that it was not theft by their own agents or servants but theft either as pleaded on a running train or at any rate by some outsiders not in their service or not their agents. It is, however, impossible upon further consideration to come to the conclusion that this argument is a sound one. In the first place the admission or plea is not of theft at large but of a specific form of theft, i. e., on a running train. In the second place, even if the defendant Company failed to prove or to adduce any evidence in support of such an allegation, it cannot be held that a necessary inference must be drawn that the theft was committed by the Company's servants or agents; for, although there might have been a theft, it might have been by persons who were or were not the servants or agents of the Company; whilst, in order to prove that the Company was liable to the plaintiffs for the loss; it was primarily necessary (the onus being upon the plaintiffs) for the plaintiffs to show that the theft (whether or not committed on a running train) was effected by the Company's servants or agents; and this, of course, the plaintiffs made, and no doubt could make, no attempt to do. Lastly it was quite unnecessary, according to the authorities, for the Railway Company to do anything more than to prove or admit the loss and, having done that, the onus of proving that that loss was occasioned under one of those exceptions contained in the contract under which alone the Company could be held responsible lies upon the plaintiffs. As a matter of fact this very point appears to have been dealt with by Odgers, J., in the Madras High Court in the case of the Madras & Southern Mahratta Railway Co., Ltd. v. Krishnaswami Chetty (5). That case was one in which there appeared, superficially, to exist considerably greater reasons for drawing an inference that the theft had been committed by the Railway Company's servants than would be justifiable in the present case now before this Court. In the case decided by Odgers, J., the Railway Company pleaded in defence robbery from a running train and actually produced evidence in order to try and prove that allegation. The Company, however, failed to prove that the theft was one committed on a running train although they did show that when the train carrying the goods arrived at a certain station the Guard found the doors of one of the covered vans open and the plaintiff's bale of goods missing from it. The learned Judge in his decision remarks:—"One is very much tempted to think that where the Railway Company has 5 or 6 of its servants travelling in the train it is not necessary to look to any outside agency to found a case of theft. But I cannot say that that has been established by evidence. In a similar case in B. B. & C. I. Railway Company v. Ranchhodlal Chotalal & Co. (6) which also arose on this Risk Note "B" the learned Judges point out that though the defendants have failed to prove theft from the running train, the onus is, of course, still on the plaintiff to prove neglect or theft by railway servants. This, they point out, should have been done before any question is reached of robbery from a running train as that, namely, robbery from a running train, is an exception to wilful neglect. It has also been established in Narayana Aiyer v. South Indian Railway Company, Ltd. (7) that the onus is upon the plaintiff to establish how the loss or deterioration was caused though there the Risk Note was Form "H." The case in the Madras & Southern Mahratta Railway Co., Ltd. v. Mattai Subba Rao (8) cited by the learned Counsel for the defendant does not seem to me to touch the case. I am, therefore, with great reluctance constrained to come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has no remedy on this Risk Note "B" on the evidence as it stands. The suit must, therefore, be dismissed. The question is whether I should inflict costs on the plaintiff. The defendant, as stated, attempted to prove loss by robbery from a running train and assumed that onus at the trial and failed. This is, as I pointed out, wrong. I do not think that the plaintiff suffered any prejudice from that procedure, but, on the whole, I am inclined to dismiss the suit without costs."

The first judgment referred to by Mr. Justice Odgers (B. B. & C. I. Railway Company v. Ranchhodlal Chotalal & Co. (6) is precisely to the same effect as that of the learned Judge.

Under these circumstances I fear that this appeal must be allowed and the decree of the District Judge of Saran set aside and that of the Munsif of Chapra restored. One can only observe once again that, although it may seem that the decisions in these cases bear hardly upon those whose goods are carried by Railway Companies in this country under Risk Note "B," the contract is one which involves those who thus confide their goods for carriage to a Railway Company in greatest difficulty in recovering compensation in the case of their loss; the substantial remedy against such a state of affairs lies, however, in the hands of the individual who is in no way bound to enter into a contract of such a type which in effect places him at the mercy of the Railway Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 22 (a)—Occupancy holding—Purchase by joint proprietor or tenure-holder, effect of—Lease in favour of third person—Under-raiyat of holding, status of—Lessee, whether entitled to recover rent.

Under s. 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act when the occupancy right in a holding is transferred to a person jointly interested in the land as proprietor or permanent tenure-holder, such person has no right to hold the land as a raiyat but holds it as a proprietor or permanent tenure-holder as the case may be. Thereafter the raiyati holding ceases to exist and is merged in the superior right of the proprietor or the tenure-holder. Persons holding as under-raiyats under the original raiyat are in such a case automatically raised to the position of the raiyats of the holding under the proprietor or tenure-holder. If the proprietor or tenure-holder subsequently to his purchase lets out the holding to another person the latter does not become a landlord of the under-raiyats who have since the date of the purchase become the raiyats of the holding, and unless there is a grant of a right to collect rent from the tenants in favour of the transferee he is not entitled to sue the raiyats for the rent of the holding. JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—This is an appeal in a suit for rent. The material facts are briefly these: One Raseswari held an 8-annas share in certain taluk. In this taluk there was a certain karsa holding held by one Babu Khan and the defendants held an under-raiyati under Babu Khan. Raseswari obtained a rent-decree for her share of the rent and put the karsa holding to sale and purchased it herself. She then proceeded to let out the karsa right to the present plaintiffs and they have brought this suit for rent against the defendants alleging that they are the raiyats and that the defendants are their under-raiyats. The defendants resisted the claim of the plaintiffs contending that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between them and the plaintiffs. Their case was that they were raiyats and not under-raiyats and that the interest conveyed by Raseswari in the plaintiffs' favour was of the same denomination as their own and that, therefore, the plaintiffs are not entitled to sue them for rent. Both the lower Courts have decided against the defendants and the defendants have now appealed to this Court.

Their first contention is that on the purchase of the occupancy holding by Raseswari her raiyati interest was merged in the talqui interest and the defendants were by this raised to the position of raiyats and that the lease granted to the plaintiffs by Raseswari was a raiyati lease of the land and of the same denomination as their own and relying on the decision in the case of Kalam Sheikh v. Panchu Mandal (1), they contend that the plaintiffs are not entitled to rent from them. I think that this contention must succeed. Section 22, sub-s. (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, so far as it is applicable to Eastern Bengal and Assam provides that if the occupancy right in land is transferred to a person jointly interested in the land as proprietor or permanent tenure-holder such person shall have no right to hold the land as a raiyat but shall hold it as a proprietor or permanent tenure-holder, as the case may be, and shall pay to his co-sharer a fair and equitable sum for use and occupation of the land. It seems, therefore, quite clear that since the purchase by Raseswari of the karsa holding the raiyati holding no longer existed but was merged in her superior right. The question then remains what would be the position of the defendants who were under-raiyats under the original raiyats? It seems clear to me that they were automatically raised to the position of raiyats of this holding under the immediate tenure-holders. They cannot be under-raiyats because an under-raiyat has been defined in s. 4 of sub-s. (3) of the Act as a person holding immediately under the raiyat; and s. 5, sub-cl. (3) provides that a person shall not be deemed to be a raiyat, unless he holds land either immediately under proprietor or immediately under a tenure-holder. It, therefore, seems to me that the position of the defendants is that of *raiya*s. That being so, we have now to consider the effect of the karsa lease granted to the plaintiffs by Raseswari. The plaintiffs contend that the effect of this lease is to grant them a right to receive rent from the defendants and they rely upon two decisions, one in the case of Johar Mull Bhutra v. Bhupendra Nath Basu (2) and the other in the case of Ram Anant Singh v. Shankar Singh (3). The defendants-appellants have relied on the case of Kalam Sheikh v. Panchu Mandal (1). In the case of Kalam Sheikh v. Panchu Mandal (1), the facts were very similar to the facts of the present case. In that case there were two leases of the same land, one subsequent to the other, and the learned Judges held that under such circumstances it appeared that the mere fact that the zemindar granted to the plaintiff a lease of the whole of the lands appertaining to the modufut of one Jugo Mohan Sircar could not create the relation of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the defendant so as to entitle the plaintiff to institute a suit for a kabuliyat at an enhanced rate. In other words, they did not create the relation of landlord and tenant between the two lessees. This case was referred to in the case of Johar Mull Bhutra v. Bhupendra Nath Basu (2) on which the respondents rely, and it was there distinguished and not dissented from. The facts of the case of Johar Mull Bhutra v. Bhupendra Nath Basu (2) on which the respondents relied are different because that case was a case of interposing one tenure-holder between two other tenure-holders and the learned Judges held that there was nothing to prevent them being done.

The other case on which the respondents rely, namely, the case of Ram Anant Singh v. Shankar Singh (3) is clearly distinguishable because in that case there was in the second lease an express grant of the right to collect rent from the prior lessee for the remaining portion of the lease. In the case which we are now considering there is no such grant of a right to collect rent and the principles which were the issue of the decision in the case of Kalam Sheikh v. Panchu Mandal (1) would apply to the present case.

We are, therefore of opinion that it has not been proved that the relationship of landlord and tenant does exist between the plaintiffs and the defendants.

The appeal, therefore, succeeds and the plaintiffs' suit is dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Estates Partition Act (VIII B. C. of 1876), s. 119—Partition between proprietors—Proprietor holding tenure, whether affected by partition.

Where in the course of a partition proceeding under the Estates Partition Act any question arises as to the extent or otherwise of a tenure, the tenure-holder is not in any way affected by the decision which may be arrived at by the Revenue Authorities for the purposes of the partition between the proprietors, and it is immaterial that the tenure-holder happens to be one of the proprietors and is a party to the proceedings in that character. [p. 818, col. 2.]

A partition under the Estates Partition Act deals with the rights of the proprietors and so far as *raiya*ti lands are concerned they are only entitled to a distribution of the rents. It is not the intention of the Act that the rights of tenants should be conclusively determined by the Record of Rights prepared for the purposes of the partition. [p. 819, col. 1.]

Ross, J.—The plaintiffs brought this suit on the allegation that 25 bighas of land was their ancestral guzashta kasht from before the time when in 1909 their ancestor acquired a half-anna share in the proprietary interest in the village. In certain partition proceedings the Deputy Collector recorded this land as the plaintiffs' kasht land; but on appeal the Collector ordered that the land should be recorded in the khasra as zerait and the partition was made accordingly. The plaintiffs claimed a declaration that the land was their kasht land and possession and mesne profits. The defence was that the land was zerait and that the suit was barred by the provisions of the Estates Partition Act.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove their title; and, further, that s. 119 of the Estates Partition Act barred the suit. The learned District Judge reversed both these findings. He held that the plaintiffs had proved that they had possessed this land as *raiya*ts at least since 1899 and that they had acquired the status of occupancy *raiya*ts in the land. With regard to s. 119 he was of opinion that as the order in the partition case which was contested in this suit was made under Ch. VI of the Act, s. 119 had no application, and that there was nothing in the Act that barred the suit which was instituted by the plaintiffs in their capacity of *raiya*ts. The defendants have appealed.

With regard to the first finding it was contended by the learned Counsel for the appellants that inasmuch as the land was under water up to 1908, it was impossible that the plaintiffs could have acquired occupancy rights in the same. Now there is only one piece of evidence which refers to the land being under water, as appears from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, viz., Ex. A, a written statement by the mortgagee in a suit for redemption. The learned District Judge has dealt with this evidence and has held that a recital of this kind is of no value as evidence of fact. He was entitled to hold that opinion and on that view no objection can be taken to his finding of fact as to the status of the plaintiffs.

The substantial question in the appeal is as to the effect of s. 119 of the Estates Partition Act. Two cases were referred to by the learned Counsel for the appellants [Kesari Sahai Singh v. Hitnarayan Singh (1) and Anil Kumar Biswas v. Rash Mohan Saha (2).] Neither of these cases deals with an order under Ch. VI. They were both cases between proprietors and the substance of the partition was directly in issue in both. Section 119 clearly barred the plaintiffs' suit in both cases and these authorities throw no light on the present case where the plaintiffs are not asserting any right as proprietors but are claiming a *raiya*ti right acquired long before they became proprietors. On the other hand in Janaki Nath Chowdhry v. Kali Narain Roy Chowdhry (3), the question was as to a miras right held by one who was also a proprietor in the village. In that case also it was argued that there had been a decision of the Revenue Authorities against the plaintiff as to the reality and extent of his tenure and that it was not open to him to have the matter re-agitated in the Civil Court. On this argument their Lordships observed as follows: "No authority has been shown in support of this proposition. On the other hand, there are obvious and weighty reasons upon which such a contention ought to be overruled. It is manifest that if, in the course of a partition proceeding under Act VIII of 1876, any question arises as to the extent or otherwise of the tenure, as the tenureholder is not a party to the proceedings, he is not affected in any manner by the decision which may be arrived at by the Revenue Authorities for the purposes of partition between the proprietors. It is merely an accident that, in the case before us, the tenure is set up by a person who is also a proprietor and is a party to the proceedings in that character. It would, in our opinion, be unreasonable to hold that a party who had appeared before the Revenue Authorities in his character as a proprietor, should be finally concluded by a decision upon a question of title, which would not have been binding upon him if he had been a stranger to the proceedings." This language applies precisely to the present case. Similarly in Lakhi Chowdhuri v. Akloo Jha (4), the question was discussed with regard to an order passed under Ch. VI and their Lordships said: "In the second place s. 119 of the Estates Partition Act specifies the orders of the Revenue Authorities which cannot be questioned by a suit in any Civil Court. An order under s. 45 or s. 46 is not one of the orders mentioned in s. 119. The reason for the exclusion is obvious. The determination by the Revenue Authorities is of a summary character and it cannot be taken to conclude finally a question of title between one of the proprietors and a stranger to the proceeding." The same view has been taken in this Court in Baldeo Sahai v. Brajnandan Sahay (5). A partition deals with the rights of proprietors and so far as raiya lands are concerned they are only entitled to a distribution of the rents. It could not have been the intention of the Act that the rights of tenants should be conclusively determined by the Record of Rights prepared for the purpose of partition, and that this is so is clear from the fact that Ch. VI and s. 111 are not covered by s. 119. There is, in my opinion, nothing in that section to bar the present suit. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that s. 119 must bar the suit because the effect of decreeing the plaintiffs' suit would be to upset the whole partition. In my opinion that is not so. Section 89 provides for the case of dispossession of the proprietor of a separate estate by a decree of a Court of competent jurisdiction and enacts that in such case the partition shall not be disturbed, but such proprietor shall be entitled to recover from the proprietors of the other separate estates formed by the partition such compensation as may be fair and equitable. That section does not apply in terms to the present case; and there is no reason why the principle should not be applicable. If the value of the defendants' estate is reduced by the declaration of the plaintiffs' raiya right in this land, their remedy, in my opinion, would be to seek compensation from the other proprietors, but there is no ground in justice why the fact that a partition has been made on the basis that this land is proprietor's land should debar the raiya from asserting his raiya right.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs. As it appears that during the pendency of the suit possession was delivered and the plaintiffs were dispossessed, the decree will entitle them to recover possession with mesne profits.
